THE MILITIA BALLOT IN BRITISH ARMY

Its Revival Would Mean Much To the Army Of The Great Empire

GREAT SOCIAL RESULTS WOULD FOLLOW

Better Soldiers and Better Officers Would Result from the Adoption of Lord Robert's Plan

London, Jan. 16.—The official spokesmen of the British Government have drawn attention to the militia ballot of a century ago as a system that will probably have to be developed again in the near future. To an eye-witness of many of the South African engagements and of the process of disillusionment that developed there the canvassing of such expedients comes like something expected.

Discontent with the standard of fitness which voluntary enlistment and a low rate of pay have furnished is the source of the militia ballot suggestion. Fears of an invasion of England by Napoleon I. in the beginning of the last century, when most of the British regiments of regular troops were on the Continent of Europe engaged with one or other of the great Revolutionary's marshals, led Parliament to pass an act by which the male population of serviceable age took the chance of the ballot to decide who were to be armed and enlisted for the defence of their country. These defenders were not needed, and the army was soon back on the sole basis of voluntary enlistment.

Fifty years later the scare of another possible invasion by the French brought forward the civilian volunteer movement which became popular and still endures. The men raised in this way were trained in their respective districts as volunteer battalions of the regular regiments whose depots are in their respective areas. All regiments of British infantry are named by territorial designation, but there has been absolutely no training together of volunteer and regular. Excepting only the adjutant, who is detached from his regular regiment to act as expert trainer, all volunteer officers are civilians. From these battalions isolated companies or details have been drafted out as volunteers to fill up spaces in the regular regiments, but they have gone out to strictly volunteer conditions and return to civilian life at the end of the war period for which they volunteered.

But this system, too, is condemned outright by Lord Roberts, Commander-in-Chief. After half a century's existence its mode of training is officially described as useless. The annual training time of the volunteers has been six weeks in the early summer—two drills of about two hours each twice a week and at the end of the period an inspection by the general officer commanding the military district.

If a volunteer battalion has organized a camp of a week's duration, with picket practice and practical field movements, it has again rested entirely with each man whether he would go or not.

Now Lord Roberts has stepped in and described the volunteer who has performed only the parades and drill ground evolutions as useless. His services are not to be accepted in future unless he can give much more time to camp training. The immediate effect he foresees will be the withdrawal of those who have regarded volunteering as merely a pastime.

This order, aiming at the sharpening up of the volunteer service, may be looked for to produce considerable social results. There has been very serious falling off in enlistment in the regular army; but along-side this the increase in the civilian volunteers has been very great in the past two years. Hitherto, practically every volunteer has qualified for the small grant made by the War Office for efficiency at the end of the period of training. With the much severer test now to be imposed it is inevitable that a considerable proportion of those who have hitherto passed muster will leave volunteering altogether, and Lord Roberts already contends that it would be better so, as he considers a certain number of fit men better as a fighting power than a great number who may know their drill and mechanical exercises but do not come up to his standard of fitness for the field.

It is nearly two years since the present writer saw a British Brigadier of Infantry free his mind on another branch of the British military system. It was in the first days of the fighting round Cronje's laager at Paardeberg. This General saw a scattered group lagging behind their advancing companies. He shouted at them, his features darkening with anger:

"You belong to my brigade! I know you! You are reservists! You know what I'd do to you!"

What were his objections to reservists? They had served short terms, mostly five years, in the army and were liable to be called back for active service, most of them, for the next seven years. They were classed according to the period between their leaving the colors and the date when they were entitled to their full discharge from military liability. As the pay of a reservist is only a few shillings a week he must have civilian employment.

The reservist had by his circumstances usually to drop into the ranks of unskilled labor; he had usually married, and by leaving the army at his first opportunity of discharge he had classed himself as one for whom the army had not much fascination. For these and other reasons this General was against reservists. He said they were a damper on the enthusiasm of the young men; that they were growlers, too fond of comfort and worse than useless.

Possibly he was over-severe, but other officers who were doing their best made the same complaint. Some of them argued that the country would get better men if it gave this, too. He said: "The army cannot enter into competition with the labor market." And thus he got back to his commendation of conscription. As he is one of the few British commanders who has enhanced any military reputation in the present war and won promotion and is still in the prime of life it may be that his advice will have weight yet at headquarters.

As England's political ambitions continue along lines that may conflict with those of European Powers whose armies are raised by conscription the compulsion according to many of the officers whose experience has been in South Africa, will press upon her that they can be met only by forces raised by similar means.

Then assuredly the question of the training of officers themselves becomes paramount. It is not conceivable that a military system would last a week in which the rank and file were drawn by compulsion from a vigorous and progressive industrial community and the officers had the same training, or lack of training, which has been systematic hitherto.

It has not been suggested that men selected by ballot should be sent on long service to India or the other great stations abroad which have up to now furnished the best trained officers. Thus, the leavening of critical intelligence pressed into the home service which would afterward return to the civil community, and become part of the electorate would come into contact with the home-trained officer.

SOLDIERS FIGHT THEIR COMRADES

Force of Government Troops Have Encounter with Another Body

KILLED 18, AND WOUNDED 63

One Contingent of Troops Heard Firing and Concluded that They were Opposed by Rebels

New York, Jan. 16.—News of a serious mistake in which a force of Government troops fought another body of Government soldiers, thinking it was composed of Colombian revolutionists, has been brought to Colon, Colombia, by the Colombian warship General Pinson, cables the correspondent of The Herald at that place.

The mistake happened in the vicinity of Dibulla, near Rio Hacha, and it resulted in 18 men being killed and 63 wounded.

Captain Merritt, of the General Pinson, says that that vessel landed 400 men in Dibulla to drive back the insurgents. The revolutionists retreated toward Rio Hacha, when the Government troops advanced. It was decided to divide the Government force into two bodies in order to capture the rebels. One of these met the rebels and after a sharp engagement the insurgents retreated. The other body of Government troops then came up, having heard the firing, and the mistake followed. Thinking that it was opposed by rebels, each force started firing. The fight was kept up for four hours, when General Palisco discovered the mistake, and stopped the battle, which had been evenly contested.

SMALLPOX PEST ALARMS LONDON

The Epidemic Spreading in Almost Every Direction

MAY SWEEP THE WHOLE WORLD

Merchants Fear Coronation Visitors Will be Few—Smallpox Breaks Out in Widely Separated Districts

London, Jan. 16.—Great Britain, and especially London, is in the throes of a serious smallpox epidemic. What alarms the authorities most is that the scourge is not confined to any districts, but appears in virulent form in the most widely separated places.

On all sides in the United Kingdom extensive and alarming precautions are on foot to deal with the unprecedented outbreak. The total number of smallpox cases in London now only amounts to about 900, but the cases are so scattered that they create the greatest anxiety. Merchants in the capital fear that it will greatly diminish the number of visitors at the coming coronation of King Edward.

The manager of one of the largest trans-Atlantic lines was asked to-day if he expected an unusual number of Americans to be present in London at the time of the coronation of King Edward. He said: "No. By May, I fear, we shall have such a smallpox scare and epidemic that London will be in quarantine when King Edward is crowned."

ORDERED VACCINATED.

That this is by no means a pessimistic forecast is evidenced by the fact that the line referred to began this week to have the crews of its ships vaccinated prior to leaving London for New York. Other lines are following its example, fearing that any day the American authorities may place London ships under an embargo on account of smallpox.

Medical men point out that the danger lies not so much in the proportion to the population as in the proportion to the usual smallpox figures of the metropolis, which generally scarcely amount to a score per annum.

London's laboratories are all phenomenally busy in turning out lymph, thousands of tubes of which are daily supplied, but even so the demand cannot be met. Almost all of the large firms are ordering their employees to be vaccinated. Corporations are appropriating sums for the erection of smallpox additions to the hospitals, while several steamers have been purchased in London for the accommodation of the present and expected patients. Expert opinion prophesies that the epidemic will not reach its height until May. The effect of such a condition of things on the coronation, international business and English trade is almost incalculable.

SCOURGE IN HISTORIC HOUSE.

One of the most serious phases of the epidemic in London is the appearance of the plague in the vast stately pile which stretches from the Strand to the Thames and is called Somerset house after Protector Somerset, who started to build a palace on the site in 1649 and had his head cut off before he could finish the work. Kings and queens lived there afterward.

The present building, which is about 150 years old, now shelters nearly 2,000 government clerks and is visited daily by a great stream of all sorts and conditions of people who want to deal with the audit office, the registrar general of births, marriages and deaths, inland revenue office and the probate registry.

It was in the last mentioned department that the trouble began and the authorities believe the germ of the disease was introduced in a will that had been drawn up by a smallpox victim. The fact calls attention to the danger probate clerks run continually from sickroom documents.

The disease has spread to the internal revenue department, and owing to the great number of people with whom the stricken clerks were thrown into contact before they became sufficiently ill to cause suspicion gives rise to alarm. It seems impossible to keep smallpox from spreading in London.

ANNUAL MEETING

The Peterboro Horticultural Society Meet on Wednesday Evening

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, who have charge of the Victoria and Central parks held their annual meeting in the Council Chamber on Wednesday evening. A large number of those interested were present and received the report of the society for the year 1901, which was in every way a success. The horticultural exhibition which was held in September was not as great a success as it should have been. The entries were few in number but were of a better quality than previous years.

Referring to the parks the committee have had a very busy year, having taken charge of the Central park in addition to Victoria park, and have expended a large amount of money in making improvements. The Central park has been levelled and seeded and is now a credit to the society and the town. In Victoria park many improvements and repairs had been made making the park the more beautiful.

The financial statement was presented and showed a balance of $46.00 to the credit of the society.

After receiving the reports of the directors an the financial statement the following officers were elected:

President—Mr. Adam Hall, (re-elected.)

First Vice-President—Mr. Jas. Stevenson.

Second Vice-President—Mr. D. W. Dumble.

Directors—Hon. J. R. Stratton, Col. H. C. Rogers, Dr. Geo. Burnham and Messrs Jas. English, H. Nesbitt, F. Adams, T. B. Bradburn, W. H. Hill, T. A. S. Hay, A. L. Davis, Percy Hamilton and E. A. Peck.

Secretary-Treasurer—Mr. H. L. Beal.

Auditors—Messrs. T. A. S. Hay and A. Stevenson.

Mr. Beal was strongly commended for the very efficient way he had done his work last year, and he was re-elected with $10 added to his salary, making it $90.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

Messrs. W. H. Hill, Percy Hamilton, Jas. Stevenson, and H. Nesbitt were appointed as a park committee.

The prize list committee was appointed as follows:

Messrs. D. W. Dumble, (chairman), Percy Hamilton, T. A. S. Hay, and Alfred Saunders.

The President, Mr. Hill, and Dr. Burnham were appointed a committee to wait on the town council to ask for the annual grant.

Some suggestions were offered regarding the society's exhibition, at which it was thought that a good exhibit of ladies work would be a great inducement, also to have school children exhibit a plant which they had cared for themselves. The matter was left for the decision of the directors.

It was decided to ask the town council to appoint park commissioners, so that the society would have the protection of the law in case any person did wilful damage to any of their flower beds, shrubs, etc.

Mr. Hill spoke in the very highest terms of Mr. Cooney, who was caretaker of the parks for the past year. These sentiments were endorsed by those present.

INDIA TO CELEBRATE

King Edward's Coronation will be Observed There on Jan. 1, 1903.

London, Jan. 16.—An Allahabad despatch says that a gorgeous pageant is being prepared to be held on Jan. 1, 1903 at Delhi to celebrate King Edward's coronation. Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, is arranging for the attendance of all the feudatory chiefs. There will be present a vast army of European and native troops, for whom a vast camp, covering miles, will be prepared.

It is expected that the Prince of Wales will represent the King. The function is destined to eclipse Viceroy Lytton's durbar when Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India, and to outrival in splendor anything recorded. The Ameer of Afghanistan will be specially invited.

Greatest Fleet of Warships Ever Assembled at the Coronation

BIG NAVAL REVIEW TO BE HELD

Prince of Wales will Take Supreme Command of the Great Fleet of Warships on June 26th

London, Jan. 15.—The last vestige of the 966-ton four-masted Norwegian iron sailing ship Mersey, with her cargo of 1,400 tons of South American dyewood for the Yorkshire factories, sank beneath the Goodwin quicksands. She struck the sands, as already reported, early on Saturday morning nearly opposite Deal.

The crew were saved by the life boats but nothing could be done for the ship. A few hours' rolling on these shifting sands broke her back, then the sand began to swallow her piecemeal; hull and cargo sank foot by foot, until nothing but her masts stood up from the water. She had disappeared in three days, and left no trace.

Many a score of vessels had gone before her into these depths, but not often so rapidly. Sometimes a mast will stand for a long time, like the finger-post pointing the way to destruction. Thus the large sailing ship Hawkbank, wrecked in the same way and on the same spot, kept a mast standing until the recent gales washed it away.

Old tradition says that what is now the Goodwin Sands was once the fertile island called Lomea, in the possession of Earl Godwine. From him it passed to the abbey of St. Augustine at Canterbury. The sea always wanted it, and when the abbot, in the extremity of his piety, used the stones intended for the sea wall to build the steeple of Tenderden church, the sea got its chance and utilized it by swallowing the fair isle of Lomea. The final destruction was in 1099 the year before the death of William Rufus. But the sea had been gnawing at Lomea all through the century.

Now the sands are ten miles long, stretching north-east and south-west and one and a half to three miles broad. They lie opposite Sandwich and Deal, and the average distance from the mainland is five and a half miles. They form a natural breakwater to the Downs. At low tide in the summer time the sand is firm enough for cricket.

The deadliest day's work of the Goodwin Sands was on November 26, 1703, when thirteen men-of-war and 1,200 officers and men perished there.

The sands will hold neither lighthouse nor beacon, but there are four fine lightships and many buoys.

LIQUID FUEL IN THE NAVY.

London, Jan. 15.—Experiments to discover a means of making the consumption of oil possible in our warships are being vigorously pushed forward. During the past year various systems of burning liquid fuel have been tried on the torpedo-boat destroyer Surly at Portsmouth, but the experimental work is shortly to be moved to a wider stage and the battleships Mars and Hannibal and the cruiser Arrogant are to see what they can do to make the use of oil fuel practicable.

NO BED FOR SEVEN YEARS.

London, Jan. 15.—An old man named Charles Cheverton was charged at Chelmsford with sleeping in the stokehole of Ingatestone Church and being without visible means of subsistence. He appeared in the dock wearing a ragged overcoat fastened around the chest by a leather strap. The sum of 4s. 1d. was found on him, and it was stated that he lived by exciting public sympathy in his wretched appearance. The man admitted that he had not slept in a bed for 6 or 7 years, and was sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment.

London, Jan. 16.—Provisional arrangements are being made for the great naval review at Portsmouth, which promises to be one of the most notable spectacles of the Coronation.

The combined fleet (the greatest ever assembled) will anchor in four lines stretching from Horse Sand Fort, at the lower end of Spithead, to Cowes Roads, or beyond. The British portion of the fleet will comprise the Channel, Reserve and Cruiser Squadrons, together with a number of specially commissioned ships. It is proposed that the splendid cruiser Good Hope, the Cape Colony's gift to the Navy, should be given a place of honor in the lines.

At the head of the principal line of ships is to be moored H.M.S. London, which is now being completed for sea at Portsmouth. On this fine battleship the Prince of Wales on the day of the review will hoist his flag as Admiral of the United Kingdom, and take supreme command of the huge gathering of warships. His immediate subordinates will be Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, Vice-Admiral of the United Kingdom, and Admiral Sir E. R. Fremantle, Rear-Admiral of the United Kingdom.

June 26 is the day proposed for the review, and the Prince of Wales is expected to fly his flag during that day only.

It is expected that every foreign naval power will be represented. If anchorage room can be found for the ships, the principal foreign powers may send squadrons.

The task of making arrangements for this naval pageant has been entrusted to Admiral Sir C. F. Hotham, the naval commander-in-chief at Portsmouth. In service circles it is stated that a military review, presumably at Aldershot, will also be included in the Coronation ceremonials.

ANCIENT IRISH RELICS.

London, Jan. 16.—An ancient Irish corrack, or canoe boat, has been discovered by workmen employed at turf cutting in a bog near Tuam, and the interesting object is to be despatched to-day to the Royal Museum at Dublin.

The corrack, which is in a good state of preservation, was found several feet below the surface. It measures 52 feet long, and the Great Southern and Western Railway Company provided a special double compartment for its conveyance to Dublin, where it will be placed among the other Celtic relics in the museum.

FRIVOLOUS CHURCH MUSIC.

Paris, Jan. 16.—The Bishop of Langres has published an energetic protest against the tendency of modern French religious music to become noisy and sensational. After invading the opera, this false art, as the bishop terms it, has forced its way into the sanctuary, and much of the music heard in the churches to-day is far from being church music. Even in the most serious solemnities it is not always serious airs that predominate, and more than once members of the laity have come away from funeral services profoundly scandalized by the unbecoming vaudeville-like airs.

DUTCH MONUMENT OVERTHROWN

Capetown, Jan. 16.—The Dutch Taal monument at Burghersdorp, erected some years ago to signalise the triumph of the Dutch language in Cape Colony, has been wrecked, and the headless body lies in the dust. The perpetrators of the act are unknown.

WARSHIPS KEPT IN READINESS

No Additional News Regarding the Critical Situation in Venezuela.

Washington, Jan. 16.—No additional advices concerning the critical political situation in Venezuela has been received here. The battleship Indiana is still at Curacao, under order to proceed to La Guayra, Venezuela, if requested to do so by Herbert W. Bowen, the United States Minister at Caracas. The Navy Department announced to-day that the stay of the North Atlantic squadron at Culebra Island, near Porto Rico, had been extended to Feb. 2. Should conditions in Venezuela change for the better by that time the squadron will then proceed to Guantanamo, Cuba, where, according to the changed itinerary of the squadron, it will arrive on Feb. 6.

DELAYS CESSION OF INDIES

Agitation of Danish Subjects Checks Sale of West Indies.

Washington, Jan. 16.—The agitation reported to have sprung up in Denmark in opposition to the transfer of the Danish West Indian islands to the United States has administered, in the opinion of the officials here, a check to the proposition which will operate indefinitely. Unfortunately for the project, it came at a time when the session practically had been arranged for; the treaty had been drawn and the Danish government had approved it informally when it was obliged to withhold action in the final stage by force of public sentiment. It is believed, however, that the work already done will not be a total loss. The subject will be allowed to rest undisturbed for a while to be reopened at an opportune moment.

Unnecessary to Suffer from Asthma

This distressing complaint can be perfectly cured by inhaling Catarrhozone a vegetable antiseptic that destroys the germs which cause the disease. Catarrhozone is inhaled at the mouth from a convenient pocket inhaler, and after permeating the minutest air cells, is exhaled slowly through the nostrils. It stops the cough, makes breathing regular, and erradicates the Asthma so thoroughly from the system that it never returns, it will speedily cure you. Large outfit, $1.00. Small size, 25cents. Druggist or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

FRANCE FACES THE FIRE-EATER

Takes a High Hand With Troublesome Venezuela

FRENCH SUBJECT WRONGED

Deprived of Estates Which He Had Legally Obtained and Which France Will Restore

Paris, Jan. 16.—The European Governments are learning how to handle Venezuela and the puny but saucy South American States. The Federal Government has taken a high hand with Venezuela, and will make the troublesome Republic relax a little in its tyranny. A French subject has been wronged and France has sent a stern order to Venezuela to back down. It is expected that Venezuela will follow its usual custom and obey. All the South American fire-eating States need is firmness, and France is dealing with them after the most approved fashion.

This morning the Government cabled to Caracas, instructing the French Consul there to insist that M. Secrestat, who recently arrived at La Guayra on the French line steamer St. Laurent, from Bordeaux, be allowed to land. M. Secrestat, when he reached La Guayra, was on his way to Caracas, in order to protest there against the seizure of the estates of General Matos, the revolutionary leader, which had been legally leased to his father, a merchant of Bordeaux. He was prevented from landing by the Venezuelan authorities.

THE OTONABEE POWER CO.

The Wire for This Company Has Been Purchased

Mr. W. H. Meldrum, on behalf of the Otonabee Power Co., has placed an order through the Kingan Hardware Co., agents for the Dominion Wire Co., for forty tons of copper wire to be used in transmitting electric power from the power house at No. 5 dam to their various customers in town. About a month ago copper wire was selling at from 18 1-2 to 22c per pound, and the careful foresight and business ability of the management of the company, which was exercised in delaying the purchase until there was a drop in the price to 13 1-2c a pound, has resulted in the saving to the company of a large sum of money. Another large saving was made by the purchase of the plant from the Can. Gen. Electric Co., which was purchased at a lower price by $6,000 than any other similar plant in the country.

The work of stringing the wires will be commenced early in March, although three wires will be run from the Auburn Power Co. to No. 5 dam on Monday to supply power to the large pumps which are to be used in pumping water out of the wheel pits.

The wire purchased will be drawn by the Dominion Wire Company, and will be covered by the Canadian General Electric Co. of town.

WATER WORKS BY-LAW PASSED LAST NIGHT

Commissioners to be Elected by People to Take Charge of the Water Works System

MR. E. H. D. HALL APPOINTED TOWN SOLICITOR

For the Present Year at the Usual Salary of Five Hundred Dollars—Duties to Commence at Once

The Town Council held a short session in the Town Council Chamber last night for the purpose of dealing with the Waterworks Bylaw.

Those present were: Mayor Dane, Aldermen Batten, Clinkscale, Best, Rush, Turner, Morrison, Edgecumbe, Shortly, McGregor.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

ACCOUNTS.

The following account was received: J. E. A. Fitzgerald...... ....$7 00 —Referred to Finance Committee.

COMMUNICATIONS

From E. B. Edwards enclosing bylaw to fix the salary of the Waterworks Commissioners.—Received.

From Dan McCabe asking for the renewal of his bowling alley license at the same figure as last year.—Referred to License Committee.

From the Superintendent of the Ontario Institution for Deaf and Dumb, Belleville, acknowledging receipt of application for Norman Kirk for admission to that institution and stating the terms on which he would be accepted.—Received.

Ald. Batten moved, seconded by Ald. Clinkscale, that the Mayor be authorized to issue certificate and the Town Treasurer be authorized to issue a cheque covering the expenses of transportation, etc., for Norman Kirk.—Carried.

From Wm. Taylor stating that he had paid the sum of thirty dollars for a pedlars' license, and asking the usual rebate of twenty dollars to a resident of the town.—Referred to License Committee.

Ald. Best moved, seconded by Ald. Batten that the bylaw relating to the purchase of the Peterborough Waterworks receive its final reading.—Carried.

The bylaw received its third reading and was passed and signed.

Ald. Rush moved, seconded by Ald. Shortly that the Finance Committee be authorized to issue debentures for the purchase of the waterworks at the sum of $2[illegible],000, and that the Committee be authorized to borrow that amount temporarily.—Carried.

Ald. McGregor moved, seconded by Ald. Turner, that the services of Mr. E. B. Edwards, as Town Solicitor be dispensed with from this date.—Carried.

Ald. McGregor moved, seconded by Ald. Best, that Mr. E. H. D. Hall be appointed Town Solicitor, for the present year at the usual salary of $500.—Carried.

Alderman Morrison drew the attention of the Council to the fact that a number of pedlars from outside places were canvassing the town to the detriment of the merchants.

Ald. Morrison moved, seconded by Ald. Clinkscale, that the pedlars from outside places be referred to the License Committee with power to act.—Carried.

An Alderman drew the attention of the Council to the fact that some hackmen in town had conveyed diphtheria patients to the hospital in their hacks and had used them for the purpose of driving people about town without any disinfectant being used. He said diphtheria was increasing in town and some steps should be taken to check it.—Referred to the Board of Health.

The Council adjourned.

WORTHLESS BONDS.

Warning Note by Provincial Auditor Respecting Municipal Servants' Securities

According to the report of Provincial Secretary Stratton just issued, the province has been blessed during the year with honest officials for in the opening paragraph he announces that there were no absconding municipal treasurers and no losses of importance in the form of deficits. From the statement of the auditor sufficient importance is not attached by the local auditors to the securities given for the responsibilities of county, township and other municipal treasurers. "There is reason to believe," he says, "that these securities are in many cases worthless, being improperly drawn out, cleaned or expired by effluxion of time." The auditor strongly urges schools, separate and public, as well as high school boards to use the cash books recommended by the government.

240 FILIPINOS SURRENDER

Col. Marisigan's Men Lay Down Their Arms—Sickness Among Employees

Manila, Jan. 16.—The rebel Colonel Marisigan, who yielded to Gen. Bell in Batangas province and received five days in which to collect his men and arms, has surrendered unconditionally, with 240 men armed with 219 rifles, in addition to numerous secret tax collectors.

The renegade priest who was with Col. Marisigan and who stole an image of the Virgin, which he used in extorting money and valuables from the superstitious, also came in and restored the image, an act which caused great rejoicing among the religious natives.

Gen. Bell has released all the prisoners except those who are accused of crimes.

Armed stragglers continue to surrender daily, and the western part of Batangas is completely cleared of insurgents. Col. Marisigan, whose force was the principal support of Gen. Malvar, considers that the latter has been so weakened by these surrenders that he is now incapable of causing any serious disturbance.

The rapid increase of sickness among civil employees led to a meeting to-day between the department chiefs and the Philippine Commission to discuss the matter. It was practically decided that hereafter all these employees are to have a half holiday on Saturdays.

DENMARK 'BACK DOWN.

All Negotiations for the Sale of Her West India Islands Have Come to an End

Washington, Jan. 16.—All negotiations for the sale of the Danish West Indians to the United States have come to an end, the Danish Government having declined to proceed further.

Much indignation is felt in official circles over this outcome, as the Ministry at Copenhagen had agreed to all the terms of a convention for the transfer of the islands, which lacked only the signatures to make it complete.

The failure of the negotiations is attributed to the timidity of the new Liberal Ministry of Denmark, which, after having determined to dispose of Denmark's American possessions, became frightened over the agitation against the transfer.

WEATHER NOTES

Probs: Fair and decidedly cold at first, then moderating.

WEATHER NOTES.

A decidedly cold wave has moved into the Lake Superior Region from northward and much colder weather is indicated for Ontario and Quebec to-day, with zero temperatures in Northern localities. If, however, the prevailing temperature continues in the West the cold in Ontario is not likely to be lasting.

ANNUAL MEETING

West Peterborough Agricultural Society Met on Wednesday

The annual meeting of the West Peterborough Agricultural Society was held in the Town Council Chamber on Wednesday. A large number attended the meeting and took part in the discussion of different business matters. For some years past there has been considerable discussion as to the advisability of holding the exhibition for two days instead of three as has been customary. This subject was again brought up on Wednesday, but no definite action has been taken. After discussing general business the election of officers was held and resulted as follows:

President—F. H. Dobbin.

First Vice-President—G. W. Bennett.

Second Vice-President—Dawson Kennedy.

Directors—Messrs. T. M. Hunter, J. J. Turner, sr.; Thos. Hooper, sr.; R. J. Mackay, T. E. Bradburn, Robt. Vance, H. C. Garbutt, John Stothart, R. M. Leary.

Auditors—Messrs. Wm. Collins and J. R. Bell.

The Agricultural Society have joined the Poultry Association, and purchased 25 coops from the Petrolia Association.

It was decided to send two delegates to attend the meeting of the Fairs and Live Stock Association in Toronto on February 19 and 20. The delegates will be appointed at the first meeting of the exhibition board.

Sore Throat and Hoarseness with their attendant dangers may be speedily averted and remedied by the use of Polson's Nerviline. Excellent to gargle with—ten times better than a mustard plaster, and more convenient for the outside. Nerviline penetrates the tissues instantly, soothes the pain allays inflammation, and cures sore throat and hoarseness simply because that's what it is made for. The large 25 cent bottle of Nerviline is unexcelled as a household liniment. It cures everything.

WEDDING BELLS

A quiet wedding took place Wednesday morning, when Miss Florence May, daughter of Mrs. R. L. Chapman, Johnston street, Kingston, was married to Capt. Thomas Donnelly, chief inspector of Lloyds. Rev. Prof. McComb D.D., Queen's University, officiated, assisted by Rev. John Mackie, M.A. of St. Andrew's Church. Mr. Edwin Moore assisted the bridegroom, and the Misses Pearl Clogg and Ruby Donnelly were the bridesmaids. The bride's wedding dress was of white brocaded silk, trimmed with chiffon and Duchesse lace; ornaments, pearls. Miss Clogg was dressed in pink organdie over pink silk, and Miss Donnelly was costumed in blue grenadine over white silk. The groom's present to the bride was a ring of diamonds and sapphires, and his presents to the bridesmaids were sunbursts of pearls. The traveling dress of the bride was brown broadcloth, with hat to match. After the wedding breakfast the newly married couple left for Detroit and Chicago.

The many friends of Captain Donnelly in Peterborough will join in hearty congratulations.

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 17, 1902

A MUNICIPAL TELEPHONE.

The city of Glasgow seems determined to keep the lead in the municipal control of public franchises, and also in the general excellence of the services furnished. The telephone system installed and operated by the municipality is said to be the best and most efficient in operation at the present time. Full advantage has been taken of every invention and improvement available, and not only the central exchange and the house and office equipment, but the outside plant and all appurtenances are thoroughly modern. The central exchange, although capable of accommodating 12,000 subscribers, was laid out originally for only 10,000, and a multiple board of that capacity was designed and installed. The connections are so designed that the operators have no means of listening to conversation, and the privacy desired by subscribers is an accomplished fact. The system is so composed that there is no overhearing between line and line, and, as the operators cannot tap the line, the subscribers are assured against eavesdropping of every kind. Subscribers ring each other's bells, thus distributing over the whole city work which, if concentrated in the switchroom, would sensibly interfere with the rapidity of making connections.

In the central districts of the city the entire outside work is underground, the cable wires being taken through conduits, and the wires to offices and houses being carried under the pavements. The conduits are of three-inch cast-iron pipe. There are sufficient spacious manholes with ventilating covers and trapped drains connecting with the sewerage system. In the outlying parts of the city, although the underground conduits and cables are employed on all main routes, the wires to the houses of subscribers are strung on poles. These are all constructed with due regard for taste, safety and convenience. It is only a few months since the formal opening of the system, and the installation is not yet complete. But the work is going ahead rapidly, and the people are not obliged to sleep on their arms for fear some right will be encroached upon or some advantage will be secured in the interest of an enfranchised corporation. The object of every move is to give the public the best available service, and it will no doubt be fully accomplished. The perpetual bickering of corporate management is fortunately absent.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HOME BEAUTIFYING

The popular home art of mat and rug making is developing wonderfully in Canada since the introduction of the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns. Some of these home productions are veritable gems of feminine skill; they are as handsome as imported rugs and wear much longer. Any lady with a stock of rags, pieces of cloth, flannel or yarns, dyed proper colors with Diamond Dyes, can, with one of the new designs in mats or rugs make up a floor ornament at small cost. The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P.Q. will mail free to any address a full range of patterns to select from.

A summary method of reducing funeral expenses has been found in Hull, an enterprising British town. A municipal crematorium has been established where the cost of cremation including an urn to hold the ashes, is only a little more than $5. It would be still lower were not the price of coal and coke exceptionally high now. An epidemic of smallpox has been the direct influence in bringing about this reform, whose benefits, however, are likely to endure in a simplification of mortuary outlay.

Naked Greeks and Romans.

A TRAVELING correspondent of the "Argonaut" writes that one rainy day lately he met "Mr. Middle West" in the Louvre. He was seated, looking across the room at that beautiful picture, "La Gioconda."

"Sit down, I've got something to say," said he. I sat next to him. "I've had a relapse; I'm not feeling well today. I've just come up from the museum downstairs and I've seen the same nakedness there that I saw in Italy. I don't know whether it is on account of my nervous prostration that I cannot see straight, or have not mental veracity, as you say a great Englishman named Carlyle called the great quality of seeing things correctly; but, however that may be, I am sick and tired and utterly disgusted with the exposure of the naked human figure in Italy and France. In Italy you see these naked old Greeks and Romans everywhere—in the shops, museums, picture galleries. They are unfit for anything but the bathtub. Do you suppose that I will let my two young daughters see these things? Not for all the riches of the great State of Ohio would I do it. I gave a groan whenever I saw young American girls going through these museums and galleries. I never saw Italian, French, German or English girls—only American girls—looking at Jupiter as the swan and Leda, for instance.

"Now I am sitting here looking at that lovely Joconda, dressed nearly up to the neck, with her charming smile and interesting face. That's all I want to see of a woman, or a man—the face. Ralf Stanzio painted one picture of a woman, not a Madonna, dressed up to the neck; La Fornarina, she was a bakeresse the guide told me. He loved her; think of loving a woman who stood all day in front of a roaring furnace, baking bread, in hot summery Italy. He painted another one of her showing her—well, not dressed up to the neck. But my wife says I must not talk of such things. I have seen five thousand such naked ladies in Italy—of course I mean in pictures and statues—and I'm tired of them. I prefer looking at cow or horse pictures. It rests me.

"But isn't that Joconde picture a beauty! That's the way to paint men and women, dressed up to the neck. When I see naked pictures in a man's house, I think there's a coarse streak running through him. When I see them in a woman's house—it disgusts me. When I get back to Chicago I am going to send five thousand nightshirts to the Italian Government as a present, to cover the naked statues, and I am going to give them my pyjamas, too—that new-fangled scheme my wife makes me wear. She says they are fashionable. What's the use of being fashionable when you are in bed?—nobody sees you. My father slept in his jeans, and he lived till he was eighty, too. That's a copy of a German joke."

Anxious Father (from top of stairs)—Say, Mary Jane! Mary Jane—Yes, papa. "Is it eleven o'clock yet?" "Yes, papa." "Well, give the young man my compliments, and ask him to kindly close the front door from the outside."—Chicago "Daily News."

A clergyman observed his little son attentively studying a map of the world. "What place are you looking for, Willie?" he enquired. The small boy knit his brows and traveled a circuitous route with his forefinger before he answered earnestly, "Trying to find Christendom."

The Woman Who Works and Does Not Feel Well

Paine's Celery Compound

IS HER BEST HELPER.

It Gives Her Energy, Vigor and Strength When Brain and Nerves are Tired and When She Feels Exhausted.

From the great cities and towns of Canada come thousands of thankful letters from women and girls testifying to the marvellous effects of Paine's Celery Compound.

Women in their homes, in stores, offices and workshops, suffering from insomnia, headache, backache, languidness, nervous debility, neuralgia, liver complaint and kidney disease have been made strong, vigorous and happy through the use of Dr. Phelps' wonderful prescription, Paine's Celery Compound. This heaven-sent blessing to women is the only guaranteed medicine in the world for the ills of females. Mrs. A. H. Walsh, Creemore, Ont., says:

"For many years I was sorely troubled with violent headaches, so that at times I was completely prostrated and unable to attend to household duties. I started to use Paine's Celery Compound, and experienced immediate relief; and since using it I have not had a recurrence of the trouble. I consider Paine's Celery Compound an invaluable remedy, and will always be pleased to say a word for it."

LONDON'S ANNUAL BUDGET

It Costs Over $50,000,000 Every Year to Run the Big City.

London, Jan. 16.—Statistics taken from the new edition of the London Manual show that the total annual cost of London government is £10,082,873, which is about 72 shillings per head of the population. The borough councils spend £3,884,300. The Boards of Guardians spend £2,513,714 and the School Board spends £2,462,951. The expenditure of the London County Council is £2,247,948.

Street improvements carried out by the County Council and not included in the above figures have cost £5,625,[illegible] in the twelve years ending March, 1901, which is the period that the County Council has been in existence. The Metropolitan Board of Works in the thirty-three years of its existence spent £11,525,971 on the streets of London, including the construction of the Thames Embankment.

Man and Wife in Distress.—Rev. Dr. Bochror, of Buffalo, says: "My wife and I were both troubled with distressing Catarrh, but we have enjoyed freedom from this aggravating malady since the day we first used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. On Her Feet

All day long and racking with pain from her head to her heels. That is what many a self-supporting girl must experience. On those days each month, when in other circumstances she would go to bed, she must still be at the desk or counter and struggle through the day as best she may.

Backache, headache, and other pains caused by womanly diseases are perfectly cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures the cause of those pains. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

PAIN ALL GONE.

"I have taken your medicine with the greatest satisfaction," writes Mrs. George Biehl, of Lockport Station, Westmoreland Co., Penna. "Your 'Favorite Prescription' has cured me of uterine trouble that I suffered from for fifteen years, and painful monthly troubles. I can honestly say I can work a whole day and not get tired, and before taking Dr. Pierce's medicines I always felt tired. My pain is all gone and I feel like a new person. I suffered with headache all the time, but have no headache now since taking your medicine. I have been cured of troubles that I suffered from for fifteen years, and the best doctor in the state could not cure me."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in All Cases.

Sent ABSOLUTELY FREE on receipt of postal. Write your name and address plainly.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

A NOVEL

"So that is the way the wind sets, is it?" the young officer thought to himself as he quickened his steps, and left Lord Otway alone with Katharine. "By Jove! I don't wonder. I never saw such a face before. It's poor chance Mistress Barbara has of being Lady Thanecourt in the future, I'm thinking!"

Barbara turned at this moment and saw Ormande bending eagerly to Katharine, and speaking in a low voice.

If the dart of two vicious eyes could have had power to slay, Katharine would there and then have fallen to the ground a dead woman, but fortunately she was ignorant and even unconscious of the fact that Barbara was looking at her, and she was roused from a moment of inexpressible happiness, happiness that would come as Ormande's voice murmured in her ear, by Barbara's clear, shrill tones:

"Now, Miss Brereton, please; we are quite ready!"

"You will let me turn over?" Ormande urged eagerly; "yes, Miss Brereton, please do, I read music very well, I assure you. I won't make any mistakes, and I am not going to dance, you know."

Katharine hesitated. She had a strong instinct that this should not be; but a sort of wild longing, a mad desire, came upon her to live in this happiness a few moments longer.

"For one moment," she whispered to herself, feverishly, as she lifted her deep, star-like orbs to those frank, tender, blue ones that lived in her memory day and night. "Only one moment. To-night I will let myself dream he is mine; to-morrow I will wake out of the dream and know he is hers. It will be no wrong to her. It is my secret, mine alone! One moment out of the long, long life that will be hers. Only one moment! It is nothing to her; she will never miss it, while —while to me it is sunshine, it is happiness, it is life!"

Alas! Poor Katharine!

CHAPTER XV.

The waltz Katharine chose was one of Strauss', soft, dreamy, delicious—she played without her music, hardly conscious indeed that she played. Ormande stood leaning on the piano —he utterly forgot the excuse which he had urged so eagerly as a means to procure him that position. the music was on the stand, but it was unopened and unturned, for his eyes were fixed only on the girl's tremulous, lovely face, with such an intensity of tenderness and love that she was dazed by it into a dreamy, ecstatic state, which she had never experienced before, and had neither strength nor will to comprehend or question.

Captain Derwent, pulling his tawny mustache, watched the two at the piano with an amused though sympathetic smile.

"By Jove! it is a case with Otway wonder where he met her, and who she is. How the deuce does she come under the same roof as Barbara Mostyn! — it's a rum thing they should be together." He happened at this moment to glance in the direction of Miss Mostyn, and his brow contracted suddenly. "She means mischief, too," he thought quickly "By Jove! I pity that girl; if ever there was a good savage cat, it is Barbara Mostyn. This is going to be interesting. I never imagined I should get in for a comedy when I agreed to run down to Brexley. Comedy, deuced nearer like a tragedy, I fancy."

Barbara was dancing with one of her most distinguished guests, a man whom she had only known slightly, but whom she had anxiously entreated Lady Clara Lennox to get down to Brexley for her fete, and whose coming had filled her pretentious heart with delight.

For although Barbara was a rich woman, and of very good birth and descent, she was by nature an arrant snob, and her greatest ambition was to be classed with that portion of the world who has its every doing chronicled in the society journals, and which lives on notoriety.

Thus, though she had had the entree, as her father's daughter and Lady Drummond's niece, into the very best set, she had speedily left it to enter one more amusing, more rapid and less exclusive. This step taken, Barbara never ceased to regret it, for she found to her surprise and dismay that, although of enormous importance in her own eyes, she was a person of very secondary consideration with those ladies who controlled the higher social circle, and who refused to lend the light of their countenance to any one who had strayed from their ranks into any others.

And so it was that Barbara, to her intense vexation, found herself sometimes left out in the cold when some great entertainment was being given by one of these ladies. Her circle now was mainly composed of seedy, titled people, who all tolerated her for the sake of her money.

Lady Blanche Bellairs was one of the sole remaining great social leaders who admitted Miss Mostyn to her friendship, and, as we know, even she was not altogether disinterested in so doing.

The guests who now filled Brexley Hall were all in society, let that be clearly understood, but they all belonged to the racing, semi-Bohemian semi-frisky class which has been so popular of late years. Lady Clara Lennox was one of the most prominent of these, and Barbara clung to her with much outward show of affection, patronizing the faded woman, who was so very poor, and using her as a means to obtain such things as she desired.

This partner in her waltz, a celebrity in the political world, was the guest par excellence of the present house party, Lord Otway alone excepted, and Barbara's mortification can be imagined when, as the waltz came to an end, he immediately, and somewhat eagerly, too, requested an introduction to Miss Brereton.

"She is distinctly the most lovely creature I have ever seen in my life," he observed, with a want of tact that was only equalled by his candor, "Brereton— Brereton! Why, dear me, can she be Robert Brereton's daughter, I wonder? Upon my word, I do believe she is!"

And then Katharine's brief mad dream of happiness was broken; the spell that had chained her soul to Ormande's was snapped asunder; and she was standing up, hurriedly and nervously, having her hand nearly shaken off by Mr. Montrose.

Ormande felt a throb of jealousy seize him as he saw Mr. Montrose draw Katharine's little hand through his arm, and walk away with her to have a good, long chat; but his jealousy was as nothing to that which surged and stormed in Barbara's angry breast.

That she should stand by and see herself defeated at every turn! It was simply maddening! She put her hand on Lord Otway's arm as he stood gazing after Katharine.

"I have seen nothing of you," she said in what she tried to make very dulcet tones. "Shall we have a chat, too? We must do without our music, since Miss Brereton is so much engaged just now."

"Is there no one else who can play?" Ormande asked bluntly. He resented her words, though why, he scarcely knew. "Surely there is some one able to play a waltz; it can't be very difficult."

He spoke almost irritably.

Barbara shot an angry gleam at him.

"I am afraid I can't permit any of my guests to be so energetic," she said with a smile; "but I fancy I might manage to get through one myself. Will you come and turn over for me, too, Lord Otway?"

She drew off her long white gloves, and tripped over to the piano.

Katharine was trying to reply to the dozens of questions Mr. Montrose poured out about her father and herself, as Miss Mostyn seated herself at the piano. But at this she started up suddenly.

"I must go," she said, hurriedly; "Miss Mostyn wants me to play."

"Stuff and nonsense! She is playing herself; and you have certainly done your share. Sit down again; I want to hear all you can tell me of poor old Brereton. What a good old chap he was!"

Tears filled Katharine's eyes. It was like dew to the parched flowers, this praise and affectionate remembrance of her father.

"I think I will ask you to excuse me to-night, Mr. Montrose," she said rather nervously; "you see, I cannot allow Miss Mostyn to play while I am here."

"I don't see anything of the sort," Mr. Montrose replied, good-humoredly, "but I will not keep you my dear, if you want to go, only you must promise to have a good long chat with me after."

Katharine gave him a grateful glance, and hurried across the floor to Miss Mostyn's side.

The rest were not dancing, for truth to tell, Barbara was a very indifferent musician, and she was only striking a few bars while she talked to Lord Otway.

Katharine's heart turned cold as ice as she saw the young man leaning in the same position on the piano, smiling down at Barbara with the old tender look in his eyes that she knew so well.

"My one moment is dead and buried —he belongs to her now," she thought, bitterly and sadly.

How was she to know that Ormande was only wound into standing there and smiling, because Miss Mostyn was speaking of Katharine— speaking in a soft, gentle, affectionate way, that made its path straight into Ormande's love-laden heart. No, Katharine did not know that, she could not penetrate beneath the surface, and the surface was conclusive enough for her.

Barbara saw the girl coming, but she pretended not to do so. As Katharine came up to her chair she gave a little jump of surprise.

"Oh, my dear, how you startled me; do you want anything?"

"Only to relieve you and do my duty," Katharine answered, bravely forcing a smile to her pale lips.

"I am very happy as I am. Go and talk to Mr. Montrose. I am sure you must have heaps to say to one another, since you are such old friends."

Katharine hesitated; there was no mistaking the hint conveyed in these words to leave Miss Mostyn and Lord Otway undisturbed, and yet somehow the girl was uncomfortable.

"She is vexed with me," she thought to herself, and she waited a moment undecidedly.

"Please tell me more about your cousin, Lord Otway," Barbara said, totally ignoring Katharine; "I am so interested. I feel as much relieved to find he is alive as though he were my cousin, too," and Barbara gave a shy little laugh.

Katharine's face was turned from her. The girl was standing at the farther end of the piano. She could hear every word, and try though she might, she could not move a limb to get away. Ormande was gazing at her eagerly, all ignorant of the ugly expression that came on Barbara's face, and Captain Derwent had sauntered up to the piano also.

"Yes, tell us more, old fellow," he said languidly, as he caught Barbara's words. He wondered whether Katharine would permit him to address her without the ceremony of an introduction, which latter formality Captain Derwent despaired of obtaining from anybody present.

"I think I have told you all," Ormande replied. "Craven has gone off to Australia or Kamschatka, or some such outlandish place; he is a foolish boy. After all, he is not the first, nor the last, who will get into difficulties, and if he had only come to me with his trouble I might have been able to pull him through."

Barbara murmured some soft words, conveying her belief in this theory, and Ormande went on, his eyes still glued to that slender, black-robed figure, to the soft, delicate, cream-white throat that bore the small head so proudly.

"He would have spared us much anxiety and suffering. His disappearance nearly killed his little sister, poor child; but I expect he rushed away on the spur of the moment to escape from his difficulties, and—"

"They were money, weren't they?" Captain Derwent observed. "Ah! lots of us would like to be in Kamschatka, too, sometimes. Let me see, you said something about Adair losing everything in that Japanese swindle, didn't you? I was deuced near putting the small spare cash I possess into it, too! Glad I am I was warned in time! Another fellow I know who is exactly the same position. I can tell you we shook hands with each other the other day when we found out what an escape we had had. You know the man I mean, Miss Mostyn, a dark, handsome, clever fellow, Gordon Smythe? You remem——"

But Captain Derwent got no further in his reminiscence just then, for Katharine, who was trembling in every limb, gave an inarticulate cry, and half staggered against the piano.

Both men turned toward her quickly, and Barbara rose from her chair suddenly. Was the girl going to faint?

Her cold, curt, "Are you ill, Miss Brereton?" was the most efficacious remedy for Katharine at this moment.

"It is so warm. May I— will you allow me to retire?"

And as Barbara assented with a curt nod, Katharine turned and moved away from the piano.

"Thank you, I do not need help, I am better alone," she murmured to both Lord Otway and Captain Derwent, and bending her head, she went away slowly, walking like a woman in a dream. That horrible, indefinable sensation that had come to her earlier in the day came to her now, a sensation that a net was closing slowly but surely round her, and she was being drawn, despite all her efforts, gradually into the cruel hands of the man who weaved this mesh about her —this man, who was at once her husband and foe!

CHAPTER XVI.

All through the next day Ormande watched in vain for a glimpse of Katharine. She was invisible, and Barbara was always at his elbow wishing to take him here, show him this, explain that, and have his advice on her various institutions and charities.

"Ah! if I only had you for my vicar!" she sighed, trying to bring a soft, tender, religious look into her most worldly face.

Lord Otway was very unsettled and miserable all through this long summer day; he had come down here on purpose to speak to Katharine, to declare his love and learn his fate. It hurt him beyond description to remember that she —his proud, dainty, delicate, beautiful love — she was living here, dependent on Barbara's will and subservient to her word. It was chiefly this thought that had brought him down so soon.

"It is early days, I know it," he had murmured to himself as he resolved to fling aside all doubt and speak openly of his love; "she does not know me yet —she does not even think of me; while I, I cannot let one moment of the day go without her sweet image rising to haunt and tempt me. And she has gone out into the world alone to brave its storms! She! —my queen, my lovely queen! How proud and beautiful she will look in the old rooms at Thanet! Even my father will bow down and do her homage. Aunt Blanche, too" —for one instant a shade fell on Ormande's face, but only for an instant —"Aunt Blanche will fall a desperate victim to her; she adores pretty girls, and Katharine is more than pretty —she is absolutely the loveliest girl in all the wide, wide world! Who could resist her?"

That Katharine was not happy, Lord Otway had discovered from the very first. He could never recall her exquisite face without that sad expression round the mouth, that hungry, longing look in the wonderful gray eyes; but the charm she had woven upon him had taken such swift and potent hold on him that, lost in its sweetness, Ormande had not, strange as it may seem, pondered much as to the cause of this unhappiness. He had even forgotten the episode that had occurred at the railway station that bygone day, just before he was able to offer her his friendship and assistance, and not until now did he recall with a start the fact that the Mr. Gordon Smythe whom he had met casually in London during his close inquiries for Craven Adair was one and the same with that dark, evil-faced man whom he had watched crossing the line at Northminster Station, and whose pictured face had jarred on him so keenly in that quiet, peaceful cottage home in Ledstone.

It was that muffled cry, that Katharine had uttered last night at the mention of Gordon Smythe's name, that brought it all back so clearly to Ormande, and he felt disturbed, troubled, and thoroughly miserable during this bright August day that followed on a restless night, the day for which he had longed so eagerly. If Katharine would only come —if he could only have one moment with her alone, the young man said to himself restlessly. He felt that he could not restrain himself much longer, but must pour forth this secret love burden, must learn his fate and so ease his heart.

Barbara, too, on her side, was thinking deeply. She had purposely avoided going near Katharine, for she felt that if she did go she would not be able to refrain from saying such unpleasant things as would make the girl keep to her original plan and leave the Hall; and Barbara had not the remotest intention of permitting that. Katharine must remain in her grasp. She was to be punished —yes, punished and discredited before she quitted Barbara's home. As far as Ormande was concerned, to her intense chagrin, Miss Mostyn was obliged to confess there was no doubt as to the fact that he was madly, passionately in love with Katharine —that was evident to the meanest intelligence. Barbara had suffered a small torture as she observed the smiles and noticed the amused whispers the young man's dreamy, raptured condition had provoked; but as to Katharine, Barbara could arrive at no definite conclusion as yet. The girl was so cautious, so proud. There was only one point which Miss Mostyn grasped eagerly, Katharine's uneasiness and unhappiness.

"She no more felt the room hot last night than I feel a frost in the air now," she mused to herself as she walked beneath the trees, and talked eagerly and confidentially to the young man whom she had vowed she would make her husband. "She was all right until something was said. What was it?" Barbara wrinkled her brow. "Let us try and remember. What were we talking about just then? Captain Derwent was with us —what did he say? I must remember."

Barbara recalled the conversation as carefully as she could, going back step by step, and contracting her brow with vexation, as she could arrive at no satisfactory solution of the mystery.

Down on the Modern Theater.

EVERYONE is familiar with General Sherman's famous definition of war. The great Italian actress, Eleonora Duse, now applies the same harsh epithet to stage life. She says it is "hell—downright hell."

Duse has confessed to an interviewer that she is "tired of the theater, but not of art, tired of the theatrical part of stage life, tired of the necessary cooperation of artists, managers, sceneshifters and lamp-lighters."

"Yes," she continued, "I am tired of all and everything liable to obstruct my artistic endeavors and to interfere with my plans, executed or intended. I am dreaming of entering the lecture platform, but will do things in quite a different way from the ordinary.

"I mean to enliven the lecture platform and broaden its scope by retaining some of the stage's features. My American tour will be my swan's song as far as stageland is concerned.

"After that I will endeavor to realize this dream of making the world acquainted with the great masterpieces of literature without detracting their attention by undue scenic effects and the awkwardness or stupidity of actors playing incidental parts.

"One or two ladies or gentlemen will be engaged as my assistants, merely to look their parts and give me the cue. As for myself, I couldn't think of assuming several roles as some do at dramatic recitals.

"I needn't repeat," she continued, "that I leave the stage without regret, yet at the same time I am almost forced to do something of the kind. I can't be for ever playing Dumas and Sardou, Ibsen and Sudermann. No one of account is writing new plays for me, and those that are written might as well remain unacted.

"I tell you la Duse is threatened by literary famine. Shall I wait until the public tires of my repertoire? Besides, I must rid myself of the slavery of stage life. That's no life at all. I assure you it is hell, dowright hell."

Curious Whims.

Eccentricity is often nothing but the exaggeration of individuality, as with a scholar of some distinction who died towards the end of the last century. His peculiarity expressed itself in the way in which he tried to carry his scholarship, or the symbols of it, into the grave. By the terms of his will he left six thousand guineas to his sister on condition that his funeral was carried out on curiously-prescribed lines. His coffin was painted green, and was followed by only six gentlemen—all relatives being invited—who were to receive ten guineas each provided they did not dress in black. The body was fully dressed. Under the head was placed a copy of Horace, and at the feet Bentley's Milton. In one hand was a pocket edition of Horace, and in the other a small Greek Testament; and another copy of Horace was laid underneath. The hired mourners sang over the closed grave the last stanza of the twentieth ode of the second book of Horace; and subsequently, after a generous supper, another ode was sung. "Which done," ran the final injunction of the will, "I would have them take a cheerful glass, and think no more of me." A French historian had a whimsical fancy for reading and writing by candlelight. At full noonday, in the brightest summer weather, he would have his candle by his side, and he would carry it in his hand when showing his visitors to the door.

Appearances Deceived Him.

The Up-to-Date Undertaker.

A Yankee undertaker advertises: "Why live and be miserable, when you can be comfortably buried for twenty dollars?" We shall expect something of the kind over here soon. Don't be surprised when you take up your morning paper if you read this sort of thing: "Billy Morgan looked down the barrel of his daddy's gun to see where the bullet went to when it went off. The funeral was handsomely conducted by Smith & Co., who have always a large staff on hand, and are open to bury the whole neighborhood at twenty-four hours' notice. A pound of tea given away with every coffin. Order early and avoid disappointment."

Proof Adduced.

What Became of the Pompeiians?

MAX NORDAU raises an interesting question concerning Pompeii. He writes as follows to the "Neue Freie Presse" (Vienna):

"One thing has always been a puzzle to me. Here was a flourishing city of about 30,000 inhabitants, most of whom evidently were well-to-do. A few hundreds, at most, lost their lives in the destruction of the city; the rest escaped. The eruption of Vesuvius continued only a few days, after which the district returned to its usual placid condition. In many places the deposit of ashes and lava was only a yard thick, and it was not more than three yards thick at any point yet excavated.

"How did it happen that these 30,000 homeless persons showed no desire to return to their beautiful houses, so well built that they are standing to this day, and which could have been restored, at the time, with very little labor? Why did they not make the slightest attempt to regain their valuable property in land and buildings, furniture, bronze, gold, silver and jewels? Did the men of that time have so little love of home that they could leave it without a backward glance at the first unpleasantness? Were the Pompeiians so rich that the loss of their perfectly appointed homes appeared trivial to them, so that they preferred settling elsewhere to restoring their city? Or did superstition prevent the attempt?

"This indifferent renunciation of their patrimony by a whole cityful is to me an insoluble enigma which forces itself the more strongly upon my attention now as I walk along the finely paved streets between houses which need only new roofs to make them again habitable."

For Sale—An Island Kingdom.

The chance is now open to any millionaire to own an island kingdom or to become a Highland lord and live in an historic castle. The advertisement offering these estates appeared in some United States newspapers, and was signed by the business agent of the Duke of Argyll.

"The Island Kingdom of Tiree," as the advertisement calls it, is one of the Inner Hebrides, an island about thirteen miles long and nowhere more than six miles wide. It is only twenty feet above the level of the sea, and there are hardly any trees on it; but the land is mostly fertile, and the tenants, who live by farming, cattle-raising and fishing, pay the duke rentals aggregating more than fifteen thousand dollars a year.

"Excellent winter bathing, good golf links, splendid beaches, safe bathing and good sea-fishing" are some of the island's attractions that might be expected to appeal to a purchaser.

Inveraray Castle, Argyllshire, the ancestral abode of the Dukes of Argyll, is also advertised; but it is not an ancient building. The oldest part of it dates back to a period not earlier than 1750, and much of the castle has been rebuilt since 1877.

The scenes pictured by Scott in the "Legend of Montrose" were supposed to have taken place in what is known as the "old" castle, which stood near the sea and has been quite swept away. No such romantic interest attaches to the present castle.

But the man who buys the island kingdom of Tiree—or Tyree, as some of the books call it—will probably find in modern fiction a good many allusions to it. From the novels of William Black alone might be compiled a pretty good guide-book to the Hebrides, islands that, as another admirer has said, are "beautiful in calm, wonderful in storm."

President Loubet's Wardrobe.

A correspondent of the "Cri de Paris" has ascertained certain facts in regard to President Loubet's wardrobe which are being copied with extraordinary avidity by the Parisian and provincial press. It seems that M. Loubet has five Prince Albert coats—two for summer, two for winter, and one extra for grand occasions. This last one has been worn only three times—at the opening of the exposition of 1900, at the reception of the King of Sweden, and at the garden party in honor of the Shah of Persia. This "gala" coat differs from the others in that it has heavy silk lining and lapels. M. Loubet invariably wears a plain, black satin tie—not tied by hand, but sewn together and attached with a clasp. M. Loubet used formerly to wear false cuffs, but one day, while making a sudden gesture, the right-hand cuff slipped off and rolled on the floor. This happened at the Luxembourg Palace, when M. Loubet was president of the Senate. Since then, M. Loubet's shirts have been made with permanently attached wristbands. M. Loubet's trousers are very peculiar. They are black or gray in color, but their cut is of the old-fashioned pattern, with the top of the trousers coming up as high as the armpits. M. Loubet has always worn trousers of this quaint type, and is so accustomed to them that he has an inveterate dislike for evening clothes, which, with low-cut, open waistcoat, render the armpit trousers impossible. The president's wardrobe is, however, provided with several pairs of evening trousers suitable for low-cut, open waistcoats.

Australia's Governor-General.

It is feared in some quarters that the Earl of Hopetoun will not be able to complete his term as Governor-General of Australia. His Lordship has never entirely shaken off the effects of the illness which prostrated him in India on his way out to Australia, and though he was really prominent as the host of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall, he has since, owing to his unsatisfactory health, been unable to fulfil many of his public engagements.

Those of the public who may imagine that there is no room for initiative and ingenuity in the cats' meat trade, says the London "Chronicle," are vastly mistaken. In Kensington an enterprising young fellow is said to be making a fortune through the happy idea of supplying, on request, fish instead of meat for the cats on his round. The pets of the prosperous can obtain meat at almost any time, and they will not look, for the most part, at the wares of the cats' meat man. But no cat can resist a tasty bit of fish, be it offered when it may, and a huge success is the result of the innovation. Again, there are certain purveyors who take trouble to obtain a close knowledge of every single animal on their rounds and its little peculiarities. This knowledge once gained, the cats' meat man buys and cuts his portions accordingly, taking care that each cat gets its favorite bit. All chance of rivalry is removed at once by this means, for a cat will not for weeks, unless driven by desperate hunger, touch the [illegible] of a rival purveyor.

DIPTHERIA PREVALENT

Not of a Mild Type—Great Care Should be Taken to Keep It from Spreading

At the present time there are a large number of cases of diphtheria in town. At the hospitals many are being cared for and even then a good many are sick at their homes. The diphtheria this winter is of a very mild type, but nevertheless great care should be taken to prevent its spreading. Parents, especially, should be very careful and not send children from a home where diphtheria exists, to any of the schools, or to allow them to come in contact with neighbor's children or the children on the streets.

Parents and others cannot be too careful at this particular season and guard against their children getting their clothes and feet wet. We hope in a few days that this disease will have received a very strong check and that in a short time the town will be rid of the trouble.

—There is to be another supply boat on Stony Lake next season. The boat will be driven by steam, and will be owned by Messrs. Trude & Choate, our enterprising butchers. They will supply fresh meat, vegetables, &c. to the cottages.

—The Strickland Canoe Factory are still in a big rush, orders coming in every day for their celebrated boats. On Wednesday three cases of canoes were shipped to England.

—The Congregational meeting of the Presbyterian Church was held on Wednesday evening, and was largely attended. The reports, &c., submitted, showed that the church was doing excellent work.

—The inaugural meeting of the School Board took place on Wednesday evening.

—The Cement Company are now busily engaged in the manufacture of Portland Cement. The product is said to be of a very superior class, on account of the purity of the marl at Buckley's Lake. Mr. Kilbourn and those associated with him in the enterprise deserve the greatest possible credit for the way they have done their work, which has been accomplished under unprecedented difficulties. The works, although only partly in operation, are turning out 180 barrels of cement per day.

—Mrs. H. Strickland, and two children, of Toronto, are guests at the Craig House.

—Mr. J. B. Hilliard was in Peterborough on Thursday.

—On account of the resignation of Messrs. [illegible] and [illegible] from the council, a new election has been ordered.

WALTER J. ENGLISH ARRESTED FOR FRAUD

Gave Worthless Cheques in Payment of Bills.

(Special to The Times.)

Toronto, Jan. 16.—During the progress of the hockey match between the Wellingtons and Stouffville at the Caledonian rink to-night Detective Alfred Cuddy appeared. He found Mr. Walter J. English, of Peterborough, and placed him under arrest. The arrest was made at the instance of A. Clubb & Sons, tobacconists. They charge that English purchased goods in their store, and that he paid for them by giving a cheque which the firm declare is worthless. Young Mr. English has been engaged as referee by the Ontario Hockey Association, and in that capacity has been in and out of Toronto. About ten days ago he stopped at the Walker House. When leaving he paid his bill by giving two cheques, one for $10 and the other for $15.00. Both cheques were drawn on the bank in Peterborough, and were forwarded there for collection by the bank in which they were deposited by the Walker House. A few days later they were returned from Peterborough with the answer, "Not sufficient funds." The Walker House manager has not laid any charge in the matter as yet.

Still another hotel is anxious to have a settlement with the Peterborough young gentleman. About two weeks ago he stopped at the Grand Union Hotel for a day or two. He left without paying his bill. The Grand Union people will not lay information against English.

SENSATION IN COBOCONK

Mrs. Story and Dr. Fitzgerald of That Place Have Eloped

Coboconk, Jan. 16.—Early this morning this place was very much excited by the rumor of an elopement last night. Dr. Fitzgerald and Mrs. John Story, both of this place, are the principal figures in the case. For some time past the couple have been on most intimate terms, and they decided to depart for parts unknown on their own responsibility. The police in the surrounding country have been notified of the occurrence and are on the look out for the couple, who are reported to have driven into Peterborough to-day and taken train for parts unknown. Mrs. Story had with her her three children.

PUBLICITY IN REGARD TO MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.

"It is my desire," said Mayor Low, of New York, in assuming his office, "that the newspapers be afforded every opportunity to inform the public of the acts of my administration. I believe in publicity in regard to municipal affairs, and I wish the representatives of the press to feel that they are at liberty at all times to ask about any matters in which the people of the city may be interested." An honest municipal administration has no occasion for secrecy; it is only fraud and trickery that need a dim light. Compulsory publicity and the resulting open criticism of corporate management have been suggested as a cure for the worst evils of trusts, pools and similar combinations. They certainly would be a sovereign remedy for mismanagement of and hugger-mugger in the business affairs of municipal corporations.

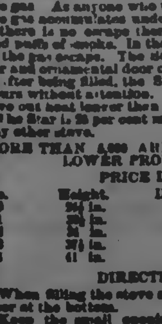
THE

Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion. Why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No.	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11 [illegible]
1	[illegible] in.	9 in.	12.00
2	31 in.	10½ in.	14.00
3	37½ in.	13 in.	[illegible]
4	41 in.	16 in.	[illegible]

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 30 feet, with 15 feet ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

The Ferreira Paid a Dividend of 450 Per Cent in 1898 and a 150 Per Cent on Account of 1899 (June) Before War was Declared.

Gold output of Transvaal mines for 1898, 4,555,000 ozs. $76,500,000.

Gold output for Transvaal mines for 1899, (9 months) 4,101,441 ozs., $70,000,000.

A very attractive method which enables the small investor to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust". It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in any five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time. Prices mentioned subject to change:

COMBINATION No. 1.

20 Klerksdorp at £14 9s, $71 90 per cent.	$14 38
20 Witkopje at £15, $73 12, 20 per cent.	14 63
20 Heidelburgs at £19 $92 62, 20 per cent	18 53
20 Salisbury at £1 7s 6d, $134 06, 20 per cent	26 81
20 Buluwayo Exp. at £2, 2s. 6d., $207.18	41 44
	$115.79

We shall be pleased to give particulars of other combinations. Write for booklet which will be ready about the end of January.

BOERS ARE CONVICTED OF BURNING FARMS

Lord Kitchener Accuses Them Out Of the Very Mouth of Botha

A BOER GENERAL REFUSED TO BE HUMANE

Kitchener Offered to Leave Boer Families in Their Homes on the Veldt, But Botha Said No

London, Jan. 17.—The frantic charges of cruelty which pro-Boer sympathisers both in England and on the continent have made against Lord Kitchener and the British troops in South Africa have been repeatedly denied and refuted. If the Germans and other Boer admirers were only open to the truth, they might have been brought to a less excited state of mind long ago. But to-day the English papers are ringing with an incrimination of the Boers from the lips of Botha, the Boer general, on the very charges on which the English soldiers have been so unsparingly denounced. A blue book issued by the War Office this morning ought to give the pro-Boers a remorseful time and send them to the penitent bench for all their disloyal and untruthful utterances. In this blue book further details are given on the subject of the concentration camps by Lord Milner and General Kitchener. The causes of the excessive death rate are explained and the charges of cruelty are effectually refuted. Some time ago Commandant Schalkburgher, a Boer officer, charged the British troops with forcibly removing and exposing pregnant women, and other accusations of rough and cruel treatment.

Lord Kitchener devotes special attention to these libels, and in his emphatic repudiation of the charges, says:—

"I offered Botha to leave the families and relatives of fighting burghers in undisturbed possession of their farms if Botha would agree to spare the farms of the families of the surrendered burghers. Botha emphatically refused, saying, 'I am entitled to force every man to join, and if they do not join to confiscate their property and leave their families on the veldt.'"

This is a damning statement against the humanity of the Boers. It proves out of the very mouths of the Boers misdeeds and cruelty for which they and their friends in Europe have so mercilessly blamed the British soldiers, and that they have actually prevented milder measures being accorded to their own wives and families.

The blue book gives statistics for the month of December last, when there were 117,017 inmates of the camps and 2,380 deaths, to which number 1,767 were children.

THE MURRAY STREET CHURCH

Reports Show a Successful Year—Election of Officers

The annual business meeting of the Murray street Baptist church was held in the Sunday school room on Thursday evening, when the reports of the several departments were received and adopted.

The pastor, Rev. Mr. Bastow, presided, and opened the meeting with devotional exercises. Mr. Albert Martin, the able clerk presented his report for the past year, which gave the number joining the church as 11, as against 37 the previous year. The number leaving the congregation was [illegible]. The total membership on January 1st 1901, was [illegible] and on December 31st, [illegible].

Following Mr. T. F. Matthews presented the Treasurer's report for the past year, which on motion, received and adopted.

The Finance Committee's report was read by Mr. W. Aldridge, Chairman of the Finance Committee, which was very satisfactory.

The several other reports including those of the Trustees, Music, Fellowship, Sabbath School and Young People's Societies were satisfactory.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The business of receiving the reports having been concluded, the election of officers was proceeded with, resulting with return of Dr. Scott and Mr. V. Eastwood as Deacons, by acclamation, and in fact most of the following officers and committees in the same manner.

Clerk—Mr. Albert Martin.

Assistant Clerk—Mrs. Bastow.

Treasurer—Mr. T. F. Matthews.

Finance Committee—Messrs. W. Aldridge, G. Cochrane, V. Eastwood, G. Matthews, C. B. Routley, and R. Harding.

Music Committee—Messrs. T. F. Matthews, Dr. Scott and Mrs. Hunter.

House Committee—Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Jas. Montgomery and Mrs. Geo. Cochrane.

Visiting Committee—Mrs. Bastow, Mrs. Donnelly, Mrs. (Dr.) Scott, Mrs. Martin, Miss M. Nicholls, Mrs. Thos. Ellies, Mrs. Jas. Montgomery, Mrs. Harding, Mrs. W. Montgomery, Mrs. Jas. Ellis.

Missionary Committee—Foreign—Mr. B. B. Edwards and Miss Roberts.

Home Mission—Mrs. (Dr.) Scott and Miss E. Aldridge.

Grande Ligne—Miss Nicholls and Mrs. G. Matthews.

Northwest—Mrs. Hunter and Mrs. W. Montgomery.

Ushers—Messrs. G. Cochrane, G. L. Rowsel, R. Harding and R. Merril, they also to have charge of the ventilation of the church.

Committee on Improvement Fund—Messrs. H. Webber, Geo. Lee, J. C. Grant and P. White.

Auditors—Messrs. Merrill and Redden.

Representative on Central Charity Board—Mr. W. Aldridge.

VOTE OF THANKS.

On motion of Messrs. R. Harding and and Dr. Scott, a vote of thanks was tendered the building committee and trustees for the excellent manner in which they had performed their duties in connection with the improvements to the church.

Mr. T. F. Matthews moved, and Dr. Scott seconded a vote of thanks to Mr. Geo. K. Martin for his earnest labor in connection with the choir. The motion was carried by an unanimous standing vote.

At the close, Rev. Mr. Bastow stated that he was most pleased to be in cordial sympathy with all that had been said, done, or suggested, and was delighted with results of the past year as shown in the report, and he hoped for a still better showing next year.

The very harmonious meeting, so indicative of a church's prosperity, came to a close by the singing of the hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," and prayer by Dr. Scott.

BOOTH SALVATIONISTS GOING TO DOWIE

General's Son-in-Law Declares the Zion Leader to Be Elijah Reincarnated

London, Jan 18. — The The Central News Agency announces that owing to grave doctrinal differences Gen. Booth's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, and Percy Clibborn have resigned from the Salvation Army and joined the church of John Alexander Dowie.

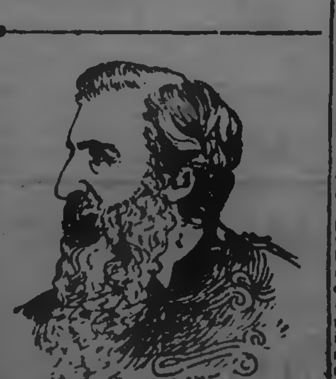
According to the Daily Mail Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn had many communications from John Alexander Dowie while the latter was in England. They demanded the right to preach the Dowie doctrine of faith healing while remaining in the Salvation Army. This demand was refused by Gen. Booth, who sent his most trusted lieutenant, Holland, to win them back, but in vain.

The formal resignations of Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn reached the London headquarters of the Salvation Army last Sunday.

DAUGHTER TO JOIN.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—Gen. Booth's son-in-law, Commissioner Booth-Clibborn, and brig.-Gen. Percy Clibborn, a brother of the Commissioner, both leaders of the Salvation Army in Continental Europe, have joined Dowie's Zion. To The World correspondent Dowie said to-night:

"It is true Commissioner A. S. Booth-Clibborn, husband of the Marechale Kate Booth-Clibborn, of the Salvation Army, has joined us. We had much delightful intercourse with these friends in London and Paris last year. Gen. Percy Clibborn, head of the Salvation Army in Italy, has also joined. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn is not yet of us, but we expect that she will be led of God."



GENERAL BOOTH.

Booth-Clibborn's letter asserts he believes Dowie to be Elijah reincarnated. In part he says.

"Thank God for Zion. Oh, the joy of knowing there is a people who dare to live and teach the whole World without compromise or discount and who fear no man or nation. I have always had such a horror of compromises. My life has been nine times attempted. I have been condemned to death by the Nihilists under the seal of their Paris head-centre, but never could I go out of my way to brave death or use carnal weapons. I have decided to offer myself to you, dear doctor, for Zion, and do so."

About Electricity.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—When and where was electricity first used as motive power for any purpose? AN OLD READER.

Ans.—The first electric motor was made by Barlow of Woolwich, England, in 1820; the first electric railroad was operated by Thomas Davenport at Springfield, Mass., in 1835.

Concerning Women.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Three brothers, being married, have one or more daughters each. Will you kindly inform my which daughter has the right to use "Miss," without the use of the Christian name, or whether more than one has a right to use it? E. H.R.

Ans.—The eldest daughter of the eldest brother is Miss So-and-so, even though she may be younger than her cousins.

Our Mid-winter Climate.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—There was a rumor in the streets about noon yesterday that a man from Calgary, N.W.T., where the cold waves come from, had been overcome by the heat and taken to Kennedy's meat market refrigerator for relief. This was somewhat exaggerated. Finding the heat becoming oppressive on the sunny side of the street the Calgary man asked a policeman to steer him against a beer tunnel, where he remained until sundown. Our mid-winter climate cannot be maligned with impunity. This is no joke. PAT.

Origin of "Uncle Sam."

Editor Morning Times.

—. What was the origin of the name "Uncle Sam" as applied to the United States Government? 2. What noted reformer married a nun? 3 How many people passed through the gates at the largest single day's attendance at the following Expositions: Pan-American, World's Columbian, Exposition Paris; 1889, Centennial?

Ans.—During the War of 1812 Elbert Anderson supplied provisions to the United States Government, large quantities of which he brought in Troy. One of the inspectors there was Samuel Wilson, generally known as "Uncle Sam." As the packages of provisions were approved they were branded "E. A—U. S." A stranger happening to ask what the letters meant, was told by a joker that they stood for. "Elbert Anderson—Uncle Sam." The joke became current in Troy and then passed out to the American world at large. 2. Luther; he married Catharine von Bora. 3. For the Pan-American no figures are at hand; Columbian, "Chicago day," Oct. 9. 716,881; Paris Exposition of 1889, largest attendance, 400,000; Centennial, "Pennsylvania day," Sept. 28, 1876, about 258,000.

Peterboro' Post Office.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—The writer, for past forty years has been a daily visitor of the Peterborough Post Office, and says unhesitatingly that the present conditions and arrangements therein are a disgrace to the Government and an outrage to the public.

To gain entrance to the office it is necessary to elbow ones way through the single entrance by pushing with the hand on a filthy door, thus running the risk of being inoculated with some outragious disease. On gaining admission we find a crowd at the General Delivery wicket elbowing one another in their haste to be served. This wicket is closed during the noon hour daily—the only time that people in employment have an opportunity of going to the office. It should never be closed.

Rather than put up with unsatisfactory delivery, one is forced to take a box at the exhorbitant charge of two dollars a year. I consider the box delivery as much for convenience of the Post Office authorities as those who rent them, and that $1.00 a year would be a reasonable rent. I have given up my box for the reason that I considered the present charge unreasonable.

There is ample room in the building by remodeling the office so as to properly meet the requirements of the public.

There should be two doors of entrance and two of exit, and a suitable arrangement made so that people would have to line up one behind another at the General Delivery wicket.

The Peterborough office is a large one, yielding a large revenue, and should have more consideration by the Government.

W. H. CLEXTON.

What Mr. Clexton says will meet with the hearty endorsement of the public. Mr. J. H. McClellan, we know, has vainly endeavored to get something done to the building. A new floor—which is bulged up in many places—is badly needed.

Peterborough contributes a large postal revenue—larger than many of the smaller cities of the Dominion—and it is a shame that things are as they are. The fact is, the building is not enough to accommodate the business to be done. On certain days it is almost impossible to get inside the building at all, so great is the crush. There should also be more space behind the staff, who are being worked half to death. As we said before Mr. McClellan has done all he can, but his efforts should be supported by decisive action by the Council of Peterborough and Ashburnham, and by the Board of Trade.—Ed Times.

Poor Girl, Pity Her.

Growing! Yes, into weakness, but not strength. Studies—plenty of them. Tired, of course she is, and weak too. Does not eat enough, and digests far less than enough. This condition is so frequent, but how seldom noticed even by fond parents. Give her Ferrozone, then watch her appetite improve, her cheeks and lips grow rubby, her step elastic, her spirits bouyant. All this simply the result of eating and digesting enough, making blood, and thereby strengthening the nerve and brain power. Ferrozone gives a woman's strength to weak girls. Your daughter [illegible] needs Ferrozone, get it to-day.

A SEVERE REBUKE

How the British Consul at New York gave a Snub

New York, Jan. 17.—With diplomatic politeness the British Consul-General at New York has administered a severe reproach to the busybodies who have been collecting "old clo'" for the Boer captives at Bermuda. The assumption that cast off clothing would be welcome by men whose maintenance has been undertaken by the British Government involves the other assumption that the men were being neglected, if not actually ill-treated; and that their simplest wants unless supplied from outside, would go unsupplied. No information warranting any such belief, or even any such suspicion, has ever come from Bermuda. His Excellency states that there is now in the colony a quantity of clothing sent to Bermuda for the prisoners of war, which, at the present time, is not required; that if, notwithstanding, any new and unused clothing is forwarded for the prisoners of war, they would not be precluded from receiving it, but that it has been found necessary to prohibit further distribution of worn clothing from the United States, as a matter of sanitary precaution, and in deference to the advice of the military authorities.

How One Million is Spent.

Not less than one million dollars is annually spent by people seeking an absolute cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption. Numerous are the remedies, but the one standing preeminently above all others is Catarrhozone. It cures these diseases because it is sure to reach them. Catarrhozone is inhaled into the lungs, throat and nasal passages, and bathes every part of the diseased membrane with its germ-killing, healing vapour. You simply breathe Catarrhozone and it cures. MOULDER'S BANQUET

Annual Banquet of the Iron Moulders' Union Last Night

The Iron Moulder's Union, No. 191, met in their hall last night in regular session to appoint the officers for the ensuing term. Following is a list of the officers elected.

President—Hugh Robertson.

Vice-President—Wm. Bardill.

Corresponding rep.—Wm. Green.

Fin. Secy.—Thos. Stenton.

Rec. Sec. and Treas—Sam Cottingham.

Door-keeper—Frank Turner.

Trustees—Messrs. J. Crowe, Wm. Green and R. Mulligan.

After the business had been concluded an adjournment was made to McCallum's restaurant where, a most sumptuous oyster supper was partaken of. The tables were most tastefully laid and reflected great credit on the decorative ideas of Mr. McCallum. Covers were laid for about 75 persons, the tables occupying a large amount of the available space. After enjoying the supper the members spent an hour or so in social intercourse interspersed with songs, recitations, etc. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. and Mrs. McCallum for the most enjoyable evening they had spent and hoped they would again assemble at a future time to enjoy a spread at Mac's

The world is challenged to equal Nerviline as a household liniment. Large bottle 25 cents.

Rumors of Peace in South Africa

London, Jan. 16.—The Globe's financial editor says a report from well informed quarters was current in the city to-day that the Boer chiefs had made overtures to the British Government to the effect that they were prepared to lay down their arms, provided that they were not exiled. Wednesday next is the Boer feast day, and the surrender of the Boers would probably occur then.

The War Office officials asserted that no proposals to surrender had been received from the Boers.

A despatch from Amsterdam says: The Boer delegates in Holland evidently anticipate that some kind of peace overtures will shortly be made, though they are reticent as to their reasons for this belief. They maintain, however, that the demand for an unconditional surrender must be abandoned.

It is privately admitted that the delegates will not reject what they call "any fair offer of terms." If the negotiations be started by a neutral Power the delegates will earnestly seek to obtain a modus vivendi, which will reconcile Mr. Kruger's desire for complete independence with the terms offered by Great Britain.

JOHN REDMOND'S TASTELESS JEER

Irish Member Says to Chamberlain "You Ought to be King."

ANOTHER FIGHTING SPEECH.

Colonial Secretary Again Defends the Conduct of the War and the Action of the Cape Government

London, Jan. 17.—While King Edward was reading the speech from the throne in the Imperial House yesterday His Majesty emphasized the portion referring to the humanity of British soldiers, amid murmurs of assent from the House.

After the speech had been formally read and the addresses in reply had been moved and seconded, the Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, spoke in general terms against the course of the Government in South Africa, urging conciliation in place of brute force. He said the same, to a large measure, was true in Ireland, where the Government at present was "floundering between concession and coercion," and urged the adoption of the most liberal programme toward Ireland.

Mr. MacNeill, Irish Nationalist member for South Donegal, created the earliest scene by deploring the fact that the Nationalist members "had been immured in dungeons at the behest of Mr. Wyndham," the Chief Secretary for Ireland. He moved the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter. When the speaker declined to accept the motion, Mr. MacNeill questioned his ruling and was called to order.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN.

Sir William Harcourt, by attacking the institution of martial law in Cape Colony and by accusing the Government of grossly unconstitutional conduct in advising the Ministers of the Cape Colony not to summon the Cape Parliament, brought up Mr. Chamberlain, who was in a most militant mood. Mr. Chamberlain declared that Sir Wm. Harcourt ought to have placed a question of such vast importance in the form of amendment and proceeded to justify absolutely the action of the Cape Government. Mr. Chamberlain said he did not care a scrap for legal opinions on one side or the other, that the Government had to deal with an emergency, and that it had followed the universal practice of all countries. He also said the Government of the Cape Colony would ask Parliament to indemnify their acts.

Mr. Chamberlain was protesting against the suggestion that he should overrule the Privy Council when Mr. Redmond interjected, "Hear, hear. You ought to be King." Amid laughter Mr. Chamberlain replied, "That is very good of the honorable gentleman, but that is not my ambition."

The House of Commons then adjourned.

BOERS MAY ASK FOR CONDITIONS

Result of a Conference of the European Delegates

THE PREMIER GIVES A REPLY

When the Enemy sues for Peace the Matter Will be Considered by the British—The Progress of the War.

IN THE UPPER HOUSE.

London, Jan. 17.—Replying to questions in the House of Lords yesterday, Lord Salisbury said, that no overtures had been made to the Boer Executive in Europe lately. Earl Spencer, the acting Liberal leader, said he recognized the impossibility of granting the Boer demands for independence. Yet he deprecated insisting upon unconditional surrender, and asked the Government to explain its intentions in the matter of ending the war. He urged that autonomy be granted as in Australia and Canada. Lord Salisbury, said he was glad to hear Earl Spencer vent an utterance for which he, the Premier, had been frequently and unsparingly condemned. It was quite true that there was no possibility of granting the Boers independence. "When the Boers sue for peace," he declared, "we will tell them, but until they do so the less we say about peace terms the better."

CANADIANS ILL.

Ottawa, Ont. Jan. 17.—The Militia Department was notified by cable that Kenneth Morrison, of the South African Constabulary, is dangerously ill from enteric fever at Heidelberg. His father is P. Morrison, of Yorktown, N. W. T. Another cable states that Beverley A. G. Scofield is dangerously ill from enteric fever at Heidelsberg. His next of kin is Mrs. Fenwick, of Fairville, N.B.

LYNCH WILL SPEAK.

London, Jan. 17.—Colonel Arthur Lynch, formerly of the Irish Transvaal brigade, who was elected member of Parliament for Galway, is said to be determined to speak in the House of Commons, and his chief desire is to avoid arrest before he reaches Westminster. He says he is prepared to prove that he was not a combatant, but merely a newspaper correspondent. It will be remembered that prior and subsequent to his election he was hailed with acclaim as a gallant soldier of fortune and used violent language toward England.

DENIED BY KUYPER.

London, Eng. Jan. 17.—A despatch to the Times from Brussels says that Dr. Kuyper, the Netherlands Prime Minister, authorises a contradiction of the report that he went on a mission to London in reference to securing peace in South Africa. He declared that his visit was purely private, and had no connection whatever with the [illegible]

KRUGER DECIDES TO SUE TO OBTAIN PEACE

The Executive of the South African Republic Approach Great Britain

SALISBURY QUESTIONED AS TO BOER DELEGATES

Lord Salisbury is Non-Committal —"When The Boers Sue for Peace. We'll Tell Them Our Terms."

Brussels, Jan. 16.—The Rotterdam correspondent of the Mail and Empire telegraphs that the Executive Committee of the South African Republics held a meeting at The Hague on Tuesday. He is informed on high authority that after hearing a report from one of the leading members of the committee, who had been in communication with Mr. Kruger the previous day, it was unanimously decided to approach England with a view to arranging terms of peace.

A member of the committee said that if the demand for unconditional surrender was withdrawn there would certainly be peace before the end of the month.

It was stated that Dr. De Kuyper, the Dutch Premier, had just returned from London, whither he had gone to sound the British authorities as to the probable results of a direct approach by the committee on lines that were indicated. He was assured on high authority that the most careful consideration would be given to any proposal that might be made.

IMPORTANT CAPTURE.

Ladybrand, Orange River Colony, Jan. 16.—The British captured a Boer laager at Poodekranz, near Ficksburg, with 10 wagons and 3,000 sheep. It was discovered that boots, candles, clothing and Martini bullets were being made at this laager.

Hermanus Steyn, a cousin of the former President of the Orange Free State, has been superseded by Van Niekerk, whose commando consists of 70 persons, 30 of whom are boys under 13 years of age.

Colonel Pilcher's column has been very active in the neighborhood lately, and small captures are daily reported. Large quantities of sheep and cattle have also been taken. It is reported that there is a greater tendency to surrender among the fighting burghers in the neighborhood than for a year past.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT

A Popular Local Conductor Tells a Travelling Story.

As usual it was in the Snowden House back parlor, and the genial proprietor had finished a yarn when Conductor Fred Haskell entered and took his seat. Fred is popular with the boys, and he had no sooner filled his pipe than he was requested to tell a story.

"Once upon a time, when I was on the main line—long before I took to the Lakefield Lightening Express— I was making my rounds through the car, when an incident occurred that I'll never forget.

A tired father sat with a 6 month-old babe in his arms, trying to soothe it to sleep.

In the double seat were two more little chaps under 5, and scarce a year apart in age, sleeping the sleep of the innocent.

On the father's face were signs of recent grief, and his anxious expression presaged unknown troubles in the future.

In vain he tried to quiet the crying babe, which evidently felt the need of a mother's tender care.

The passengers, who had settled themselves down in an uncomfortable attempt to beat the Pullman company, began to arouse and mutter their indignation at the "squalling brat," as one of them described it under his breath.

The poor, tired father brushed a tear from his care-furrowed cheek, and in a voice broken with deep feeling, he said:

"My friends, I am very sorry if this little chap disturbs you. I am doing the best I can. His mother"—here the voice almost broke down—"his mother, the devoted wife of the past few years, whose maiden home we passed just the other side of Port Hope, she is at rest—"

"In a box in the baggage car, I suppose," interrupted a sympathetic passenger, who recalled that old story of similar import, while the others began to feel they had been most uncharitable.

"Is at rest. I was about to say, back in the tourist sleeper. She told me when she started this was the first time in five years she had had a chance to get a good night's rest, and that if I didn't take care of the children in here and let her enjoy it she wouldn't go a step."

And every family man in the coach agreed that the poor fellow's excuse was perfectly valid.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

London, Jan. 17.—The great desert in the forbidden hinterland of Tripoli, Northern Africa, which has not been visited by Europeans for fifty years, has now been explored by Mr. Edward Dodson, a young Englishman, who went out last March.

The members of the expedition experienced much difficulty with the authorities; at one place they were placed under arrest, and on two occasions threatened by the Arabs, who prepared to ambush them.

One of the most notable things on their journey to Murzuk was the great petrified forest. For ten hours they travelled across an area of petrified trees varying in circumference from seven feet to a few inches. Every branch of this forest was, of course, lying prone, and this together with the presence of marine shells showed that this part of the Great Sahara had at one time been submerged.

One night they were surrounded by thunderstorms. No less than five distinct storms were in progress all round and the guns and spears of the party became surrounded by a halo of phosphorescent light, which greatly alarmed the superstitious attendants, who regarded this as a further judgment upon them for travelling with "unbelievers."

THE WOMAN HERMIT

London, Jan. 17.—Notwithstanding the unusual severity of the weather, the woman who has been living on the seashore close to Ardmaddy Castle, Argyllshire, for some time past, is still clinging to her chosen retreat without any shelter whatever. She seems impervious to cold and wet, and takes her morning dip in the open sea with as much spirit as she did in the height of summer. She declares her intention of remaining at Ardmaddy and braving the elements till the spring is over, and is quite [illegible] to her occupation.

[illegible]

[illegible] has just cost a young man named Emile Feret his life in peculiarly distressing circumstances.

The young man attempted to climb a garden wall with the intention of placing a bouquet on the window sill of the young lady to whom he was shortly to be married. But his fiance's father mistook him for a burglar and fired upon him and killed him on the spot.

Victoria B. C., Jan. 17.—Hope for the safety of the British warship Conder is all but abandoned. Naval men here are convinced that it went down to the bottom during the recent typhoon while on the way from here to Honolulu. The admiralty officials will dispatch the Phaeton Saturday in search of her.

The Conder was thirty-one days from here to Honolulu on Jan. 3, the date of the last mail, and left here Dec. 2, on the evening of the storm in which the collier Mattewan was lost. She may be sailing to the islands however, as warships often do, and with scant canvas and without her propeller working she would be delayed. The mail due at San Francisco on Saturday from the islands is anxiously awaited.

HAD CREW OF 130 MEN.

The Conder is described in the British admiralty list as a screw sloop. It was built at Sheerness and was launched in 1898. It was of steel and sheathed, with a tonnage of 980. It was 180 feet long, had 33 feet beam and drew 11 feet 6 inches. Six four-inch quick-fire guns and four three-pounders constituted her armament. Her speed was thirteen knots. Her full complement of men was 130 and the last admiralty navy list gave her the following officers: Commander, Clinton Sclater; lieutenants, James B. Mason, Hay Winthrop and Henry V. T. Prester; surgeon, Thomas S. Hartley; assistant paymaster, William H. Frankgin; gunner, Arthur D. A. Burns; engineer, George J. Ditton. She was commissioned at Chatham Nov. 1, 1900, and practically all of her present crew joined her at that time.

A MUSICAL ERROR.

London, Jan. 17.—An amusing mistake occurred during the Boxing Day Eisteddfod at Rhyl recently. While the duet competition for tenor and soprano voices was in progress the audience was much puzzled by some peculiarity in the singing. When the judge gave his award the mystery was cleared up. He said that he was obliged to disqualify the two competitors who would otherwise have won, because they had sung the wrong parts, the lady having taken the tenor and the gentleman the soprano. They, therefore lost the prize of two guineas.

Quarantine Removed

The quarantine, which has been placed on the Nicholls Hospital and a boarding house on Aylmer street for the past fourteen days, was removed yesterday by the health officers, no further cases of smallpox being reported.

The Frise house on McDonnell street is still quarantined, and will not be opened for another week.

The smallpox patient at Jackson park is progressing favorably. Dr. Bingham is anxious to get away from the hospital, and says that after Monday the attendant will be able to attend to the patient.

Mr. H. A. Pugh's Generosity

Ashburnham Public School is again to profit by Mr. H. A. Pugh's kindness. For the past two years he has given handsome prizes for spelling and arithmetic in various classes.

Next June he intends to repeat them, and will present a handsome volume to the pupil who comes highest in these two subjects combined, in each of the following classes: Junior Second, Senior Second, Junior Third, Senior Third, Junior Fourth and Senior Fourth.

The prizes will be awarded according to the showing made by the pupils in their monthly reports, and as these depend upon the results of the weekly examinations (and in spelling upon daily tests) it can be readily seen that the successful pupils must attend regularly and work faithfully throughout the whole term.

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 18, 1902

REV. MR. LANGFELT'S SERMON.

The sermon recently preached by the Rector of St. Luke's bids fair to become historic. That a clergyman should so far imperil his salary as to say what he thinks his heavenly Master requires him to say, is the theme of general comment. It does not seem often to occur to clergymen that to offend God is worse than to offend man. They do not believe it, and therefore how could they think it? In other respects also the general verdict is in Mr. Langfelt's favour: Pity long since gave way to disgust, and that to anger, anent the the same subject. General expressions of contempt for a certain class are rife, and they are touched up with ridicule and sarcasm to a degree that would head off any man not a slave and a fool. What—if we can have patience to discuss it—is the argument on the other side? Forsooth, the divine right of every man to drink as much whiskey as he can. The principle underlying the contention is a noble one, but what of the manifestation? Is there any man fool enough to believe that he has a right to become an eyesore to the public and an object of general disgust just because he chooses to think so? Once more we congratulate the reverend gentleman. So long as no names are mentioned let the good work go on. The castigation of types hits us all more or less—some less—but some more. In the old days public nuisances got a dose of the town-pump. If licence holders only knew it the reason why the public has become roused at last is on account of the drinker, not on account of the seller. "No Admission to Soaks" put over every bar would leave the freedom of the temperate, where it is, and satisfy the craving of public opinion for some mitigation of a nuisance.

Hotel-keepers get a blame which they in many instances do not justly incur, but it is their own look-out, and if they wish to allow others to outrage public opinion while they bear the consequences they won't know what struck them when voting time comes. The last plebiscite revealed a majority of the total vote upon the lists in favour of prohibition, and although one more chance is to be given its opponents to knock it out on preliminaries, we are afraid that the causes suggested have been too long at work. Is there no way of putting things in a healthy shape without destroying (or saving) the just with the unjust? If we were to take about one-one thousandth of the entire population of the town—say one hundred—and put them in a cage, the town would, presto! be a sober decent town. When necessary, repeat the measure. Imprison "drunks" and make them sober up. We are inclined to advocate a policy like this: When a case is ripe (that is rotten) have an information laid and a summons got out. Cite the wretched and trembling (verily) offender to appear. Let a jury decide that in the public interests, both as a preventive measure for the benefit of the young and as a protection to the fool himself, the offender shall be confined till such time as he "comes to." By degrees the swizzlers will disappear and we shall have a sober people—some through choice others through compulsion—not only sober but free—free, to exercise their common sense, and not tempted to break a law that will never be honestly administered. It must always be remembered by those who assert their right to do as they think please, that the other side has the same right, and the majority also. Few hotelkeepers encourage drunkenness. Old soakers as a rule drink twice as much as they pay for, filling up with whiskey that part of the glass intended for water. Who supposes that the vendor wishes to sell more whiskey than water? It is not so. The guzzler is also a nuisance in the bar. He is there in season and out of season, even at scrubbing time, and pleads at the door before it is time to open. Why blame the hotelkeeper? Whiskey is made to be sold. The remedy suggests itself: Public opinion and the common gaol will solve the difficulty. Let it be tried in earnest. We assume in court to judge of another man's conduct even towards himself, why omit it in the case of whiskey, and above all things, why make it an excuse for crime?

DIPTHERIA PREVALENT

But of a Mild Type—Great Care Should be Taken to Keep It from Spreading

At the present time there are a large number of cases of diphtheria in town. At the hospitals many are being cared for and even then a great many are sick at their homes. The diphtheria this winter is of a very mild type, but nevertheless great care should be taken to prevent its spreading. Parents, especially, should be very careful and not send children from a house where diphtheria exists, to any of the schools, or to allow them to come in contact with neighbor's children or the children on the streets. Parents and others cannot be to careful at this particular season and guard against their children getting their clothes and feet wet. We hope in a few days that this disease will have received a very strong check and that in a future time the town will be rid of the trouble.

NO MAN IS STRONGER THAN HIS STOMACH.

The stomach is the vital center of the body. It is the organ from which all other organs are fed. A weak stomach means a weak man. There never was a strong man with a weak stomach. What is called "weak stomach" is in general a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, which prevents the proper digestion of the food which is taken into the stomach, and so reduces the nutrition of the body. When all food is taken away the body starves. When the food eaten is only digested and assimilated in part it only nourishes the body in part, and so the body is partly starved. And this starvation is felt in every organ of the body dependent on the blood which is made from food.

The great variety of the cures performed by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is due to its remarkable power to heal diseases of the stomach and allied organs. It cures through the stomach diseases seemingly remote, but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and the other organs of digestion and nutrition. "Weak" heart, lungs, kidneys and weakness of other organs is cured with the cure of the weak stomach.

Mr. Thomas A. Swartz, Box 103, Sub-Station C., Columbus, Ohio, writes: "I was taken very sick with severe headache, then cramps in the stomach, and food would not digest, then kidney and liver trouble, and my back got weak so I could scarcely get around. The more I doctored the worse I got until six years passed. I had become so poorly I could only walk in the house by the aid of a chair, and I got so thin I had given up to die, thinking that I could not be cured. Then one of my neighbors said, 'Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and make a new man out of yourself.' The first bottle helped me so I thought I would get another, and after I had taken eight bottles I was weighed and found I had gained twenty-seven (27) lbs. in about six weeks. I have done more hard work in the past eleven months than I did in two years before, and I am as stout and healthy to-day, I think, as I ever was."

A very attractive method which enables the small investor to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust." It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in say five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination, showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time. Prices mentioned subject to change:

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

"We were discussing about that stupid Craven Adair; dear me, how sick and tired I am of hearing his name, and Captain Derwent said something about that Japanese swindle." Barbara crushed a pink-tipped daisy beneath her bronze heels; she was not listening to a word Ormande was saying about his parish and charities in London; she had no sympathy with anything of the sort, except when it came to posing before the world as a generous, beneficent, charitable young creature who did so much for her fellow creatures, and was altogether so noble and good —her thoughts were far more interesting than Ormande's descriptions. "The swindle," she mused on, "and then he said something about escaping that, and he mentioned something, too, about Gordon Smythe, who——" Barbara stopped in her musings. "Smythe," she repeated, reflectively; "Smythe —ah!" Her cheeks grew rosy red for a moment, but that was the only outward sign she gave of the delight that filled her at that moment. "She flinched and gave that exclamation when Smythe was mentioned; that is the clue I want! Did she not speak to me the other day of her cousin, a Mr. Smythe, when I questioned her about her former life? Of course that is it; she is afraid of Gordon Smythe; she must be, else why should she shrink when his name is mentioned? Afraid of Gordon Smythe." Barbara said this over and over again to herself, deriving great pleasure from the sentence. "Perhaps he knows something about her; perhaps she has done something wrong —if I can only find out. Well, much as I hate her, I am sorry for her if she happens to be in Gordon Smythe's power; if ever a man was utterly heartless and cruel, he is that man. I can't be wrong, at any rate, it is a clue worth following up."

Ormande tried to conjure up a great amount of interest as he spoke of his London work, but somehow the real ring was absent to-day; he was restless, and had no thoughts, no interest for anything except Katharine.

"If she will only listen to me. If she will give herself to me Heaven knows she shall not repent the gift. I will treasure her as I treasure life itself; I will smooth away the troubled look from her face, and change that sorrowful expression in her sweet, sweet eyes. She shall not even speak of this sadness, whatever it is, that has shadowed her young life unless she herself wishes to tell me of it. Oh, Katharine! my darling! my darling! I dare not let my self hope; it seems too good, too wonderful to be true!"

The walk under the trees might have continued much longer, but that Barbara suddenly espied Captain Derwent in the distance and observed that she wished to speak to the young officer. Lord Otway parted from his hostess with a sigh of relief, and intended to wander away and seek Katharine in every corner and nook he could find; but Fate was against him; he fell into Mr. Montrose's hands, and was forced to listen to a long panegyric on politics. All at once Mr. Montrose changed the subject.

"That is a lovely girl, that daughter of poor Robert Brereton's!" he said abruptly; "she should not be in a position of this sort."

Lord Otway would have liked to have taken the older man's hand and nearly wrung it off.

"I can't understand it," pursued Mr Montrose, thoughtfully. "She told me last night that she had no relations in the world except a cousin of her father's, and yet I know for a certainty that her mother's brother is alive, and a rich old curmudgeon he is, but he ought to do something for the girl."

"Perhaps Miss Brereton prefers to be independent," said Ormande, wishing that he could declare proudly that henceforth Katharine would need no relation, that she would be tenderly cared for and guarded as his wife — the words almost trembled on his lips, but he restrained himself.

"I dare say, though, old Dalrymple does not even know of the girl's existence. I recollect pretty Grace Dalrymple got into terrible disgrace with her family when she ran away with handsome, penniless, Robert Brereton." Mr. Montrose went on, and then he paused and seemed to think deeply, and the result of the thought came out in his next words —"I shall look old Dalrymple up directly I return to town. I have lost my heart to the girl. Bless me, what a sweet young thing she is!"

It was a distinctly absurd and unclerical feeling, but Ormande, Lord Otway experienced a wild desire to fling his arms around the staid, matter-of-fact politician, and embrace him warmly for those words.

"My darling! My darling! Who can resist you? Who can help loving you, my beautiful queen? My dear, dear love!" he murmured to himself, reverently and tenderly.

* * * * * *

"Here's more things for you to write, miss," said Patty, as she entered Katharine's room late in the afternoon. "Lor'! what a lot you do write! Don't you never feel tired-like in the hand, miss?"

Katharine had a smile for the girl, but she was looking very white, and, indeed, was ill, agitated, and depressed. She had been kept very busy all day. Barbara was constantly sending up fresh relays of work, but Katharine was glad of it. She turned to some occupation with feverish eagerness, only grateful and thankful if she could lose herself in it for a time.

"The post's been, miss, and here's two letters for you," said Patty, after she had conveyed all the instructions that had been given her.

Katharine took the letters and read them through.

One was from Lady Drummond, a short note, full of kind interest as to how Katharine was getting on, and how she liked her present quarters; the other was from Miss Weston, a sweet, affectionate epistle, saying how dull the house was now without Katharine's lovely face to brighten it, and how Dorcas was never tired of asking when Miss Brereton would come again.

"I saw dear Mrs. Smythe," Miss Weston wrote, "the other day. Poor lady, she never ceases lamenting over you; she seems very lonely and depressed, too, and though she did not say so, still I cannot help thinking she is worried, either by or about her son. She is not looking well, and so I have persuaded her to come and stay with me for a few days, then we can chat over our dear child; and if we cannot have you with us, that will be the next best thing." Then followed a string of inquiries as to Katharine's health and comforts, and an entreaty that the girl would turn to her if she needed anything.

Katharine lifted the letter, written in the old-fashioned Italian handwriting, to her lips, and a sigh broke from her heart at the same time. She could not help it, nor the pang of reproach that came as she read about poor Lucy Smythe.

"I have sacrificed myself to save her from grief and now it seems my sacrifice was in vain. Poor Lucy, poor Cousin Lucy! Heaven grant you may never learn what a black heart lives in your idol's breast! Well, I must not begin to think. I promised myself this morning that I would not do it. Thank Heaven, I have some work to do; it is the greatest blessing that could come to me now."

She took up her pen and wrote away briskly, until the dinner gong sounding in the distance told her how late it was.

"I—I hope they will not want me in the drawing-room to-night," she said to herself, hurriedly, as she rose to her feet rather unsteadily and put one hand to her throbbing temples. "I do not think I could go; I am so tired."

Aye, that she was; tired and ill, too —nearly worn out!

With a deep sigh of relief, Katharine sank into a chair by the open window and let the cool, sweet evening air fan her wan face. She heard nine o'clock strike after a while, and then she knew that Barbara would send no message for her that evening.

The dinner rested untouched on the table, she did not feel equal to swallowing one mouthful, despite the fact that Mrs. Parsons had sent her up a delicate and most dainty meal.

The fresh, soft air was more to her than food; and slowly rising, weary and cramped from long sitting, Katharine determined to steal down into the gardens and refresh herself for a while.

If she kept well to the back of the building, she could not possibly meet any of the guests. Very slowly she made her way down the stairs, and from thence into the sweet smelling grounds.

"God is good," she murmured, her spirits reviving, as she moved along. "If we have sorrows and troubles, He gives us nature as a comforter to pour balm on our wounds."

But the comfort did not last long. Katharine soon went back into the old dreary burden of thought.

She was dazed, overwhelmed, almost prostrated by the news Ormande had brought back from town. How had Gordon managed to throw every one on such a false scent? Katharine's sad heart grew colder as she remembered the dead boy lying unmourned, unknown at the bottom of that cruel pit, and recalled his honesty, the ring of sincerity in his frank young voice, the flash of roused honor in his blue eyes, that were so like another pair of blue ones she knew so well.

It hurt her to hear the poor fellow disparaged and called ungenerous and wrong, when she could testify so clearly to his straightforwardness and his honor. It seemed to her a double murder, this slander of him, when he could not defend himself.

"Oh, that I could give my life for his!" said the girl, to herself, passionately —"that it had been me Gordon killed that day! Death surely cannot be so bitter as life is to me now!"

A hundred times in the dark night hours Katharine had sat up in bed with a start, waking from a dream wherein she saw strange hands lifting Craven Adair from his tomb and calling on her to come forward and tell all she knew. At such moments as these the girl did not know how to soothe or comfort herself. True, as yet nothing had come, not a sign or a word was given that the crime had been traced, but how long would this be? Some day the mine might be opened, the body found, and then——

With a shudder Katharine buried her face in her trembling hands, though even that dread "then" did not seem to be fraught with greater horrors than she was called upon to bear now, guarding such a secret, and being linked forever to such a man as Gordon Smythe.

All the affectionate words Mr. Montrose had uttered last night of her dead father, much though they gratified her, left behind them a sting. Katharine felt that she dared not even think of her beloved one with this ghastly shadow hanging over her head, that his grave, loving eyes would be full of sadness and reproach to contemplate his daughter — his proud, honorable little Kattie—a confederate or companion in such a crime.

"Oh, if I could but go to sleep, to sleep for years, and then wake to find it one long, hideous dream!" she cried out now, as she moved under the dark, whispering trees, losing her weariness in the emotion and agitation that crowded fast upon each other's heels in her troubled breast.

She came to a standstill at last by the side of a sturdy old tree, and leaning up against it with her arms, Katharine bent her head on them and cried softly to herself. It was not a passionate paroxysm of weeping; the tears stole slowly down her cheeks — tears of bitterness, of despair, of hopelessness, tears in which the misery of her broken-hearted love found vent with the rest.

The summer moon was high in the heavens, casting quaint, fantastic shadows on the ground; its silvery light crept through the faintly moving leaves, and lingered on the girl's bowed head, as if wishing to bless and comfort her.

Away in the distance Katharine could hear singing voices and laughter. They had no part in her life. What had she to do with singing and laughter?— those belonged to such happy people as Barbara Mostyn — Barbara, the woman Ormande loved.

Katharine pressed her wet face still closer on her arms as her heart contracted with a thrill of exquisite pain. Yes, laughter and songs went with happiness. She must stand by and hear them, must see the blessed sunshine pour down its golden warmth on others' heads, while she, alone, forgotten——

Katharine gave a great start; something rustled among the bushes close by; then there was a short bark of delight as one of the dogs came running up to her; then the faint fragrant scent of a cigar stole to her nostrils, and then some one came from out of the shadows into the moonlight and spoke her name eagerly, hurriedly.

"Kate— Miss Brereton, what happy chance led me to come this way?"

Ormande was holding both her hands in his. Katharine was conscious of a sense of delight at his firm, strong touch.

The moon's rays lit up her face with its great luminous eyes and its tear stains. Those grief marks were too much for Ormande. He uttered a smothered exclamation; involuntarily his hold tightened on her slender hands, and he drew her a shade closer to him.

A passion of words trembled on his his lips, but Katharine, her heart leaping wildly, her pulses thrilling, her senses growing dazed and dreamy as they had grown last night, spoke first.

"I—I had no idea it was so late, I must run in; please let me go, Lord Otway. I must go, really I must."

Ormande only held her firmer in that tender, passionate hold, that spoke almost as clearly as words what lived in his mind.

"No, no!" he muttered, eagerly, huskily, the joy of the moment almost unnerving him, "do not leave me! Katharine, I must speak to you. I can bear it no longer. This uncertainty is unbearable. Katharine, my darling! My darling!"

CHAPTER XVII.

"Katharine, my darling!"

The words ran like liquid fire in the girl's veins, she was riveted by them, magnetized by them into a condition of complete silence, which she was powerless to break.

Ormande met the dazed, questioning glance of her lovely eyes; they made his heart throb with their marvelous, mysterious beauty.

"Have I frightened you, my dearest heart?" he said gently, with unutterable tenderness. "Ah, forgive me; you were not to know, how could you, how I have longed, prayed to see you all this weary day, and when I came upon you suddenly, I—I— you won't laugh at me, darling, will you? —I just lost my head entirely," he laughed softly, but his laughter was pregnant with happiness. Katharine only heard it dimly; she was conscious of nothing but the grasp of his strong hands, the musical tenderness of his voice. She still stood gazing at him with her great gray eyes, full of that dazed dreaminess which hung over her so persistently. "And now," Ormande went on, "now I want to hear you say you have forgiven me; I want more than that, Katharine, but I must try and be patient, I must not expect too much; I must be content, if you will only tell me first that you are not angry with me. I love you so much, dear," he cried, wistfully, feeling, he scarcely knew why, a sense of despair strike through him, as he met that still, quiet gaze; "I love you so much, you are my sunshine, my very life. I cannot remember how I lived before I met you, Katharine, and my love has grown more and more each day, till I can no longer keep it to myself; I am obliged to tell you all about it." He paused for a moment, still she stood as one transfixed, gazing at him. How strange, how weirdly beautiful her face was in the moonlight; she did not look of earthly mould, there was a spiritual transparency in the delicate pallor of her skin, a——

Ormande gripped her small hands in an agony of sudden fear; she had never seemed so ethereal to him before, as she did now.

"Speak to me, Katharine!" he cried, eagerly, passionately; "say something, if it is only that you forgive me, for — for loving you so much. Oh, my darling, my darling, you will not be so cruel to me, you will let me hope— I do not care how far distant it is! I will wait, yes, weeks, months, years, I will wait, if you will only give me a word of hope, dearest!" He was now strung to the highest point of agitation and emotion. "Do you not see it is cruel to keep me in such doubt? I love you, Katharine— I love you so much!"

The dream was broken, the sense of vague, delirious ecstasy gone. With a shudder, she awoke— awoke to find her hands in Ormande's grasp, and Ormande's low voice ringing in her ears. Joy flamed up for a single moment great, triumphant, inexpressible joy— but only for a moment; the next she saw it die away, and black despair creep into its place.

"You love me?" she said; "you love me?"

She spoke almost mechanically, her brain was stunned, it did not work very quickly; her eyes met his again and at the world of passion, of unfathomable tenderness in their blue depths, she shivered.

"You love me!" she whispered, faintly. "It—it is not true— no, no, it cannot be true."

The full horror burst on her all at once; here was happiness, great, wondrous golden happiness, held to her lips, and she must not drink. Was it not enough to make any woman falter and shrink before such temptation?

"You are wrong," she murmured huskily, eagerly trying to wrench her hands from his hold. "You are wrong; why do you say such things? You love me?" and she laughed wildly. She was hardly conscious of what she did, only one thing stared her in the face, she must send him away; she must push him from her, lest she should sink beneath this awful blow, and bring shame and sorrow on him as well as on herself. How blind she had been —how blind! It was not Barbara Mostyn he loved, it was she —she, poor Katharine Brere—

Garfield's Last Tears.

A pathetic incident is related apropos of the day of fasting and prayer which was appointed by all the governors of the United States at the time President Garfield was removed from Washington, D.C., to Long Branch, in the hope that the change might help him to recover from the bullet wounds inflicted by Guiteau. "Crete," said the President to his brave little wife, about eleven on that Thursday morning, as the ringing strokes from the belfry of the Episcopal Church, almost across from the cottage, reached his ears, "what are they ringing that bell for?" "That!" said Mrs. Garfield, who had been waiting for the surprise—"that's the church where we were when you first came down. They're all going to pray for you to get well;" and, falling on her knees, she said, "and I'm going to pray, too, James, that it may be soon; for I know already that the other prayer has been heard." From where he lay Garfield could see the carriages draw up, and group after group go in. He could even hear the subdued refrain of "Jesus, lover of my soul," as it was borne by on its heavenward way. Thrilled with emotion, a tear trickled down the President's face. Then he closed his eyes and turned his face as a sweet woman's voice arose, singing from one of Sir Michael Costa's oratorios. "Turn Thou unto me, and have mercy upon me," sang the voice, "for I am desolate; I am desolate and afflicted; the troubles of my heart are enlarged. Oh, bring Thou me out of my distresses, out of my distresses, my God!" The people in the church sat almost spellbound under the voice, for the singer was affected deeply, and made it seem to all, what it must have been to her, a prayer in music.

Avoid Contact With Sick Pets.

Dogs and monkeys are subject to tuberculosis and are said to be capable of communicating the infection to human beings. A large number of the canaries that die in captivity fall victims to the same disease. Parrots suffer from a malady peculiar to themselves. The bacillus that causes it is thought to originate pneumonia in man. Cats have been known to be the carriers of diphtheria, and possibly of scarlet fever and other infectious diseases. Great care should be taken during an epidemic to keep pet animals out of the reach of infection, or else away from the children, and at any time a bird or animal that seems ailing should be at once isolated.—Ladies' Home Journal

OUR CONSTANT AIM IS TO SERVE OUR PATRONS THOROUGHLY AND WELL.

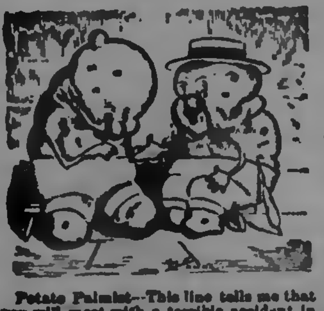
Kindly favor us with a visit at your earliest convenience, so as to assure yourself that we serve the public thoroughly and well. Our dispensing department is under the most competent management, insuring perfect safety in the preparation of prescriptions. Our drugs, medicines and tinctures are the purest and our general stock suited to the wants of the most critical.

YOU NEED THE BEST.

If you are rheumatic, neuralgic, dyspeptic, nervous, weak or run down, you need the best medicine that medical science can suggest. We strongly recommend Paine's Celery Compound for your troubles. It has cured others afflicted as you are; it cannot fail in your case. We sell the kind that makes sick people well. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

Not a Happy Outlook.

"Life."



Potato Palmist—This line tells me that you will meet with a terrible accident in your old age. You will be skinned alive, your eyes will be dug out, then you will be boiled, and finally mashed to a pulp.

OUR PAST RECORD.

Our past record of successful catering to the wants of a critical public is the best guarantee we can offer to all who are not yet numbered among our permanent customers. Please remember that we make a specialty of filling physicians' prescriptions. Our stock of perfumes, Toilet articles, Brushes, Sponges etc., is large and varied.

THE MOST RELIABLE AND POPULAR.

Paine's Celery Compound is the most reliable and popular family medicine, and is specially recommended for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, nervous diseases and sleeplessness. If you have not succeeded in banishing your troubles, come to us for a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound. It will not disappoint you. ORMOND & WALSH, Druggists, Peterborough, Ont.

Those of the public who may imagine that there is no room for initiative and ingenuity in the cats' meat trade, says the London "Chronicle," are vastly mistaken. In Kensington an enterprising young fellow is said to be making a fortune through the happy idea of supplying, on request, fish instead of meat for the cats on his round. The pets of the prosperous can obtain meat at almost any time, and they will not look, for the most part, at the wares of the cats' meat man. But no cat can resist a tasty bit of fish, be it offered when it may, and a huge success is the result of the innovation. Again, there are certain purveyors who take trouble to obtain a close knowledge of every single animal on their rounds and its little peculiarities. This knowledge once gained, the cats' meat man buys and cuts his portions accordingly, taking care that each cat gets its favorite bit. All chance of rivalry is removed at once by this means, for a cat will not for weeks, unless driven by desperate hunger, touch the strange cuts of a new purveyor.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Attacks the Middle-Aged

Persons approaching the meridian of life should beware of little lumps and growths.

It is a well known fact, that any physician will substantiate, that there is a greater percentage of Cancer among those of midlife than at any other age.

Persons at this time of life, would do well to regard with suspicion, any lumps or growths on their body. Should these prove malignant or of a cancerous nature, they can be removed completely without operation, by the use of our painless home treatment.

It is the most successful remedy for the cure of cancers and tumors and has cured numbers of people here in Canada and saved them from the torture of the surgeon's knife or the painful plaster.

MELANCHOLY DAYS COME NO MORE WHEN

Malt Breakfast Food

IS MADE YOUR FIRST MORNING DISH.

Too many men and women have their melancholy days—times when real despondency reigns supreme. Such melancholy days come when dyspepsia, indigestion and stomach derangements make life a burden. In ninety-nine cases out of every hundred these miserable troubles are brought on by the use of grain foods containing elements that hamper digestion.

Malt Breakfast Food used regularly at the first meal of the day, while it aids digestion and keeps the stomach in perfect condition, also adds to physical and mental strength. You should always eat to live, not to suffer. Malt Breakfast Food is a perfect health food, suited for the child or adult. Its delicious and appetizing qualities are praised by all who use it. Try it; melancholy days will never return when you become a user of Malt Breakfast Food. All Grocers sell it.

You Need Nerve Force and Restoration of Physical Energy.

Paine's Celery Compound

BUILDS UP STRENGTH AND HEALTH

It Is a Boon to Men and Woman Workers.

Paine's Celery Compound gives nerve force and true bodily strength to men and women workers, enables them to swing through the toils and duties of each day with true pleasure.

Paine's Celery Compound quickly builds up a perfect physical well-being for the weak, rundown and languid of all ages, and brings to every sufferer a health and happiness as nothing else can do. Our best and ablest physicians recognize Paine's Celery Compound as a true nerve food and system-builder, and regularly prescribe it in some of the most serious cases of nervous prostration and failing strength. In purchasing, beware of substitutes and the many imitations and worthless celery preparations; get PAINE'S, the kind that "makes sick people well."

General Wm. W. Henry, American Counsul, city of Quebec, says: "It gives me great pleasure to indorse Paine's Celery Compound, both on account of the results obtained from personal use of the remedy and knowledge of the remarkable cures it has performed. I believe it has no equal in curing diseases of the nervous system and building up those who are weak and out of health. It has cured several friends of mine of rheumatism in its worst form."

WEDDING BELLS

Mr. Ernest Rosborough, of Smith, Married to Miss Lilian Bell of Dummer

The Norwood Register says: "A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac N. Bell, on Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 8th, when their eldest daughter, Lilian, was united in marriage to Mr. Ernest Rosborough, of Smith Township.

The bride looked charming in a lovely gown of white organdie with silk and lace trimmings. The bridesmaid, Miss Ida Bell, sister of the bride, was prettily attired in a gown of white over pink, trimmed with silk over lace. Mr. J. Rosborough, brother of the groom, acted as best man. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. D. Clark of South Dummer, in the presence of the immediate friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

After the ceremony the party sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast after which the newly married couple left for their home in Smith, followed by the congratulations of a large number of friends.

FIXED THE FAMILY

Grape-Nuts Set Them Right.

It is better to have a food epidemic in a family than an epidemic of sickness. A young lady out at Hibbing, Minn, tells about the way Grape-Nuts won her family. She says, "When recovering from typhoid fever my doctor ordered Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. I gained four pounds the first week, and, as the package was kept on the table for me, the whole family started to eat the new food.

We soon noticed a difference in my younger brother's face, which had been pale and bloodless, and who had been suffering from chronic inflammation of the stomach. In a short time he began to eat so heartily that we all remarked about it, and before long he got so he could eat anything without the least bad effect.

We often eat Grape-Nuts dry as we would candy or nuts, and it has a richer taste than when soaked in water. The best way is to put on some good, rich cream.

My sister found that after we began eating Grape-Nuts she had a much greater supply of milk for her babe. We have quit eating hot bread and meat for the evening meal and take in place some Grape-Nuts, with cream, and a little fruit, and have all improved greatly in health.

Please don't publish my name." Name can be given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE

THE

STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,

BY

Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 5,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No.	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	21½ in.	9 in.	$11.20
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.00
4	41 in.	15 in.	25.00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 25 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

To Work at Their Homes Under the Direction of The GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO.

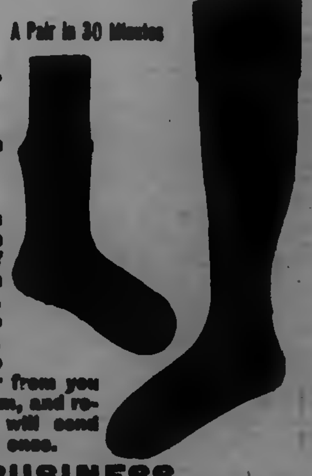
37 MELINDA ST., TORONTO,

To Fill Large Contracts—Good Wages Easily Earned.



A Pair in 30 Minutes

We want a few more workers in this locality, at once, and in order to secure your co-operation without the delay of correspondence, we herewith explain our full plan in this advertisement. The work is simple, and the Machine is easily operated, and with the Guide, requires no teacher. If you wish to join our staff of Workers let us hear from you promptly with the Contract, order form, and remittance, as a guarantee, and we will send machine and outfit to begin work at once.

OUR METHOD OF DOING BUSINESS

We wish to secure the services of families to do knitting for us in their homes. Our method is the same as adopted in England. We are the introducers of this plan and the largest knitting concern in Canada.

After long experience, we have been able to produce an Automatic Machine by which all kinds of seamless knitting is now done by our Family Machine, thereby enabling anyone of ordinary intelligence to quickly learn to do the work from the Instruction Guide. All we require is that you use the machine according to directions. The Machine being made expressly for this purpose, and the operation so simple, it cannot possibly make a mistake in its work.

The great demand now is for Bicycle Stockings, Woodmen's Socks, and Motormen's Mittens, and as we are unable to supply the demand, have taken this method of advertising for more help.

The large export trade to the North-west Territories, British Columbia, and the British Colonies, furnishes an unlimited demand for our goods, and, with the combined co-operation of the many families we are employing, together with the large amount of knitting we are able to turn out, by which we save rents, insurance, interest on capital, etc., enables us to undersell any manufacturers of this class of goods, and we have sale for all the knitting we can have turned out.

The price we pay for finished bicycle stockings is $10.00 per hundred, or at the rate of 10c per pair; woodmen's socks, 8c, and motormen's mittens, 12c a pair. All other work in proportion to size.

The machine can be operated by any one of a family, and at our prices any energetic family should be able to sustain themselves comfortably, and in time be a source of independent comfort.

Our plan is to send out each machine to beginners with a sock or stocking partially knitted, and remaining in the machine ready to be continued, and also enough yarn to knit one pair of sample socks or stockings and a simple and complete Instruction Guide, showing how the work is to be done. When the samples have been finished and returned to us satisfactory, we send a quantity of yarn, which you knit and return likewise when finished. We prepay charges on all work one way, and our workers pay return charges. The work, as we have stated, is simple and rapidly done, the machine having a capacity of ten thousand stitches a minute. We have many persons now in our employ who can knit from twenty-five to thirty pairs of socks or stockings a day, and where the time of a family is devoted to the work, you can readily see that $15.00 or $20.00 per week can be easily earned.

We furnish our workers all the materials, yarn, etc., free, and everything that is necessary for the work. We are furnishing the machines only for the exclusive use of those desiring to take employment with us, who must, in order to become a member, send us this Contract Order Form, properly signed by them, and at least one good reference, and remittance accordingly, to give us the necessary assurance that the quantities of valuable yarn we may send from time to time will not be wasted or misappropriated. Our interests are mutual, and this confidence must be established if we are to succeed. We guarantee fair dealing and prompt payment for work, so do not ask us to deviate from our terms, as we cannot make a distinction with one and not another; besides, we are doing an extensive business, and must be governed by business principles.

The manufactured price of the machine is $15, and positively will not be sold to any others than those who will agree to do knitting for us.

If at any time after you commence, and have done an amount of work equal to the purchase price, and wish to discontinue, we will take back machine and refund the amount paid for same, after deducting cost of our expense only.

There is a Large Demand by the Trade for this class of work. Our workers can depend upon it year after year, and if you engage with us (whole or spare time) we will keep you supplied with work as long as you do it satisfactorily for us and return it promptly. We entrust our workers with large quantities of valuable yarn, and as we give references as to our honesty and integrity, we must ask you to do the same, in order that we may know with whom we are dealing.

We have, in as brief a manner as possible, endeavored to show you what our work is, and we simply say as to the machine, it is just what we represent it to be, and will positively do everything we claim for it, or refund the money. Each machine, securely packed with an outfit, is set up for work, thoroughly tested, and a sock or stocking partially knitted before boxing and shipping. Should you decide to engage with us, it will be necessary to send us Cash Contract Order Form, properly signed by you, and at least one good reference, together with the remittance, accordingly, upon receipt of which we will forward machine and outfit ready to commence.

Respectfully yours,

GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO., 37 Melinda Street, Toronto

Our References—Express Companies, Banks, or Toronto Business Houses.

If you wish to examine the machine and see the material before undertaking the work, you can do so by sending $3.00 as a guarantee of good faith, and to defray expense of shipping, and we will send everything to your nearest express company, leaving a balance of twelve dollars to pay the agent and 25 cents for the return charges on the money to us.

We are so frequently and unnecessarily asked if one can learn to knit without a teacher. We say, Yes; it requires no teacher; any person of ordinary intelligence who can read the Instruction Guide can learn to knit at once.

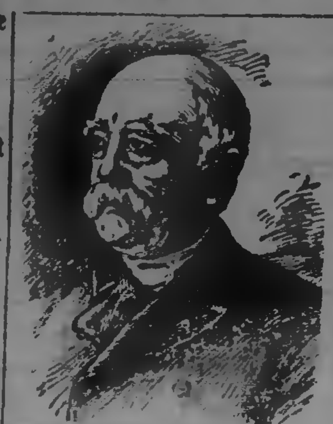
GERMANY'S CHANGE TOWARDS ENGLAND

Chancellor Von Buelow's Attitude Less Hostile Towards Great Britain

He Takes a Lesson from the Great Statesman Bismark



Berlin, Jan. 20.—The late Prince Bismark, although dead, is not forgotten. In the Reichstag last night Chancellor Von Buelow, in referring to the foreign relations, said that the government would follow in the footsteps of the great Prince Bismark, and seek rather to palliate than to offend Britain.

The chancellor's change of tone towards Great Britain is one of the surprises of current international politics. It is quite possible that his imperial and imperious master felt that the popular diversion of twisting the lion's tail had gone far enough in Germany, and gave a hint to that effect with the result as stated. A curious coincidence with this change of attitude is the unanimity with which the German press have turned the vials of their wrath on the United States. These attacks are cabled across the Atlantic, and appear in American papers with even more sensational headings than garnished previous abuse of the British. Editorial retort is sharply pointed, and the German press in turn receives United States opinion red hot. If it were not for the danger that lurks in these journalistic incitements this scolding match by cable would be amusing and not devoid of instruction, as showing the temper in which the exponents of opinion in rival nations regard each other. German attacks on Britain were purely gratuitous, though they sprang mainly from resentment over unsuccessful commercial rivalry when German merchants discovered that the markets of the world have limitations. But towards the United States the feeling in Germany is one of fear as well as dislike. The fear arises from the staggering impact of the energy and enterprise of the United States, backed apparently by unlimited capital. The German papers are saying that the rivalry of the United States is not that of a nation, but of a continent, and that Europe can only meet it as a continent, and they are proposing a continental tariff combination against the United States—as though nations that are rivals in everything else could become united on the point where their rivalry is keenest. But the "American terror" is a very real thing to German industry just now, and the exhibition of ill-feeling towards the United States is quite natural under conditions little short of exasperating.

CONQUERING THE WAZIRI TRIBE.

New Method of Fighting the Mahsuds Was Successful

WERE ATTACKED ON ALL SIDES

British Forces Appeared in Half a Dozen Totally Unexpected Places—Bring Tribesmen to Their Places

London, Jan. 20.—A special correspondent in writing to The Chronicle from Simla says:—

"The blockade of the Mahsud Waziri tribe has now lasted for a little over twelve months, having been formally inaugurated on December 1, 1900. Throughout the blockade, the tribesmen have not ceased, to raid whenever opportunity presented itself, and latterly these raids assumed a particularly daring character. A month or so ago we lost a number of regular soldiers, and, what the Waziris esteem much more highly, a quantity of rifles and ammunition. It was this last affair which finally decided Lord Curzon to sanction retaliatory measures. Doubtless with a certain amount of reluctance the Viceroy recognised that the blockade system, to which he had resolved to give a patient trial, would have to be abandoned, or rather, combined with a system of counter-raiding on our part. In sanctioning active measures, Lord Curzon was careful to stipulate that there were not to be of the regulation frontier type, which has generally proved of so little avail. The slow and ostentatious mobilisation of a large force on the frontier, followed by a military promenade through the enemy's country, has always given the tribesmen plenty of time to clear away their cattle and such other valuables as they have, together with their families, to some place of safety beyond our reach. It was a wise and statesmanlike decision to abandon this cumbrous kind of expedition, and no time was lost in putting it into effect.

SECRET PREPARATIONS.

"All the preparations were made in absolute secrecy, and very few, even of the blockading force itself, were aware that anything out of the common was about to take place. It was decided to send four mobile columns into the Mahsud country, with instructions to inflict as much damage as possible, and retire again before the enemy could assemble at any one spot in sufficient force. To ensure mobility, the columns were without either guns or transport, and carried the whole of their food and ammunition.

"There is not the slightest doubt that these operations took the Mahsuds absolutely by surprise. The arrangements were most skillfully planned and carried out. The fact of the Tochi column entering their country from the rear naturally caused the tribesmen, on hearing of its advance, to move in that direction in some force. No sooner had they done so than the other columns entered on their flank and rear, and every moment fresh reports must have reached their leaders of the appearance of our men in half-a-dozen totally unexpected quarters. These conflicting stories and the complete suddenness of it all were altogether too much for the Mahsud Maliks; and before they could gather in force at any one spot, our columns were safely back in their own lines. The operations, which reflect the greatest possible credit on all concerned, will undoubtedly have a most excellent effect, not only on the Mahsuds themselves, but on some of the neighboring tribes as well. The operations will probably be continued until the recalcitrant tribesmen have been completely brought to their knees."

EMPEROR MAY VISIT THE U. S.

Kaiser Wilhelm May Also Come to Visit Canada

SEPTEMBER TO BE THE DATE

Should the Royal Visit Take Place a Gala Time will Follow—Trip Depends on Success of His Brother

Berlin, Jan. 18.—A report from an authentic source is current in diplomatic circles to-day that the kaiser will visit the United States in the autumn. A semiofficial organ suggests that the emperor's plans depend on the success of the visit of his brother, Prince Henry of Prussia. If he is treated with the respect due to a member of the royal family the emperor will sail in September on the Hohenzollern and will remain about two weeks in America with a large escort of German warships.

Emperor William has occasionally told Americans that he would like to visit the United States. The only obstacle in the way of gratifying his desire is that reasons of state may forbid his leaving the fatherland for the period of time required even for a short visit to the United States. Nevertheless, those who know the kaiser intimately say that his majesty, when he takes a sudden notion, is not easily balked even by reasons of state.

Prince Henry has been accorded twentyfour days' leave for the purpose of visiting the United States. He will leave Bremen Feb. 18 on the Kronprinz Wilhelm, reaching New York Feb 24, and returning on the Deutschland March 20. The arrangement has been made in accordance with the kaiser's desire to give crack vessels of the German merchant fleet the joint honor fo carrying the Imperial traveler.

ITINERARY IS CONSIDERED

A long conference took place to-day between the navy authorities and Baron Seckendorff, Prince Henry's court chamberlain to determine the prince's itinerary. The information regarding Chicago's invitation to the prince was conveyed to his imperial highness.

The kaiser has intrusted his brother with an additional mission to induce American yachtsmen to compete at the Kiel regatta. His majesty is also anxious that the American jackies of the Mediterranean squadron be permitted to row in the barge races for crews of warships.

Prince Henry will convey to Miss Alice Roosevelt as a gift from the kaiser one of the most magnificent pieces of jewelry the court artists have ever fashioned.

Elaborate preparations are made for social entertainments on board the Hohenzollern. By the emperor's special order a splendid silver service has been sent to Kiel from the royal silver treasures in the old Schloss. His majesty personally inspected the treasures and selected the service which is to be used on board the Hohenzollern on special occasions. Emperor William's programme is that Prince Henry shall reciprocate the New York and Washington festivities with a grand banquet on board the Hohenzollern, inviting the president, the members of the cabinet and others.

MR. EDWARDS AND COUNCIL

Mayor Denne Gets a Letter from the Ex Solicitor

A letter appeared in the local evening papers addressed to the Mayor, from Mr. E. B. Edwards, regarding his dismissal from the Town Solicitorship. Mr. Edwards contradicts the statement that he had unwarrantably and improperly interfered in the matter of the issue of the patent to the town for the water lots. The Mayor omitted to send The Times a copy of the letter, but this does not prevent us referring to it. It may be that our chief magistrate did not care to give it the publicity that its appearance in this widely-read journal would afford, preferring to confine it to narrower bounds. However, this is of little consequence.

Mr. Edwards we think will make a mistake if he proposes to dig up the past. We have a vivid recollection of the outfall sewer muddle which cost the town many thousands of dollars, and which many believe was entirely unnecessary had the proper course been taken by him. Then there is the Mason case (a vast sinkhole for the town's good money) which could have been settled, we believe for $250, and which cost the people more than ten times this sum. Many similar cases could, it is believed, be referred to, showing that his period of twenty years' service as solicitor was not without its drawbacks. It can be said, however, on the other side, that Mr. Edwards is well posted in municipal law. His by-laws have been, usually, we believe, carefully drawn, and without many flaws.

As regards the action of Mr. Edwards in the matter of the patent, we are credibly informed that evidence will be forthcoming at the proper time to fully justify the council in taking the course it did. The following is the letter, which we take the liberty of publishing without the Mayor's consent:

T. H. G. Denne, Esq., Mayor, of Peterborough:

Dear Sir,—The statements made at the last meeting of the Council to the effect that I had unwarrantably and improperly interfered in the matter of the issue of the patent to the Town, are not correct. So far from interfering with the issue of the patent, my sole object in calling upon Mr. White was to expedite it, and to see that it was properly issued in accordance with the agreement prepared and signed by Mr. MacMurchy and myself as solicitors for the C.P.R. and the Town respectively, when we were before Mr. White on the 31st, December last, and my whole course with regard to the matter was, as I hope to be able to clearly show, in accordance with my duty and in the best interests of the Town.

As the statements made are calculated, if not contradicted, to injure me as a professional man independently of the office of Town Solicitor, and as I think it is but fair that any officer of the Town for over 20 years should not be summarily dismissed without being given a chance to be heard in answer, to any charges made against him, I desire that I may have an opportunity at an early meeting of the Council of being heard in answer to what is alleged against me.

Yours truly,
E. B. EDWARDS.

A Year of Awakening in the History of British Industry

UNSATISFACTORY TRADE YEAR

American Rivalry Have Told on British Manufacturers to an Important Extent—What the Result will be.

London, Jan. 20.—The year that has closed has not been a satisfactory one for trade. The volume of national business, in both exports and imports, has materially declined. Lines of commerce which we not long since regarded as peculiarly our own have been absorbed by foreign rivals. International competition has been exceedingly keen, and two factors — American rivalry and the economic results of the war expenditure —have told on our manufacturers.

Yet on the whole the condition of labor has been good. There has been no really serious labor struggle during the past twelve months. The long-continued fight at Penrhyn and the fierce struggle in the fishing industry at Grimsby only affected small localities, and, despite certain disputes in the Welsh coal-mining trade and among the North of England shipbuilders, there seems no fear of any immediate strike of magnitude. The reduction of wages which must soon come through the diminution of work is bound to cause some friction, but the leaders of both masters and men have for some time been displaying great prudence in minimising those differences which must sometimes arise.

The year 1901 may be known to future generations as the year of national industrial awakening. Our leaders of commerce received a severe shock early in the year by the great strides American manufactured goods made among us. The formation of the American Steel Trust was rightly regarded as a direct challenge to our free trade. The Americans, followed in a lesser degree by the Germans, met us at the very headquarters of our trade. Foreign pig iron has been sold in Glasgow, in Lancashire, and around the Tyne at prices with which our home producers, acting on the old lines, could not hope to compete.

This has led, in two or three instances, to the closing of English mills; in some other cases, factories have been completely overhauled and reorganised under foreign engineers, while several captains of British industry have crossed the Atlantic to learn at first hand the methods of our rivals. All who have done so have returned profoundly impressed by the need of reorganisation in our manufacturing methods.

HOHENZOLLERN SETS SAIL.

Kiel, Jan. 20. — The Imperial yacht Hohenzollern sailed for New York at 9.30 this (Saturday) morning.

London, Jan. 20. —The London ratepayers this Christmas have had to provide for over 4,300 more paupers than the total recorded for Christmas, 1900.

The latest official return shows that 107,539 persons were in receipt of poor law relief at the end of the second week of the present month, of whom 68,130 were in the workhouses and 39,409 were outdoor paupers. This is the highest total registered at any Christmas period since the year 1872.

Moreover, the number of paupers in every 1,000 inhabitants (23.7) is greater this December than in the corresponding period of the preceding five years. Last Christmas it was 22.5. The return is naturally regarded as being distinctly disappointing.

MORE AMERICAN SCHEMES.

London, Jan. 20.— The American coal owners have been maturing big schemes for the conquest of the coal trade of Europe. They can produce hard coal for about half the cost Welsh mine owners can. They are handicapped, however, by the long journey to European centres, with the corresponding heavy cost of carriage. To meet this they are building special coal steamers of 10,000 ton size. Already they have made great headway on the Mediterranean coast line.

MINER FROZEN TO DEATH.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan.20.— News from Nelson tells of the death of a miner from exposure fifty miles west of that place. The unfortunate man and three others started across the mountains to visit a claim. Before night they became lost in drifts of soft snow on the mountain top. They missed their way and spent three days in the extreme cold and biting wind of the worst blizzard on record in that section. On the fourth day Stevens, Wall and Thomas managed to reach a camp, and at once sent back for Rockaway, who had been left exhausted on the trail. He was found frozen to death.

INDIANS MUST CUT THEIR HAIR.

Washington, Jan. 20. — The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has issued an order which compels all male Indians in the United States to have their hair cut frequently, or at least not to wear it long. The order is addressed to the various Indian agents thoroughout the country, and directs them to induce the male Indians under their charge to cut their hair, using force only when necessary. The order also prohibits Indians of both sexes from painting their faces and forms.

Portland, Oregon, Jan. 20.—A special to the Oregonian from Astoria, Ore, says:—

Frank Rakowski, a soldier in the United States army, was to-day degraded at Fort Canby and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the military prison on Alcatraz Island. Col. Rakowski had threatened to assassinate President Roosevelt.

Rakowski was a member of Captain Cloke's company, stationed at Fort Stevens. He was on detached duty at Fort Columbia, Washington, when he voiced the Anarchist sentiment, and after arrest by the civil authorities was turned over to the military officials at Fort Canby. He was tried before a general court martial.

A few days before Christmas Rakowski became intoxicated at Chinook and while in a saloon there made the following statement:

"President McKinley got what he deserved. My time of enlistment in the army will soon expire, and when it does, I'll see that President Roosevelt gets the same dose that Czolgosz gave McKinley."

Rakowski's sentence is dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and confinement in the military prison on Alcatraz Island for a period of ten years.

Port Townsend, Wash., Jan. 20.—The steamer Dirigo has arrived from Skagway, bringing fifty passengers, some of whom are from the Klondike. They report that much excitement prevails at Dawson over the striking of a second bedrock in Eldorado Creek, thirty feet beneath the first. The gravel ran from one to five dollars to the pan. Circle City, once one of the leading camps in the north, is now deserted except by storekeepers, all having stampeded to Good Pasture Creek, in the Tanana country, where rich gravel has been discovered. The White Pass and Yukon Railroad is blockaded and passengers have to be transferred across a big snow slide a mile and a half wide and 100 feet long, which covers the track to a depth of eight feet.

London, Jan. 20.—The Lord Chief Justice Baron Alverstone, to-day sustained the contention of the defence of Dr. Krause that the charge of inciting to murder must fail, as there was no evidence that the letters in the case had reached Broeckmann; but the question of "Attempting to persuade" must go to the jury.

The trial of Dr. Krause, the former Governor of Johannesburg, on the charge of inciting Cornelius Broeckman, the public prosecutor of Johannesburg (who was executed by the British authorities in South Africa) to murder John Douglas Foster, an English lawyer who was on the staff of Lord Roberts, opened at the Old Bailey yesterday.

Dr. Krause was found guilty and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

London, Jan. 17.—An English engine fitter who after long experience in this country worked in two modern tool shops in the United States, and visited over thirty others, has contributed his impressions to Engineering.

As far as his experience in American machine tools goes, England is ahead of America in the heavier classes of tools. When it comes to the lighter classes, America has taught England many wrinkles lately, which she has taken advantage of, as anyone who has visited the Glasgow Exhibition may see. The chief fault of the American tools, he thinks, is their excessive lightness, and the writer is glad to see that, while England has copied some American notions she has at the same time improved on them by giving them a more substantial form.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN LIKELY TO CLASH.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN IN THE FAR EAST

These Two Powerful Nations May Soon Battle For Supremacy

BEAR MUST CONTROL SITUAUION

The Visit of the Marquis of Ito to Russia Has No Political Significance—Statement of Russian Officer

London, Jan. 18.—That there is serious trouble brewing between Russia and Japan, no one who has made a study of the political situation will deny. Recent events will go to prove that war between these two great nations is gradually becoming nearer.

As was the case with the Thibetan mission to St. Petersburg so it is with the alleged Japanese mission; Russia, having emphasised in every possible way the importance of the Marquis Ito's visit to the Russian capital, ends by agreeing with the Japanese press that the sojourn of Japan's ex-Premier in the empire of the Czar was of no particular importance, Marquis having simply desired a holiday from the cares of state. The Marquis, however, desired to return home by the new Trans-Siberian Railway, but this pleasure the Russian Government, by certain representations, has caused him to forego. "All the Russia desires from Japan," says the Novoe Vremya, in referring to the incident, "is that she should respect the independence of Korea."

But scarcely has the Marquis Ito left the empire than a Russian army officer is heard to declare in an authoritative statement—for all statements of Russian officers are authoritative —that "Korea must sooner or later come under the protection of Russia, and even now the influence of the latter country in Korea is sufficient to oppose a certain amount of resistance to that of Japan." These words are from an address delivered by Lieut.-Col. Agapejeff, recently returned from active service in Manchuria, before the Russian Imperial Club in St. Petersburg. He boldly declared that had war broken out between Russia and Japan last spring the former would have been in a dangerous position, "for railway communication had not been completed, and her naval force in the Far East was insufficient, while a small Japanese naval force would have been able to cut off Port Arthur from supplies, for which that port depended on Vladivostock and Japan itself, and at the same time Port Arthur might have been isolated on the land side by a sudden descent of Japanese troops.

"Now, although Japan at a week's notice could throw 70,000 men into Manchuria, and in a few weeks reinforce them by an army of 150,000, Russia would have a better chance of success; but, nevertheless, she has good reason not to wish for war with Japan, for the geographical situation of that country would prevent Russia, with the weaker fleet, from inflicting as much damage on Japan as Japan could inflict in her turn by a descent on Russian territory, or by a bombardment of Russian ports."

In regard to Manchuria, Col. Agapejeff pointed out that any one of three courses was "legitimately" open to Russia:—"She might be content to guard merely the railway lines connecting Dalny and Port Arthur with the Ussuri district, or she might annex Manchuria." The third course, Col. Agapejeff said, was to leave China in possession of the north-western part of Manchuria and retain the eastern and richer portion of the country.

BRITAIN AND ABYSSINIA

France Utters a Growl Over Britain's Action

A British Railway to be Built—England's Influence Extending.

London, Jan. 20.—The French press voices a growing jealousy of England as the dominating influence in Abyssinia. The cause of the trouble is the intention of a British company to build a branch railway from the main line of the Abyssinian railroad to the port of Zeila. The present terminus of the main line is at the port of Djibuti, which is under French control. The Paris Temps is protesting very strongly against this course, maintaining that Zeila is an inadequate port, while Djibuti is an excellent one. It further holds that the traffic for some time to come will scarcely be sufficient to pay the expenses of the Djibuti section and considers it absurd to divide the line into two branches. The Temps pretends to see the British Government at the back of the railway company, and feels that the latter is obtaining a subsidy from some source. British interests in the Abyssinian Railway, says The Times, are larger than is generally known. They include contracts with the French Railway Company, by which the company is bound not to enter into financial arrangements without the concurrence of the British capitalists, who enabled it to finish the line to its present point. British capital also controls the sole rights of the construction of future extensions of the line.

AS A WORLD POWER BRITAIN IS SUPREME

Her Influence Greater Now Than Ever Before in Her History.

THE THREATENED INDIA A MYTH

The Empire is Everywhere Alive and Secure—The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty Was Due to South Africa.

London, Jan. 20.—Herr Max Nordau says that the continental prophets of evil greatly exaggerate the prejudice which England has suffered in her interests as a world power by the war. During the past two years England has done nothing and has left nothing undone which would not have been done or left undone without the Transvaal war. She played a leading part in China. The sphere of influence she has reserved for herself has been respected by all the other Powers. She did not prevent the Russians from establishing themselves in Manchuria, but it is very doubtful whether she ever intended to do so. She has not permitted Koweyt to fall under foreign control. She keeps a vigilant eye on her interests in Afghanistan, and there are no signs of Abdurrahaman's successor being more accessible to Russian influence than was his father. Many influential Russian politicians still have a sufficiently high opinion of England's importance in the world to seek, non-officially and, perhaps, even otherwise, an agreement, if not an alliance, with England. They even resort, as a means of pressure, to the threat of an invasion of India, which Herr Max Nordau thinks is not very clever and makes little impression in England. He declares that the concession made to the United States in connection with the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty was not due to events in South Africa. It was rather a consequence of England's new political doctrine, which consists in conciliating her mighty cousin across the ocean by every available means and in excluding from the domain of political possibilities a hostile encounter with him. The British world empire, Greater Britain, has not been shaken by the tremendous efforts required by the Transvaal war. It has, on the contrary, been strengthened. Herr Nordau speaks of the devotion shown by Canada and Australia, which are practically independent, to the Mother country, between whom and themselves there are historical and racial ties that form a stronger bond of union than any written laws or constitution. Finally, the writer says that the attitude of the colonies was not dictated by any material interest, but simply by that sentimental affection of a child for a beloved parent, at which conscious politicians sneer.

MONEY TO GO FOR CHARITABLE PURPOSES

Australians at a Mass Meeting Rose and Applauded the Mention of the Loyalty of This Dominion

London, Jan. 20.—A despatch from Wellington, New Zealand, to the Times that a patriotic meeting, attended by thousands of persons, has passed a resolution approving Great Britain's conduct of the war in South Africa and Chamberlain's refutation of foreign slanders. The mention of Chamberlain's name evoked cheers, and at the reference to "Noble, loyal Canada" the people rose and cheered.

J. G. Henderson writes the Times offering to pay £10,000 if the charges of inhumanity on the part of British troops in the South African war be proved within six months. Treasurers of four London hospitals are named as arbiters. If Henderson loses, half the money is to go to hospitals in London, the rest to be divided between hospitals of Paris, Berlin, Brussels, and Amsterdam.

POULTRY SHOW

Promises to be a Grand Success this Year—A Large Number of Entries In

The annual exhibition of the Peterborough Poultry and Pet Stock Association opens to-morrow in the market building. There are over 700 entries already in the hands of the secretary, and this should be a guarantee of a first-class show. The building will be open to the public at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon and will be open to the public on Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

Mr. A. E. Silverwood, one of the best authorities on poultry raising, will give an address on "Poultry, from the purchaser's standpoint," to-morrow evening, and on Wednesday afternoon will speak on Poultry raising, from the breeder's standpoint." These addresses will be delivered in the market building, and should be well attended.

The association have purchased a large number of new coops and as they are of the most approved pattern, the visitors will have a much better opportunity to see the exhibits than heretofore. The entry list contains the names of a large number of the best poultry raisers and breeders in Ontario, and their exhibits will begin to arrive this afternoon and will be placed in their allotted coops at once. The exhibition should be attended by every person in the district, as this show promises to be second to none in Ontario.

ONTARIO'S LUMBER OUTPUT

It is Estimated That it Will Be Larger Than For Years.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.— The output of pine logs in the lumber woods of Ontario, according to estimates received by the Department of Crown Lands from the timber inspectors, will be 800,000,000 feet board measure. This is the largest in years. Last year the quantity was estimated at 700,000,000 feet, but was actually 621,000,000 feet, the difference being doubtless due in part to the scare occasioned by smallpox. The chief interest this year are 50,000,000 in each of the Webbwood and Sault Ste. Marie Districts. The cut of square timber this year is estimated at 906,000 cubic feet. The wages in the lumber woods range from $25 to $30 per month with board, which is higher than usual.

BILLBOARD ADVERTISEMENT.

Railways Will Do Away With It and Take Space in Papers.

Mr. M. C. Dickson, the popular District Passenger Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, told The Times the other day that his company were increasing their newspaper advertising as they found it [illegible] profitable.

It is also understood that in 1902 the railroads will cut down on back fence and billboard advertising and expend the amount saved and more in taking more space in daily and weekly publications and periodicals.

Advertising is becoming a sort of exact science with the railroads, and the cry for economy in railroading has reached the advertising department and yet the appropriations for the department are being constantly increased. This means that more care will be taken, said a railroad man yesterday, in selecting advertising mediums.

Just a Cold in the Head

But if followed by another cold, or some extra exposure, is liable to result in Nasal Catarrh. Unless a radical cure is obtained, the Throat, Bronchial tubes and finally the lungs become affected. Nothing cures colds so quickly and pleasantly as Catarrhozone. The Inspector of Mines for Nova Scotia, Mr. Neville, says, "Catarrhozone is the best remedy I have ever used. It cured me of Catarrh of the Head and Throat, and I am pleased to recommend such a satisfactory remedy." Catarrhozone is a safeguard against Colds, Coughs and Catarrh. It can be used while at work, in the church, theatre, or street cars. Simply inhale Catarrhozone and it cures. Price, $1.00. Small size, 25 cents. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

KENTUCKY MOB'S ATTACK

An Unsuccessful Attempt to Lynch a Negro

At Dawn Would-be Lynchers Fearing Identification, Disappear—More Trouble Being Feared. Governor Beckham Sends Militia to Flemingsburg.

Maysville, Ky., Jan. 20—A mob attacked the jail at Flemingsburg, near here, before daylight to-day in an endeavor to secure Charles Gaskins, colored, who is charged with killing James Ryan, the son of Officer Ryan, of Flemingsburg, last summer. Gaskins had been confined in the Newport jail ever since the crime, but was removed to Flemingsburg yesterday, his trial having been set in the Circuit Court there. Every precaution had been taken to prevent his seizure. An additional number of deputies had been sworn in, and were stationed about the jail. The Sheriff refused the demand of the mob to deliver the prisoner, and immediately the determined men broke windows in the jail to effect an entrance, but were unsuccessful. Finally dynamite was used. A cartridge of the explosive was thrown, but it fell short. One of the guards ran to secure it, and was shot and seriously wounded by the mob. At dawn, the would-be lynchers, fearing identification disappeared and the guards have been doubled.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 20 —Governor Beckham to-day ordered the Frankfort military company and a detail of the Lexington Battery to Flemingsburg to protect the negro there, against whom an attempt at lynching was made early to-day. The battery will be equipped with a Gatling gun. The troops are in command of Assistant Adjutant General Haley.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 20, 1902

The application of a Mrs. Fitzsimmons to have her name changed by the courts, because she has been "reliably informed that there is a notorious pugilist character of the same name," shows how fleeting a thing is fame.

Now that they talk of getting Lieut. Hobson into politics, there will be another naval hero to be demolished. He has tried his hand as a bottler of fleets, a champion osculatist, and the discoverer of what Dewey didn't do. Now he wants to risk himself in politics. Perhaps it's Hobson's choice.

His Majesty has introduced a most economical fashion. Black frock coats with deep velvet cuffs are to be the vogue. Many a fringy-sleeved garment will now be resurrected and adorned with new velvet cuffs. Now, if it could only become the "correct caper" to have velvet cuffs on trousers legs, what mirrors of fashion some of the gentlemen who decorate our public squares in summer would become.

The British M.P. receives no remuneration, but he is liable to be called upon to pay up and look pleasant just as much as one of the remunerated ones of this continent. Mr. Grenfel, M.P. for South Bucks, recently told his supporters something of the financial demands made upon him. The football, cricket and similar clubs regarded him as fit meat, while countless institutions gave him the privilege of contributing to their support. He recently had the happiness of learning he had been unanimously chosen president of a ping-pong club. Thus, as La Rochefoucauld tells us, good or bad fortune generally pursues those who have the greatest share of either. The prosperous man seems as a magnet to attract prosperity, or in the vernacular, "Them as has, gits."

A Scientist's Grim Discovery.

Dr. Casagrandi, in reading a paper before a medical association in Rome, stated that he had employed a number of women wearing long skirts to walk for one hour through the streets of the city, and, after the promenade was over, he had taken these skirts and had them submitted to a very careful bacteriologic examination. There were found on every skirt large colonies of noxious germs, including those of typhoid fever, consumption, influenza and tetanus (or lock-jaw). Numerous other bacilli were likewise well represented on each skirt. Dr. Casagrandi maintained that, in view of these facts, women, and especially mothers, should at once discontinue wearing trailing skirts, and other members of the Medical Congress unhesitatingly expressed the same opinion, and passed resolutions to that effect. That women should subject themselves to the filth, to say nothing of the possible dangers of trailing gowns, has long been a wonder to those acquainted with bacteriology. Nevertheless, so long as fashion calls for long skirts, no reform can be expected, for the great majority of women are bound to be in the fashion regardless of any ordinary considerations. There is some encouragement, however, in the fact that many of the younger women of the present wear their golf and bicycle skirts throughout the day, and merely dress for dinner and the evening.

Presentation to Ashburnham Public School

Mr. J. W. Garvin, B.A., one of the newly-elected school trustees in the village, has presented to Ashburnham Public School, through the School Board, a very handsome set of "Canada, an Encyclopedia of the Country," in five large volumes.

This work is prepared by a corps of eminent writers and specialists, and is edited by J. Castell Hopkins, the author of several well-written books.

The school is to be congratulated on securing such an excellent work of reference for the pupils and teachers, and the hearty thanks of all concerned are due and tendered to Mr. Garvin for his [illegible] and public-spiritedness, that [illegible] [illegible].

Keep to the Point.

It was once remarked by Professor Huxley, after falling into an indiscretion which annoyed him, that when a man says what he has no need to say he is sure to blunder. The truth of the observation will hardly be questioned unless by the very few, if there are any such, who never say more than there is necessity for saying. Most of us acknowledge, if we review our own experience in the matter, that we have frequently erred by saying what needed not to be said. But why is it that people so persistently commit this mistake? In the ordinary small talk of the household, or of society, it matters little whether it is committed or not. But when serious matters are in question, whether in conversation, in set speech, or in correspondence, a case is frequently spoiled by irrelevance or redundance. To say what you mean to say is comparatively easy; to leave off when you have said it is difficult, and for many people impossible. In Huxley's case the fault, which he probably did not often commit, was due neither to want of clear thinking, nor to want of facility in the use of words. One or the other or both of these causes will explain the inability to "keep to the point" which is usually apparent in the speech and writing of uneducated persons. But often, also, the speaker or writer forgets that extraneous considerations, interesting enough to himself, are of no interest to those whom he wishes to convince.

Anthony Hope and His Mother.

An American author who has recently returned from London, where he came much in contact with Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, tells this anecdote illustrating one of the most charming personal traits of the famous novelist.

Mr. Hawkins has private apartments in Buckingham street, next door to the house in which William Black lived for many years. This place is about a mile from the parish house occupied by the author's father, who is a rector of the Established Church. The constant coming and going of parishioners at the old home made it impossible for the novelist to enjoy the privacy and immunity from interruption necessary to the prosecution of his literary labors, and compelled him to find a working-place away from his parents' house.

He had just entered into the full enjoyment of this arrangement when he discovered that his absence from the family roof was a source of keen anxiety to his mother, who could not bring herself to relinquish her motherly solicitude for the comfort of her son. She was in constant fear that he was not properly cared for, and spent many wakeful hours at night worrying over him.

Immediately on learning of her anxiety the son asked permission to spend his nights in his old room under the family roof, using his apartments in Buckingham street simply as a place in which to do his work. Every night, and often at great inconvenience, he returns to the parish house, solely to insure the peace of mind of his mother, who is now well advanced in years.

Affection of a Beaver.

A beaver dying of a broken heart! That sounds incredible enough, to be sure, yet one famous beaver, owned by W. J. Broderip, the naturalist, actually pined away in homesickness for his absent keeper. Binney, as this tender-hearted little fellow was called, was a great pet in the household, Mr. Broderip tells us in his "Leaves from the Note Book of a Naturalist," and he had not been long in his London home when he set about building a dam for himself in the city house as cheerfully as if he had been in his native haunts.

Plenty of dainty titbits from the kitchen found their way to Binney through the hands of the housekeeper who took great interest in him, and speedily won his affection. He showed his devotion to her in many pretty and amusing ways. At last, on the removal of his master from town he was taken to the Tower of London, and put in commodious quarters, under the care of a kind attendant. Everything was done to make Binney happy, but he lost all appetite and took no interest in his surroundings. Sweetmeats were brought, but he would not touch them, and only grew daily thinner and weaker. At last the attendant, in despair, took Binney back to the housekeeper with whom he had lived since the earliest days of his captivity. At sight of her the little creature gave a cry of delight, and dragged himself to her side. But it was too late to restore his former health and spirits. He died within a few days, much to the grief of all his friends.

Reincarnation Defined.

The doctrine of reincarnation, along with Karma and other Oriental hypotheses relating to the spiritual life, has attracted much attention in the Occident of late years, and, as now appears, it has even become a subject of discussion among the Dutch Jews. The Bombay "Guardian" gives a dialogue on "transmigration" of souls, between two gentlemen of this nationality. As the doctrine is often found to be a difficult one for Western comprehension, we give the "Guardian's" report of the conversation, which has the merit of being at least a clear statement: Strauss—O, say, Mishter Isaacs, vot new dochtrine ish dis I hear? Dey call it tdrampsemikrashun. Isaacs — O, tdrampsemikrashun, tdrampsemikrashun; you not know vot dot is? Strauss—No, und I hears very much about it sometimes now. Isaacs—Vell! Vell! I soon dtell you vot tdrampsemikrashun is. It is dis vay. You are now Strauss. Some day you dies, und den your soul or spirit goes into a tdonkey. Den some mornin' I gets up und I valks oudt early down ve vay, und I meets dot tdonkey, und it (you) brays und brays, und says, "Mishter Isaacs! Mishter Isaacs!" Und I says, "Vy, who are you? I tdon't know you." Und you says, "Vy Mr. Isaacs, you tdon't know me? Vy, I am Strauss!" Und I says, "Vot, you Strauss? No! No! Vy you are a tdonkey." Und you says, "No, no; I am Strauss, but I have chust been tdrampsemikrated." Then I sthrokes your long ears, und pats you big cheek, und I says: "Vell, vell, now, Strauss; is dis dou? Vy, how little you have changed!" Tdot is de tdrampsemikrashun doctrine."

Fire! Fire!!

When that cry sounds how people rush to help and sympathize! And when some fireman rescues a woman from the flames, the streets echo with applauding shouts.

And yet if that woman had perished in the flames it is possible that she would have suffered less than she suffers almost daily from the inflammation which disease has lighted in the delicate womanly organism.

That fire of inflammation can be put out. The gnawing ulcer can be cured. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription not only establishes womanly regularity and dries enfeebling drains, but it heals inflammation and ulcerations and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"I suffered for four years with what four physicians pronounced ulceration and prolapsus of the uterus," writes Mrs. Ada Brooks, of Kirbyville, Taney Co., Missouri. "Also inflammation of bladder and urethra. My case was chronic and complicated. Had several good physicians, but kept getting worse. Had been confined to my bed five months when I wrote to you. I received your reply very soon and then dismissed my physician and began taking Dr. Pierce's medicines. I took eight bottles of his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and began to get better at once. In two months I could sit up in a chair, and kept getting better. In four months could do all my house work including washing and sewing."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mexican Girls.

Much has been written of the beauty of the senoritas of Mexico. Many a tourist goes there with exalted ideas of the charms of the high-caste young women with raven hair, soft olive complexions and bewitching eyes. Evidently the charms of that matchlessly balmy climate and the wonderful picturesqueness of scenes everywhere have blurred the critical vision of many of the writers, and as a result they dwell upon the beauty of the senoritas. However, according to one Mexican correspondent, the beauties are by no means plentiful. "A large part of the Mexican young women have prominent, heavy noses. This characteristic is more noticeable among the people in the rural pueblos in the valleys. From fourteen to twenty, most senoritas are in their prime so far as facial beauty is concerned. From twenty to thirty the dark pigment in their complexion develops rapidly, and nine out of ten of them ruin the softness of their complexions by inordinate use of the cosmetics and face washes which comprise a surprisingly large proportion of the national imports from Europe and the United States. There is no denying that the eyes of the average Mexican girl, except in the lowest classes, have a peculiar mildness. The long, heavy eyelashes over the dark eyes give an expression of seriousness and pathos that one never forgets. The hair of the senorita is seldom fine and fluffy. All the women in the peon class deck their coarse hair squarely across the forehead, while the young women of the upper class deck their foreheads with an infinite lot of frizzes and intricate mazes of finely spun curls. A curious fact is that some of the old families in Mexico have followed a fashion in hair arrangement, characteristic of the particular family, for several generations. For instance, there is the rich and powerful Yorba family of Chihuahua. Every woman in the family for more than one hundred years has frizzed, curled and plastered her hair after the style Grandma Yorba (a famous belle in her day and an acquaintance of old Queen Mercedes) adopted in the last days of Spanish dominion over Mexico. The exquisite black-lace mantilla shading the eyes, the high comb, and the coral and pearl jewelry become a senorita more than they would any other woman in the world. Perhaps it is the oddness of these graceful charms that has won the general praise of so many visitors to Old Mexico. The senorita at the opera, with her coquettish fan, her beribboned hat, and her gorgeously colored silken gowns, looks very attractive, but at close range only a few of the women have the freshness, the vigor and the clear-cut, refined expressions of American young women of like station."

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

What was that she was thinking — Katharine Brereton! Alas, poor wretch! for one moment she had forgotten that she had no longer a right to that name — she, another man's wife! She looked about her in a blind, wild way, as if seeking for some escape, some path that would take her from this last awful trouble and lead her to peace.

"Dearest, what is it?" Ormande asked, eagerly. "Do you doubt me? —do you think I am deceiving you? Katharine, you will not wrong me like that, will you, dear? Oh, if I could but find words strong enough in which to speak of my love!"

"Katharine! —Katharine!" he implored, suddenly, his voice growing hoarse with agitation. "You will not send me away without a kind word; you will give me one tiny little word of hope! Only one, dear —only one!"

His weakness gave her strength.

As his voice faltered and his eyes fell, a shiver went through Katharine and she felt a pain come into her heart beside which all other pains were as nothing; it was a dull, remorseful ache, like the pang that comes when one wounds an animal that has served one faithfully. She had felt it only once before, on the first night of her arrival at Brexley, when she suddenly recalled that she had flung away his gift of roses, to have their tender beauty crushed beneath the wheels of a passing train.

Ormande's misty eyes were fixed on her white face. For one instant she paused; the next she was prepared to tear out her heart, and stamp out its life-blood carefully and completely.

"I cannot tell you how grieved I am, Lord Otway, at what has just occurred, believe me." She moistened her pale lips. "Believe me, if—if I guessed it for one instant, I should have taken great care to prevent you from being exposed to the pain I am compelled to —to give you to-night. I——"

Ormande broke in suddenly.

"Do not bandy fine words!" he cried out, with a fierceness that was foreign to his nature. "I cannot bear it. Tell me, Katharine, honestly, straightforwardly, is —is there any hope for me?"

She grew, if possible, a shade paler in the pause that followed, then drawing up her head quietly, with an effort that was almost maddening, she answered him:

"There is none!" she said, coldly and curtly.

"None!" He echoed the word hopelessly, miserably. "None!"

His arms fell to his sides heavily. He seemed changed from a bright, radiant boy to an old, worn and trouble-laden man. Katharine checked the cry of agony that almost broke from her lips. Oh, to be free to grasp this treasured happiness for one brief moment; to stretch out her hands and be drawn into that close tender, strong embrace. She felt as if she would gladly die held in his arms, and pressed to his great, noble heart.

Surely, surely her cup of sorrow was full now— full to the brim. What grief could equal this last one? Hitherto her pain had been for herself alone, but now he was drawn into it. He must suffer, too, this generous, gentle, brave man who was so dear to her, so very dear!

If she could only spare him! If she could temper the blow! Open her heart and confess all the misery it sheltered there. For a moment she wavered, he would see that she was not cruel, and that she, too, was given a heart as warm, as capable of loving, as his own. Should she not do this? —if his love was denied to her, might she not have his comfort, his soothing friendship?

Even as this thought was born, Katharine killed it. Friendship between Ormande and herself could never be. She must not, she dared not tempt him so much! She felt that it would be more than human nature could stand, and Katharine loved him so deeply, too well to let him imperil his honor for her sake.

She was growing very weak, her limbs weary from fatigue and ill-health, were trembling under her. Ormande had turned away and, leaning against a tree, had buried his face in his hands.

A broken sob burst from Katharine's overcharged heart. Why —why should Heaven be so harsh to her? Let the suffering rest on her head if it would but let him at least be spared.

The sound of distant voices laughing and singing came to her ears on the faint evening breeze. They rang the knell to Katharine's brief, sad love dream.

"Lord Otway," she said, striving to make her tones steady as well as clear, "I want you to —to forgive me for being the cause of this pain. I want you to tell me that you forgive me, and —and that you will try and forget it all as soon as you can."

Ormande turned to her suddenly.

"Forgive you, dear? Oh, yes, yes!" he said, brokenly; "but forget —that is another thing, Katharine. Forgetfulness does not come for the asking, and the blow has struck too deep to be easily effaced."

"Oh, I am sorry, I am sorry!" he heard her whisper wretchedly to herself. "If I had only known; but I never dreamed of —of this."

The young man's tender heart went out to her; there was such a bitter wail in the words, such a sense of despair in her attitude.

"You have nothing to blame yourself with, dear. Heaven knows that. If —if I have been a fool, well, I have myself to thank for it; it serves me right. Why should you love me? —you, so beautiful, so proud, so——"

"Stop! Oh! in Heaven's name, stop!" she broke in, her voice choked and thick.

"Katharine!" Ormande put his hands on her shoulders, and stooping, looked into her face; "Katharine, take care! I—I begin to think that you do not hate me, that —it may be presumptuous of me, Katharine" —he spoke hurriedly, his tones thrilling her to the heart, "but" —he ceased, stood upright, and paused for an instant, then very quietly he said: —"Answer me truly, Katharine; do you love me, or do you not?"

She faltered one instant, then rearing her head she looked him direct in the eyes.

"I cannot love you," she answered very slowly and distinctly. "I cannot. I—I am not free!"

Ormande started as though he had been shot; his blue eyes fixed themselves in an agony of despair on her face; and Katharine, feeling that she could bear it no longer, pulled her cloak about her and without another word or look, turned away from him into the dark shadows of the trees.

As she moved on in a blind, mechanical fashion, she felt the collie push his nose into her hand, and she looked down at the dog.

"Go back to him, Dan," she said, in a hard, dry voice. "Go back to him, for— for he is all alone and needs you," and as if understanding her, the dog trotted back into the moonlight, and then stood hesitating and shivering beside the young man's prostrate form as he lay prone on the ground, weeping out his sorrow.

And overhead the moon shone down with its placid silvery light, and the trees rustled as though murmuring regrets over two broken young hearts and two blighted lives.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The next morning, as Miss Mostyn was in the hands of her maids, there came a most annoying piece of intelligence, brought by Mrs. Trevanion, that Miss Brereton was too ill to leave her bed.

"And you have come to me direct from her, I suppose, Aunt Mildred?" Barbara cried in alarm. "Olympe, give me that toilet vinegar. It is sure to be a fever, or some other horrible infectious thing; please don't come so close to me, Aunt Mildred!"

Mrs. Trevanion hastened to assure her sweet Barbara that she had not been near Miss Brereton, or even Miss Brereton's room.

"And you must not be alarmed," she said, in great trepidation; "Parsons has seen her, and tells me it is only an attack of rheumatism, or something of the sort. Really, I must say, dearest, Miss Brereton seems a very impossible young person; if you would be wise, Barbara, you would send her about her business at once!"

Miss Mostyn sniffed at her strong smelling salts for a moment, then opened her eyes.

"When I want your advice, Aunt Mildred, I will ask for it," she observed, curtly.

"Is she going to spoil all my plans?" she thought, and then minced away on her high heels to that part of the house in which Miss Brereton was located.

There was no answer to her sharp tap at the door, and turning the handle unceremoniously, Barbara walked in.

Katharine was lying on the pillows, perfectly rigid and still; her beautiful hair was unbound and was thrown in careless luxuriance away from her. She was deathly pale, save for the deep black marks that encircled her closed eyes.

In her nervousness and selfishness, Barbara hesitated to approach the bed; it seemed to her as though it was the face of a dead woman she saw. But while she was thinking of this, the long, dark eyelashes were raised, and Katharine's eyes met hers. Barbara frowned for a moment. Despite the pallor, the unmistakable marks of suffering, Katharine's face was as supremely lovely as ever; and knowing this, Barbara's jealous hatred swelled still more in her breast.

"They tell me you are ill," she said, without in the least modulating her high, clear voice. "I hope it is nothing serious."

All traces of her brief sympathy and kindliness had disappeared. Katharine, ill as she was, saw that; she felt that she would get no pity from this girl or receive any friendly attention.

She struggled to raise her head from the pillow.

"It is nothing much—a cold," she murmured, and the hoarseness in her tones bore testimony to the truth of the last assertion. "I— I shall be better in an hour."

"I am sure I hope so," Miss Mostyn observed curtly, "for there is a great deal to be done here before to-morrow. Really I think Lady Drummond should have ascertained the condition of your health before engaging you, but Aunt Ellen is always so impetuous."

Katharine drew her breath with something like a sigh.

"I—I am afraid I do not please you," she said, humbly and weakly. "I had better go away."

"Oh, we settled all that yesterday," Barbara said, stretching her thin lips into a semblance of a smile. She was looking about her with sharp, quick eyes to discover anything that might go to strengthen the suspicion that had come into her mind. "If you can't get up, you can't, and so there is an end to the matter. I need not tell you how very inconvenient this is, coming to-day of all days, but I presume you would not be ill if you could help it. I will leave these letters on the table for you to answer if you can, in an hour's time, and please let me know when they are done."

And with that, Barbara walked out of the room, closing the door behind her with a sharp bang.

As Miss Mostyn entered the large breakfast room, she discovered Lord Otway there alone, standing by one of windows. His face looked strangely worn and pale; there was an air of misery over it which had completely changed it.

He greeted Barbara with a smile, and then went on to say that a most unfortunate circumstance had occurred to cut short his visit, and call him back to town.

Barbara's heart stood still for a moment.

"What, go away before my birthday, Lord Otway? No, no, I cannot allow it!"

Ormande's eyes were fixed on the sunlit trees outside.

"I'm afraid I have no choice, Miss Mostyn. I really ought to have been back at work last week. I—I must go now."

"But you only came yesterday, and then you told me you should stay several days. Has anything happened since then?"

Barbara put the question almost innocently. At once she had guessed the truth— something had occurred between Katharine and him; and Ormande answered her hurriedly:

"Yes, something has happened. Miss Mostyn, and I must go."

"Oh, dear!" Barbara sat down mournfully. "There is going to be nothing but disappointment, and I did hope it would have been such a pleasant time. You going away so hurriedly, and there is my dear Miss Brereton upstairs so dreadfully ill, I am quite alarmed about her."

The shot told. Ormande started, and she saw one of his hands clutch the stout window frame, while his face faded into a greater pallor.

"Miss— Miss Brereton ill!" he said, speaking as well as his agitation would let him. "I—I——" he could get no further.

"Oh, it is nothing infectious," Barbara answered blandly. "I have just come from her. It is only a very bad cold and rheumatism. I knew you would be sorry, Lord Otway, you have such a kind heart, and are always so sympathetic to people in her position of life." She was watching him keenly all the time, though apparently she was occupied in culling for herself a small bouquet of roses from the branches of the creeper that nodded in at the windows.

Ormande said nothing. For the life of him he could not speak.

Katharine was ill, that was all he could think of. Katharine, his beautiful Katharine, the queen of his his dreams, the love of his whole heart, ill, ill, and suffering alone, and he must know this and do nothing; it completely unnerved him. Hope had died in his breast during the long night hours; it was crushed down, never to rise again; how could he let it live with the memory of those last words ringing in his ears?

"I cannot love you; I cannot — I am not free!"

But though hope was dead, his love lived stronger than ever.

He forgot his own suffering to remember hers. The look of agony on her dear, sweet face as he beheld it last night rushed to his mind once more. If —if only he might be allowed to comfort her, to give her help with this burden of love that was weighing her down.

Barbara watched him intently.

"How he loves her!" she said to herself, with bitter mortification and venom. "He thinks her an angel of beauty and purity. I must destroy that conclusion. He shall not go away till he has seen of what clay his idol is made. Then, —then" — Barbara picked a rose to pieces with thin, hard fingers —"then he must learn to turn to me for sympathy. He is so simple I think I shall be able to manage him. Now, if everything turns as I have planned, I may yet hold the trump card in my hand," and while she was thinking this swiftly to herself, she was speaking in what seemed gentle, womanly accents to Ormande about Katharine.

"Do you know Lord Otway, I have wanted to discuss her with you ever since I knew you were coming. I am so distressed about her. She is not happy. Oh, no, no! she is not happy. She seems to me"— Barbara pronounced each word distinctly —"as if she had some great secret on her mind, something she was afraid of, herself I wish" —Barbara picked another rose —"I wish that you in your capacity as clergyman would try and comfort her a little. I am sure——"

But Ormande broke in sharply.

"It is impossible," he said, shrinking from so great a temptation as seeing and speaking to Katharine again. "Miss Brereton would resent my interference, and rightly, too."

"But you, yourself, see that she is unhappy, poor girl. I long to do something for her. She is so sad, yet you think her beautiful, Lord Otway, don't you?"

Ormande passed one hand over his blue eyes, that had lost their joyous radiance.

"Yes," he said, quietly; "she is most beautiful. Poor child!"

"Ah! how glad I am to hear you say that! I wanted to rouse your interest in her so much, dear Lord Otway!" —indeed, there was quite a flush of excitement on Barbara's cheeks —"I want her to make a friend of me —to confide in me. It is strange and sad that one so young as she should look as she does."

Ormande felt, he scarcely knew why, uneasy. There was much apparent sympathy and interest in Miss Mostyn's manner, but somehow it did not ring true in his ears.

He was loyal to his darling.

"You forget that Miss Brereton has been very ill; her accident was naturally a blow to her nerves, and now——"

"Her accident! Oh, did she tell you about it? She is always so reticent with me." Barbara was feverishly eager to know all he knew. "How did it happen?"

Lord Otway looked at her in surprise.

"Miss Brereton is the lady whom I was fortunate enough to assist one afternoon at Northminster Station. You may remember, Miss Mostyn, it was the day I went to find your tennis racket."

Barbara bit her lip suddenly. Remember— aye, that she did, right well!

So it was Katharine she had to thank all along for her disappointment and neglect while she was at Maple Tree House; she who had come forward suddenly to be the barrier in the path that was to lead to the glories of Thane Castle; she who was the cause of all the failure. If Barbara had hated Katharine before, she positively loathed her now; her ears buzzed with the hot blood that rushed into her brain. She was conscious of only one desire —to be revenged; to see Katharine dragged down to utter misery and destitution her charms gone, her beauty destroyed —nothing of that pure, sweet loveliness left; and in that moment she swore that if mortal hands could do this, she would do it. She forced herself to smile as she answered Lord Otway.

"Indeed! —this is a surprise! Miss Brereton did not mention it to me. Oh, then I need not enlist your sympathies on her account; of course, you gave them long ago!"

"You —you will not go to-day. Promise me that you will not. I want you so badly!" she sank her voice coaxingly. "I want you to stay and help me in my anxiety about Katharine."

Ormande hesitated only a moment, but the blood had surged into his veins and his heart had thrilled at that name. What would he not have done for Katharine's sake? Who knew but that he might be able to give her some comfort in her trouble? and even that poor consolation was as joy to his hopeless, longing heart.

The letters Miss Mostyn had left in her companion's room were all ready and finished before lunch time.

Patty carried them downstairs and met Miss Mostyn on her way.

"Tell Miss Brereton I require her in the library this afternoon," she said, curtly, to the girl, and passed on.

Patty looked after her with much indignation.

The House of Rothschild.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN is not generally regarded as a very important financial center, but for more than a century it has been the headquarters of the foremost banking-house of modern times—the Rothschilds. It was in this city that the great establishment had its modest beginning, and since rising to affluence and power and extending its operations to all parts of the globe, the ancient seat has never been abandoned. The following facts regarding the origin and development of the Rothschild house are taken from the August issue of the "Bankers' Magazine:"

The founder of the house was Mayer Anselm (1743-1812), the son of Anselm Moses Bauer, a small Jewish merchant of Frankfort-on-the-Main. His father wished him to become a rabbi, but he preferred business, and ultimately set up as a money-lender at the sign of the "Red Shield" (Rothschild) in the Frankfort Judengasse. He negotiated his first great government loan with Denmark in 1802, and his transactions on behalf of William, Elector of Hesse-Cassel, were so profitable that when he died ten years later he was a very wealthy man. He left behind him five sons, and branches of the business were established in Vienna, London, Paris and Naples, each being in charge of one of the sons.

The third of these brothers, Nathan Mayer, has generally been regarded as the financial genius of the family and the chief originator of the transactions which have created for the house its unexampled position in the financial world. He came to Manchester about 1800 to act as a purchaser of manufactured goods for his father; but at the end of five years he removed to London, where he found full scope for his financial genius. The boldness and skill of his transactions, which caused him at first to be regarded as rash and unsafe by the leading banking firms and financial merchants, latterly awakened their admiration and envy. By the employment of carrier-pigeons and fast-sailing boats of his own for the transmission of news, he was able to utilise to the best advantage his special sources of information, while no one was a greater adept in the art of promoting the rise and fall of the stocks.

The colossal influence of the house dates from an operation of his in 1810. In that year Wellington made some drafts which the English Government could not meet; these were purchased by Rothschild at a liberal discount, and renewed to the Government, which finally redeemed at par. From this time the house became associated with the allied powers in the struggle against Napoleon. It being chiefly through it that they were able to negotiate loans to carry on the war. Rothschild never lost faith in the ultimate overthrow of Napoleon, his all being virtually staked on the issue of the contest. He is said to have been present at the Battle of Waterloo, and to have watched the varying fortunes of the day with feverish eagerness. Being able to transmit to London private information of the allied success several hours before it reached the public, he secured an immense profit by the purchase of stock, which had been greatly depressed on account of the news of Blucher's defeat two days previous.

Rothschild was the first to popularise foreign loans in Britain by fixing the rate in sterling money and making the dividends payable in London and not in foreign capitals. Latterly he became the financial agent of nearly every civilized government. It is said that since 1815 the Rothschilds have raised for Great Britain alone more than $1,000,000,000; for Austria, $250,000,000; for Prussia, $200,000,000; for France, $400,000,000; for Italy, $200,000,000; for Russia, $125,000,000; for Brazil, $70,000,000.

In 1896 they took $15,000,000 of the February loan of the United States through the Belmont-Morgan syndicate.

There are at present living eleven barons of the Rothschild name. Of these Nathaniel, Alfred and Leopold are located in London; Gustav, Edward, Adolphe and James are in Paris, and Nathaniel, a baron of the Austrian Empire, is head of the house in Vienna.

"Maintaining an identity as unchangeable as the Hebrew race to which they belong, and with purposes as inflexible as the ruler of Russia, and a policy as far-seeing as the Church of Rome," says the "Bankers' Magazine," "the Rothschilds have steadily built up the prestige of their name until it now outranks that of any other, while their fortune has grown year by year until it has attained to colossal figures. Those who have a talent for guessing have set the actual sum at two thousand million dollars, but until some member of the firm displays a confidential mood, the correctness of this conjecture must remain unverified. Whatever the amount may be, its vastness is undoubted, and the accumulations of a century and a half are being swelled each hour by innumerable tributes from every quarter of the world."

Why She Quit the 'Phone.

"The young woman employed as a stenographer had a beau named Will, to whom she talked some twenty-five times a day," says the Boston "Record." "The lawyer who labored under the impression that he was paying for the stenographer's time was not pleased that Maggie should drop her work and rush frantically to the telephone every time the bell rang, and stand there for fifteen minutes debating whether or not Will ought to have told Clara that secret which he knew well enough was none of Clara's business. One day the lawyer left his office, and, going to another telephone in the building, called up his own office. Of course Maggie rushed frantically to the 'phone, and answered.

"'Hello,' said the lawyer, in a muffled voice. 'This is a lineman testing the wire. Kindly stand one foot in front of the receiver and say hello.'

"Maggie obeyed.

"'Thank you. Now stand two feet to one side and say hello.'

"Maggie complied.

"'Thank you. Now stand two feet on the other side and say hello.'

"It was done.

"Thank you. Now stand on your head and say hello.'

"Maggie seems to be somewhat backward in answering the telephone now."

Passenger cars (or coaches, as they are usually designated) in early days were simply stage coach bodies mounted on four wheels, and as time progressed several were linked together, thus forming a "train."

Wood pulp paper as military clothing is used by the Japanese troops. It is marvelously tough, and has an appearance that might well be regarded with satisfaction for summer wear. It holds stitching uncommonly well, while its warmth is undoubted.

A Race With a Tiger.

A RACE for life on a bicycle from a man-eating tiger sounds more like a passage from a novel of adventure than it does like an actual event. Yet Monsieur H. Rosny, the noted French author, traveler and sportsman, claims to have taken part in just such a race in the Malay Peninsula. He says:

A bicycle gleaming under a shed caught my eye that first morning at Nieuwenhuys plantation. I could not resist the temptation—I had not ridden since leaving France. So I sped along among the rice and coffee-fields for about six miles, until I found myself in the heart of a forest.

While I was enjoying the beauty of the place there was a crunching of branches, and I became conscious that something massive but light-footed was approaching. Thirty yards from where I sat a tiger had issued from the jungle.

I dared not move a finger. To reach my bicycle I must get to the road. This was impossible without attracting the attention of the brute, and in two leaps he would be upon me.

With extreme nonchalance the tiger at length turned toward the depths of the forest. I could bear it no longer. I tore from my hiding-place, clambered over intervening obstacles, caught the bicycle, and ran alongside, my hands on the handlebar.

In a flash, as I was mounting, I caught sight of the great body crouching for the leap. I heard the tiger at the first bound land not far behind me. In the minute space between the first and second bound I got myself well started and balanced for the struggle.

His fourth bound brought the tiger very near. The next time I felt the wind of his fall. A second later his shoulder or paw touched the tire and made me swerve.

What I no longer feared or even thought of now happened—I lost one pedal, then both. I regained them with some trouble, but on account of the delay a claw once more grazed my rear tire.

At this instant we came to a very narrow bridge—two boards side by side over an irrigation canal. The wheels went over it true as an arrow. The passage must have slightly retarded the awful thing behind me, for although I dared not look behind I felt him to be farther off.

We were now between two fields of bananas. A small tree had been cut and thrown on the road so that it completely barred the way. There was nothing to do but try to go over at top speed. I sailed right in furiously, and although nearly thrown over, I succeeded in recovering my balance—went on, on, reached a smart decline, and rolled down like a cannon-ball. At a turning of the road the plantation buildings came in view.

I cannot say when the tiger abandoned the race. But when I shot amid the group of my friends, fell and scrambled to my feet, completely out of breath and my eyes bulging out, my first instinct was to look around in the expectation of finding the brute at my heels, ready to slay us all.

For a week afterward I ran that race again in day-dreams and awful nightmares; and every time I passed in front of my mirror I saw myself as haggard as a lunatic.

Printers' Blunders.

THERE is a fatality often attending the final stages of the printing of a book or an article. Proof after proof has been corrected with scrupulous care, and there seems nothing more for author or proofreader to do, when a line or word falls out, giving an opportunity for some stupendous blunder in setting things straight. The corrector of the press is sometimes himself responsible for a literary atrocity, when some brilliant flash of stupidity occurs to him too late to be submitted as a query to the poor author. Thus a certain scholar found the Candian vessel, in which he described Beza as voyaging, transformed into the anachronism of a Canadian vessel. Mr. Howells tells us of the agony he suffered at the discovery of a fearful misprint in his "Pilot's Story." The tale is of a young planter who has gambled away the slave girl who is the mother of his child. She breaks out upon him with the demand

"What will you say to our boy when he cries for me there in St. Louis?"

In this form the line passed the author himself and the first proofreader; but the final reader, evidently a pronounced realist, thought it could be improved, and accordingly changed it into:

"What will you say to our boy when he cries for 'Ma,' there in St. Louis?"

The whole edition had been struck off before the enormity was discovered by Mr. Howells himself, who happened to call on the publisher just as the sheets had come in from the printers at Cambridge. Mr. Fields at once decided that the sheet should be reprinted, so Mr. Howells had a hair-breadth escape from a mischance that might have gone far to ruin his career.

The hymnbook of one of the Methodist churches in England is guilty of an outrageous subversion of the moral standard when it attributes to Doctor Isaac Watts the sentiment:

My days of praise shall ne'er be past,
While life and thought and being last.
Or immorality endures.

Mr. William Archer mentions a curious instance of the inveterate persistence of a misquotation from edition to edition of a classic author. He has never come across an edition of the Waverley Novels in which the motto to Chapter XXV. of "The Talisman" did not run thus:

Yet this inconsistency is such
As thou, too, shalt adore;
I could not love thee, love, so much,
Loved I not honor more.
Montrose's Lines.

But the quotation ought to run:

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you, too, shall adore:
I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.
Richard Lovelace.

Obviously, the misquotation was originally due, in part, at least, to Scott himself, but it is impossible to believe that he was responsible for the nonsensical and unmetrical "inconsistency."

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching, Foot Elm can give you wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c. a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to the columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.

—There was no police court on Saturday.

—The sleighing yesterday was very good.

—There was a large market on Saturday.

—The smallpox case in Jackson Park is rapidly convalescing.

—A meeting of the Dan Spence Memorial Committee will be held on Wednesday evening.

—The price of wood still continues high although the amount coming into town is very large.

—The sidewalks are very slippery. On Saturday a number of people received severe falls.

—The Woodmen of the World will give a concert to-morrow evening in their hall.

—St. John's branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to Missions, will hold its regular monthly meeting this afternoon at 3.30 in the Guild room. All members are invited to be present.

—The condition of Judge Weller, is, we are pleased to say, considerably improved, and strong hopes are entertained for his recovery. His many friends hope to see his Honor able to be around in a short time.

Our Douro Friends.

Mr. Wm. Condon, of Douro, who for several years was the agent of The Times in that township, and who added several hundred subscribers to our list, was in town on Saturday and gave us a call. Mr. Condon says that everybody in Douro reads The Times; if any one has any doubt as to this, we can refer them to Mr. Condon.

No Winter Races

After several attempts to organize a winter meet, the matter has been dropped for the present. It is to be regretted that this is the case. Peterborough should have first class annual horse races. There should be a permanent organization to manage this and other similar sports. If such citizens as Messrs. Harry Winch, H. LeBrun, Wm. Croft, Alex Elliott, J. M. Brooks, Martin Connors, Dr. Poole took the matter up, it would be a success.

Fire on Sunday

The fire brigade was called to a fire in rear of the Snowden House about ten o'clock yesterday morning. The fire was located in the back yards in which Mr. Harold Snowden had a fine collection of fowl. The origin of the fire is almost a mystery as Mr. Snowden was in the building about 10 minutes before the fire broke out and everything was all right. The entire flock of poultry were killed by the fire and as they were entered for the Poultry Show and were sure prize winners Harold feels rather discouraged. The carrier pigeons belonging to Mr. Dixon Jewitt were in the same building, and fortunately effected their escape.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE.—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.

—Hon. Senator Cox was in town Saturday.

—Miss Kelly, of town, is visiting friends at Young's Point.

—Miss Myrtle Fitzgerald, of Lakefield, is visiting friends in town.

—Rev. J. P. Wilson preached in Port Hope yesterday.

—Miss Renwick, of Buffalo, is visiting at her home in Ashburnham. She will return to-day.

—Mr. D. D. Galletly was presented with a gold locket by the members of Norwood choir, recently.

—Mrs. Chas. Lyle is in Bowmanville, attending the funeral of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Burden, of that place.

—Mr. P. Costello, of Buffalo, who has been visiting at his home in Lindsay, is renewing acquaintances in town.

—The many friends of Mr. Hubert McBain, who has been ill in Toronto, will be pleased to learn that he is rapidly convalescing.

—Mr. R. Crowe, County Commissioner, is being treated for illness of the stomach at St. Joseph's Hospital. His many friends are feeling very anxious about him.

—Dr. Packenham, a former Peterborough boy, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends on his appointment to Principal of the Technical School, Toronto. For many years Dr. Packenham was registrar of the Educational Council, and chairman of various Educational Boards.

On Saturday, Mr. J. J. Turner, sr. received the news that his mother, who resides in England was seriously ill. Mrs. Turner is a very old lady and the fact of her advanced age is causing the relatives considerable anxiety. Mr. Turner left on the midnight express on Saturday night for Montreal and Halifax from which place he will sail to-day. The many friends of Mr. Turner will wish him a speedy journey and a safe return.

Strangers' Fellowship Tea

At the conclusion of the Men's meeting in the Y.M.C.A. yesterday afternoon, about twenty-four of the young men who are comparative strangers in town assembled by previous invitation to partake of a "Fellowship Tea," given by the Stranger's Fellowship Club of the Association. The object of these functions, of which this was the initial effort, is to bring the stranger young men in contact with one another and to form acquaintances that shall prove pleasant and beneficial to them. By a mutual introductory arrangement each young man learns not only the name of each of the others, but the place from which he hails, his place of employment and his church in Peterborough. The tea last evening, which was given in the rooms of Mr. Lane, was a pronounced success. Mr. J. Manning, President of the Club, presided, and the time intervening between the Men's meeting and church service was pleasantly and profitably spent. It is the intention of the Stranger's Fellowship Club to continue these functions monthly.

NO SUNDAY FUNERALS

The Cemetery Board Has Decided to Forbid Interment on Sunday

At a meeting of the Little Lake Cemetry Board on Friday afternoon it was decided to prohibit Sunday interments unless in extreme cases, and then only by the presentation of a physicians certificate.

Similar action has been taken by a large number of cemetry companies throughout the province.

CHURCH NOTES

Rev. H. Emory of Whitby, preached in the George St. Methodist church yesterday and in the Charlotte St. church in the evening.

Rev. E. B. Lancely, B.A. of Port Hope, preached in the George St. church last night and in the Charlotte St. church in the morning.

At the George St. church the anthem was "Hast Thou Not Known," and in the evening the choir rendered the anthem "O Lord, How Manifold." Miss McCarter rendered a solo "The Plains of Peace" in very fine voice.

Holy Communion was celebrated at All Saints' yesterday morning. Rev. Arthur Murphy preached at both services. In the morning his text was "Manna" and in the evening "The Children of Israel Crossing the Red Sea." In the afternoon Rev. Murphy delivered an address, taking as his subject 'A Foolish Richman.'

The mission services which Rev. Mr. Murphy has been conducting at All Saint's came to a close yesterday.

Collections were taken up at the Methodist Churches yesterday in aid of Educational Institutions.

BLACK AND RICH

Is the Way Postum Coffee Should Be.

A liquid food that will help a person break a bad habit is worth knowing of. The president of one of the state associations of the W.C.T.U., who naturally does not want her name given, writes as follows: "Whenever I was obliged to go without coffee for breakfast a dull, distracting headache would come on before noon. I discovered that, in reality, the nerves were crying out for their accustomed stimulant.

At evening dinner I had been taught by experience that I must refrain from coffee or pass a sleepless night. In the summer of 1900, while visiting a physician and his wife I was served with a most excellent coffee at their dainty and elegant table and, upon inquiry, discovered that this charming beverage was Postum Food Coffee, and that the family had been greatly benefited by leaving off coffee and using Postum.

I was so in love with it, and so pleased with the glimpse of freedom from my one bondage of habit and so thoroughly convinced that I ought to break with my captor, that upon my return home I at once began the use of Postum Food Coffee and have continued it ever since, now more than a year.

I don't know what sick headache is now, and my nerves are steady and I sleep sound generally eight hours regularly. I used to become bilious frequently and require physic, now seldom ever have the experience.

I have learned that long boiling is absolutely essential to furnish good Postum. That makes it clear, black and rich as any Mocha and Java blend. Please withhold my name, but you may use the letter for the good it may do."

TO CONTROL THE WATER.

MEETING OF THOSE INTERESTED IN THE OTONABEE RIVER

The Flow of Water to be Controlled in the Interests of Manufacturers—A Permanent Association to be Formed

A meeting to discuss questions of great importance to the town and manufacturers, was held in the Town Council Chamber on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mayor Denne presided at the meeting and those present were Messrs. Jas. Kendrey, M.P., John Carnegie, T. E. Bradburn, Adam Hall, J. H. Shook, W. A. Scott, J. Kearns, W. H. Meldrum, A. Stevenson, Wm. Irwin, F. Hilliard, W. Henderson, R. R. Hall, John Hull, (Lakefield), J. H. Kilbourn, (Young's Point), R. B. Rogers, Superintending Engineer of the Trent Canal, and Mr. E. H. D. Hall, Town Solicitor.

The principal subject under discussion was the water power of the Otonabee River. The trouble is in regard to the flow of water in the Otonabee river, which it is claimed, has been seriously damaged by the holding back of a large volume of water at the dam at Young's Point. The Cement Company have control of this dam and it appears that they have put in a number of stop logs and consequently lessened the flow of water in the Otonabee river. This has caused a very serious state of affairs at dams where manufacturing concerns rely on the water to obtain power to run their establishments. At Auburn several water wheels had to be stopped as there was not sufficient power to turn them, while at the Waterworks dam the water had fallen three feet in a day or two and this threatened a water famine in the town, and in case of a fire would be seriously hampered.

THE ENGINEER'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Rogers, Superintending Engineer of the Trent Valley Canal, said that the water had been regulated the same as usual up to Thursday, and as Kilbourn had asked for more power for the Cement Works, as the full amount of power required could not be obtained from the amount of water held back, the 30-foot timber slide had been raised, and as a result the flow of water down the river had been decreased. Considerable discussion took place and it was decided to ask the government to assist the town in securing a better flow of water and one that would be sufficient for the purposes required in the town. After further discussion it was decided to form an Association, to be known as the Trent Power Conservation Association for the purpose of furthering all their common interests in the due consideration and control of the waters tributary to the system. A committee, consisting of Mayor Denne, Messrs. Carnegie, Kendrey, Kilbourn, Shook, Scott, and Meldrum be appointed to draft a constitution for such an Association.—Carried.

Mr. A. Stevenson was on motion appointed secretary of the meeting.

The meeting adjourned after some further discussion relative to the Association.

Tons of Paper

The Times' circulation has grown so rapidly that we buy our paper in five and ten ton quantities. The first installment of ten tons reached the storeroom of this great family journal on Friday, and the balance will follow in a few days. The fact is the g.f.j. is being appreciated and read. Its fearless advocacy of what it conceives to be right, is making for it many friends. We hope to continue the good work, and while the influence and power of the paper is increased, we will endeavour to see that it will always be found on the side of Truth and Justice.

Methodist Church Rules.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I noticed a vigorous letter in The Globe a few days ago, regarding the rules governing the Methodist Church. A certain divine is taken severely to task for saying in a sermon that the hard and fast rules of the Methodist Church in relation to amusements, had the effect of keeping the young people out of the church—young people who desired innocent recreation. Another old-time Methodist insists that the rules are right and proper, and that to relax them would be highly dangerous. The Minister replies that the so-called rules are not the rules of John Wesley at all, but of a conference held in the United States, at which a series of rules were rushed through at the last moment. But all the churches are beginning to see that they will have to make concessions if they are to lure the young. Creeds must either receive modification or be ignored altogether. Already we have a revising committee whose duty it is to pronounce the mind of God in the twentieth century in relation to the destiny of the human race! It has been found that the narrow creed of four hundred years ago will not suit the conscience of today, and we proceed to make God over again in the new—for that is what it means. Four hundred years ago there was a certain concept of God in the minds of the Calvinists—a concept which is simply astounding to the modern conscience—a concept which set forth a being [illegible] to us, who "Sent ane to heaven and ten to hell, Ane for his glory."—

an anthropomorphic God who had eternally decreed that only a moiety of the race should be saved, and that the mass should perish, "all for his glory!"

Thanking you Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, I am, &c.

THE
THE
Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau,
Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 5,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No.	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	8 in.	$11 20
1	26½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	31 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	18.00
4	41 in.	15 in.	[illegible]

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 75 feet, with 15 feet ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

The Ferreira Paid a Dividend of 450 Per Cent in 1898 and a 150 Per Cent on Account of 1899 (June), Before War was Declared.

Gold output of Transvaal mines for 1898, 4,555,000 ozs. $76,500,000.

Gold output for Transvaal mines for 1899, (9 months) 4,101,441 ozs., $70,000,000.

A very attractive method which enables the small invester to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust." It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in say five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time. Prices mentioned subject to change:

COMBINATION No. 1.

20 Klerksdorp at £14 9s., $71.90 per cent.	$14 38
20 Witkopje at £15, $73.12, 20 per cent.	14.63
20 Heidelburgs at £19 $92.62, 20 per cent	18 53
20 Salisbury at £1 7s 6d., $ 340, 20 per cent	26 81
20 Buluwayo Exp. at £2, 2s 6d., $207.18	41 44
	$115.79

We shall be pleased to give particulars of other combinations. Write for booklet which will be ready about the end of January.

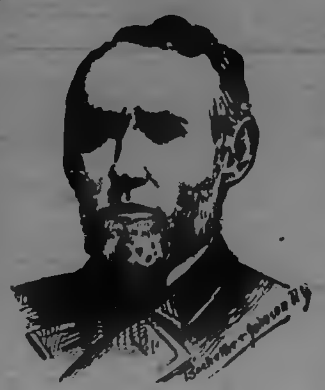
THE PHILLIPINE WAR A BLOT ON UNCLE SAM

A Committee of the U. S. Senate Asked For

The War Said to be a Disgrace to The Country

Washington, Jan. 21—Senator Hoar has introduced a resolution calling for a select committee of enquiry into the war in the Philippines, and the subject has led to animated debate. Senator Lodge protests that it would be a grave "reflection" upon the regular Philippine Committee, of which he is chairman, to go outside of it for investigators. The worthy senator does not want the facts of that inglorious campaign to be inquired into, yet a fearless probing is necessary, both as to the question why the American nation has an army of 60,000 in the islands for the purpose of their subjugation, and what have the army been doing? In his speech Senator Hoar said he had seen with his own eyes a document signed by Gen. Anderson, who was in command of the U.S. troops in the Philippines before Gen. Merritt arrived, in which that officer explicitly states that he promised the Filipinos their independence. This has been hinted at before, but never so explicitly asserted. Mr. Hoar affirms that Gen. Anderson admits "twice over his signature" that such a promise was made. This is a new and most material fact. The country is entitled to know all about it. The question is one of national attitude and national good faith. Besides, it has been bellowed from a thousand stumps that no such promise was ever made by any officer of the United States. Senator Hoar now declares that he has seen written proof (presumably in the War Department) that it was made. This relates to past events, nearly touching the national honor, but there are things going on to-day in the Philippines which, as Senator Hoar says, are "a foul blot on the flag." He speaks of conversations which he has had with "brave soldiers and officers of high rank," who have told him of atrocities committed in the Philippines in the name of the United States. On these things, too, the light should be turned. These military witnesses should be allowed to declare from the housetops what they now only dare to whisper in the ear of Senators. They should be called before a committee in open session, and, under guarantee of complete immunity for any testimony they may give, should be asked to tell the whole country the whole truth. At present they are under the kind of terrorism which necessarily rests upon men in the military service.



SENATOR HOAR.

A letter from Manila, received in this city furnishes a sample of the way the war has been conducted, and the atrocities committed under the flag of the United States. The letter says: "We are having a hot time down here of which no doubt you are well acquainted by this time. I don't know what the papers in the States estimate the loss at, but I will give it to you correctly up to date—65 men, 3 officers killed; wounded 12 officers, 270 men on the American side. But you ought to see what we done to the other fellows. We killed so many that we can't count them. We know that there are 2,000 killed; from that up to 5,000 niggers are laying everywhere. I have just returned from the front, which is nine miles back of Manila. I never will forget the sight I saw. I was out in the fight for five days. * * It is very hard to try to write all that I saw on the battlefield, but I will tell you a few incidents. * * It is a comical sight to see them [illegible] as we advance. We burn all the houses we come to, but make sure that there is nothing worth taking before we burn it. Different boys have found all kinds of jewelry and money, but I have not been fortunate enough to find any yet. As we were advancing on Caloocan a number of our boys were wounded, but after we got in town we killed every native in sight; then burned the town down, all but the church. Another boy and I went into the church and pulled down Christ off his perch, and took his robes, which I have now in my trunk. I am gathering all kind of relics both from the Spanish and Filipino war. Eat! Why, you ought to see the way the boys are living—pigs and chickens all the time, and all they want to drink with what wine they capture. * * What natives that are in Manila, the non-combatants, are very polite to us now, not as before. If they see you coming along the sidewalk, they will get off in the street till you pass. If they don't, we kick them off. You bet, we run the place now. The Tenn. are making a record for themselves. They were bringing in 60 natives as prisoners from the firing line, and when they got in Manila, they had two. The colonel asked where the rest of the men were? They told him they were tired, and stopped to take a rest. About an hour you could see dead niggers floating down the Pasig river, all shot full of wholes. Since the natives cut the officers and two men in pieces, killing a nigger is just like killing a dog. As long as I was in the field I was on an ambulance wagon and saw the fight from one length of the line to the other. I will go to the front again in two days, as I have that time off, and in my next letter I will give you more details of the fight."

These are all the points of public interest, taken from the letter of a member of the Hospital Corps. Such facts whispered into the ear of U.S. Senators may well prompt them to ask for an inquiry by a special commission, to the end that "a foul blot on the flag" might be expunged and removed.

DESPERATE PRISONERS MAKE THEIR ESCAPE

Eleven Convicts on McNeils's Island Dig a Tunnel To the Outside of Their Cell

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 20.—Eleven of the most desperate prisoners in the United States Penitentiary on McNeil's Island, made their escape between 1 and 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and up to a late hour last night were still at liberty. It was the most daring and successful escape ever attempted in this State, and the character of the men implicated makes it doubtful whether they will be retaken without loss of life.

A hole in the brick wall of cell No. 10, occupied by convicts Snyder and Davis, reveals the method of escape. The wall was about a foot in thickness and the floor of the cell is of equal thickness covered with concrete. A tunnel was dug at the junction of the wall and the floor, sloping outwardly until it formed a connection with the air chamber about two feet below and a foot outwardly from the corridor wall of the cell. Through this air chamber the prisoners crawled about forty feet to where it opened into the boiler room, the opening being covered by an iron grating. This obstacle was overcome by the use of saws, and the prisoners had then only to walk out of the back door of the boiler room, across the yard and scale the board fence. A few yards from the prison grounds the dense growth of timber afforded them temporarily a safe retreat.

The prisoners took advantage of the latitude allowed them during the dinner hour to consummate their plans. The guards, with the exception of two who were on duty on the wall overlooking the corridor, were eating dinner in the dining room.

A dinner gang was at work putting the tables in order and the other convicts had the privilege of the corridors. One by one the men slipped into cell No. 10 and crawled through the hole unnoticed. When the guards came out and lined the prisoners up for dinner eleven were missing.

Warden Palmer at once sent a squad of guards in pursuit and made a tour of the island.

With two launches, three row boats, and thirty men guarding the shore-line, it is believed by the officers that if the men were still on the island at 9 o'clock last night their escape will be blocked.

VEN. ARCHDEACON CASEY.

He Entered Upon his Duties in Lindsay on Sunday.

The Ven Archdeacon Casey, who for eight years has filled the position of Rector of St. Peter's Cathedral, has entered upon his duties in Lindsay.

During his term in Peterborough, the reverend gentleman has endeared himself to the members of his congregation and the citizens generally. Peterborough's loss is Lindsay's gain in this instance. That his future may prove as useful and as proficient in good works as his past, and that he may be spared many years of useful life, is the earnest wish of his many Peterborough friends, Catholic and Protestant alike.

BIG CONFLAGRATION ON GEORGE ST. ABOUT 12 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING

Miss K. Rudkins' Millinery and Dressgoods Store and Howdens' Butcher Shop are Completely Gutted by the Fire

BLAZE SUPPOSED TO HAVE STARTED IN MISS RUDKINS' STORE

The Stock in Longs' Confectionery and Simons' Taylor Shop Badly Damaged by Smoke and Water—The Loss is Partly Covered by Insurance

Shortly after 12 o'clock this morning fire broke out in a building owned by the Toronto Loan and Saving Co., and occupied by Miss Rudkins and Mr. W. G. Howden. When first noticed flames were issuing from the upper windows and from the roof. The fire had gained considerable headway before it was discovered when an alarm was at once sent in for the Fire Brigade to which they promptly responded. On arriving at the scene of the fire the entire building was enveloped in flames the illumination of which lighted the streets for blocks around.

Willing hands rendered every assistance to the firemen to aid them in checking what threatened to be the most serious fire that this town ever suffered.

The entire stock of dry goods, millinery etc., in Miss Rudkins store was burned. Not a single article was saved. Mr. W. G. Howden also lost everything in his store. A new sausage machine and new motor which were placed in position yesterday were completely destroyed.

The only thing that saved the entire block was the direction from which the very light wind came. What little wind there was came from the East and was barely strong enough to move the heavy clouds of smoke from the scene of the fire.

The origin of the fire is unknown. About ten minutes before the alarm was given, a gentleman passed the building and did not notice any signs of fire.

Immediately on the arrival of the firemen two lines were connected to a hydrant opposite the fire on George St. and a third taken from a hydrant further up and carried down a lane in rear of the stores giving three streams of water in a very few minutes. A fourth was brought from a hydrant near the Bank of Toronto, this one was taken by the firemen to the top of the store occupied by Pete Simons and Co. This kept the roofs on either side of the fire from catching.

The new extension ladder came in for its part of the business and proved very successful, the firemen being able to reach the roof from the street. After an hour of steady fighting the fire was got under control.

The floors in the building, together with the roof fell in in about half an hour, and the shower of sparks thrown up caused considerable anxiety.

The back end of Mr. Harry Long's store caught fire a number of times, but was put out before much damage was done.

The loss to Miss Rudkins will be heavy as we understand there was very little insurance on the contents and a large stock was carried. Mr. Howden lost everything in his store on which he had very little insurance. A large amount of meat was burned in addition to the fixtures in the store.

Mr. Harry Long suffered considerably from water and smoke. His loss will be covered by insurance. Mr. P. Simons loss is estimated at about $600. chiefly from smoke and water. A few days ago Mr. Simons got in several cases of new goods for the spring trade. His loss will be fully covered by insurance.

The full extent of the damage to the buildings cannot as yet be ascertained, but it will probably be covered by insurance.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND ARE HAVING TROUBLE

Objection to a Renewal of the Modus Vivendi With France

BRITAIN MUST ACT NOW

Or The Old Colony Will Put Up The Most Vigorous Kind of A Protest

The Whole Question Must Be Cleared Up, Even if War is the Issue—How France Has Entrenched on the Island

Quebec, Jan. 20—The attitude of Newfoundland in objecting to the renewal of the modus vivendi with France concerning the French shore of the island which expired on Dec. 31, though not unexpected, creates a great deal of interest throughout Canada. It is feared that Great Britain's continued opposition to the colony's demands must tend toward Newfoundland's drifting in the direction of the United States.

Nothing is more natural than Newfoundland's present attitude. For many decades, successive governments of the islands have persistently urged upon the home authorities the final settlement of this awkward question, and Great Britain has as often shirked it, contenting itself with urging the acceptance upon the colonists of a new modus vivendi, or at least an extension of the former one.

The islanders out of consideration for the mother country and in order to prevent her from being embarrassed by France at times when she was harassed with other foreign complications, have made very great sacrifices over and over again in consenting to these frequent renewals of the modus vivendi, and now are in no humor to lend themselves to further procrastination in the matter of a definite settlement of the vexed question.

So long as the statu quo is permitted, the commercial progress and prosperity of a great part of the island are quite impossible. The French pretensions have been so extended in the last few years that they virtually amount to alien sovereignty over much of the coast line. In proportion as Great Britain seems disposed to take the matter up vigorously with France, the French demands become more and more audacious.

By the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, amplified and amended by the treaties executed at Paris in 1763 and at Versailles in 1783, the full sovereignty of Newfoundland was ceded to Great Britain, while to France was given the right to catch and dry fish on certain parts of the coast, covering an extent of more than 800 miles, to build there temporary huts and stages for the drying of fish, and to occupy the Miquelon Isles off the southern coast of Newfoundland, as a real shelter for the fishermen of that nationality frequenting the neighboring seas.

France now pretends that the French fishery privileges are exclusive, and not concurrent with the participation therein, on the same basis, of the colonists. Apart from this exclusive right of fishing, the French also demand the uninterrupted use of a strip of land half a mile from high water around the whole 800 miles of coast comprised in the disputed territory.

Despite Britain's nominal ownership of the island, the French pretensions practically amount to an insistence upon the sovereignty of the coast, while the colonists are relegated to the barren and inhospitable interior. England's continued submission to these pretensions have involved the prohibition of mining upon the coast, where valuable deposits of minerals exist, and the tearing down, by crews of French warships of wharves, lobster factories and other buildings erected there by the Newfoundlanders, and this without protest by the British government, notwithstanding that the island is supposed to be British territory.

It is pretty certain that France is insisting upon these pretensions only for the purpose of obtaining a quid pro quo elsewhere from Britain for abandoning them. Although the demands of the islanders for the right of developing the hinterland of the western slope of the island do not appear to be very extravagant, they are contested by the French, and the Newfoundlanders are tired of Britain's continual sacrifice of their interests.

By the convention of 1818 American fishermen got the right to take fish of every kind on the southwest and west coast and to dry and cure their fish on the unsettled parts of the southern seaboard, but such rights were to cease on any part of the coast as soon as it became peopled, and the absence of a similar provision from the French treaties is blamable for all the trouble over the present French shore, as it is called.

Canadians now believe that if Great Britain continues either unwilling or unable to afford the Newfoundlanders the relief to which they are entitled, the present dissatisfaction in the island must culminate in the strong expression of a desire for annexation to the United States. Canada's desire for the entry of Newfoundland into the confederation excites much interest in the present condition of affairs, but the islanders know that the United States would make short work of the French claims, while Canada could do little or nothing to settle them.

LATE WM. BATEER

His Demise Occurred in Asphodel on Sunday After a Short Illness.

Mr W. Batteer aged 84 years and 8 months.

One of Asphodels oldest and most highly respected citizens passed away on Sunday in the person of Mr. W. Batteer at the age of 84 years and 8 months. Mr Batteer had been in his usual health until about ten days ago when he was taken very ill. The deceased was born in the County of Cavan, Ireland and came to America in 1847, settling in New York State where he remained for a short time and then moved to the township of North Monaghan, Canada where he resided until about nine years ago when he settled in Asphodel township where he has since resided. Deceased was married when he first came to America to Dorothy Bothwell, daughter of the late James Bothwell of the county of Monaghan, Ireland. She still survives him and with two sons, David and William, and one daughter, Miss Margret, are left to mourn his death.

Mr. Batteer was a Presbyterian in religion and was a member of the Orange Order. He never took any active part in public or municipal affairs but was known to a wide circle of friends.

The funeral takes place to-morrow to the Little Lake Cemetery.

He is still open for a race with any local or district amateur, for one or two miles.

Catarrh is a Germ Disease

Science, armed with the microscope, has established it a fact, and this conclusion renders obsolete the practice of treating asthma, catarrh and bronchitis by stomach drugging, sprays, snuffs, etc. Such treatments are an utter failure because they cannot penetrate the delicate air cells of the lungs, or permeate the air passages of the nose and bronchial tubes where the germs of catarrh have their stronghold. Catarrhozone is the only certain remedy. It is inhaled by the mouth, and after spreading through all the respiratory organs, is exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone kills the germs, heals the inflamed tissues, clears the head and throat in two minutes, and cures in a few hours. Nothing is so effective, pleasant and simple as Catarrhozone. Two months' treatment $1.00. Small size, 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Wants to Burn the Landlords

London, Jan. 21.—The Times' correspondent at Dublin reports that the progress of a revised plan of campaign in the West of Ireland has not been appreciably checked by the recent prosecution of certain members of Parliament and other agitators. Speaking after the sale of the goods of a tenant for refusing to pay rent in Roscommon, John O'Donnell, M.P., over whose head two convictions for bringing about an illegal assembly are hanging, said that notwithstanding all the Government's efforts, a fire had been started in the North and West of Ireland which would make such a conflagration as would burn "all landlords to [illegible]."

TROUBLE IN THE BOER RANKS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Evidence of Demoralization of the Burghers Constantly Coming In

DOES NOT MEAN IMMEDIATE END OF WAR

The British Need Larger Columns and More Horses—Boer Prisoners Falling Into British Hands Appear Satisfied

London, Jan. 21.—The correspondent of the Times at Pretoria says: Nearly every day produces evidence of demoralization of the Boers in the Transvaal. A petition bearing the signatures of many prominent prisoners captured recently by the British has been issued, imploring Botha to "end quickly the terrible war."

Commandant Trichard has also written Botha, telling him he must come quickly and talk with his (Trichard's) commando, as his men are very much dissatisfied, threaten to surrender, and will no longer listen to their immediate commander. Prisoners now falling into the hands of the British invariably seem relieved rather than otherwise at being captured.

But it must not be inferred from this that wholesale surrenders of the Boers are necessarily imminent. The only alternative is to continue the paring down process uninterruptedly. The great difficulty being met with by the British forces in these operations is want of horses. What is required apart from spare horses is large columns, only half the men being employed at night. It is impossible to require the men to stand more than three night marches weekly.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

OF THE LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY CO. YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Very Satisfactory Reports of the Directors, Superintendent and Auditors Received—Officers Elected for 1902

The annual meeting of the Little Lake Cemetery Company was held in the Town Council Chamber yesterday afternoon and was well attended. Among those present were, W. H. Moore, President; E. A. Peck, secy-treas.; Messrs. Lundy, Dennistoun, Jas. Stevenson, Shortly, Stapleton, Hay, Dr. Burnham, T. H. G. Denne, T. Wise, superintendent, and Mr. Foord, the late superintendent.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

The report of the Directors was presented by Mr. W. H. Moore, as follows:

To the shareholders of the Little Lake Cemetery Company.

The Directors of the Company have to present the following report for the past year:

When your Directors came into office a year ago there was to the credit of the Company in bank the sum of $2504.00. Shortly afterwards they obtained $3,000 of Town Debentures, thus making the Company's investment fund $10,000, which is intended as a nucleus for a fund, the income of which will maintain the grounds in future years, when the present annual income may become much decreased.

Your Directors have also purchased a parcel of land near the cemetery gate at a net cost of $450.00, which they thought it wise to secure to provide a site for the Superintendent's residence, at a future date, and thereby enable the Company to utilize the valuable lands covered by the present residence and outbuildings, for Cemetery purposes. Your Directors have also had constructed a concrete sidewalk, four feet wide, from the entrance gate to the Superintendent's residence, and from there to the Chapel at an expense of $400.00.

The gross receipts of the year exceed the expenditure on all accounts, and the balance in Bank to the credit of the Company at the Commencement of this year was the sum of $897.11.

A detailed statement of expenditure and receipts of the year is shown in the Auditors and Superintendent's Reports, which will be submitted to you.

Substantial improvements of various kinds have been made in the grounds during the past year, particulars of which are given in the Superintendent's report, which will be laid before the meeting.

Your Directors much regret to have to report the resignation of the Company's Superintendent, Mr. W. H. Foord, which took effect on the first instant, and they have in acknowledgment of his efficient and faithful services, covering a period of ten years, during which he has shown a personal interest and zeal that we trust may be found in future superintendents, supplemented his salary during the past year by the sum of $50.00.

Your Directors have appointed Mr. Frank Wise as Superintendent in place of Mr. Foord, at a salary of $550.00 and a free house.

W. H. MOORE,
President L.L.C. Co.
20th January, 1902.

The report was adopted as read.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

The report of the Superintendent was read by Mr. Foord as follows:

To the President, Directors and Shareholders of the Little Lake Cemetery Company.

Gentlemen,—I beg to submit the following report of the improvements made during the year ending December 31st, 1901.

A concrete walk 480 feet long and 4 feet wide with gutter of same material, 18 inches wide, was laid from the entrance to the office; also a concrete walk 90 feet long and 4 feet wide from the office to the Chapel. Twelve walks in section A were filled in and sodded over, which will save considerable expense in hoeing and keeping free from weeds, and which will improve the landscape very much. Additional special lots in section L have been graded up, the terraces sodded and lots seeded down.

700 feet of drains 6 feet deep were laid with tile in the walks in Section D from ranges 9 to 16, and marble lot markers placed where the wooden posts were fitted out on part of Section D, thus laying it out in blocks of from 4 to 8 lots each between the markers. The trees along Crescent St. and throughout the grounds were thoroughly pruned, which admitted light much needed for the growth of grass, and greatly improved the general view and appearance of the grounds.

The lands recently purchased at the corner of Haggart and Crescent streets, near the Cemetery gate, have been graded, which greatly improves the entrance to Cemetery.

An addition to the waterworks was made from Section Q to Section L. The waterworks system now in the Cemetery is one of which the Shareholders may well congratulate themselves, it being the most complete and effective I have met with in the best Cemeteries either in Canada or the United States. All of the grounds where burials have been made can now be watered with 60 feet of hose with a pressure of water of 75 to 90 lbs.

I would respectfully recommend that during the coming season sections R and Y be graded down to the grade of Section L and laid out in special lots, as this class of lots is in much demand, and are a good source of revenue for the Cemetery Company; that additional drains be made on the north side of Section C, to intersect the present drain on Ravine Avenue; the paths on Section H filled in and sodded over and all grave markers in the single grave plot be laid flat on the graves or placed low enough in the ground to allow the mowers to pass over them, for besides being a great detriment in cutting the grass, so many headstones make the Cemetery appear more like a marble yard than a well kept Cemetery.

In severing my connection with the Little Lake Cemetery Company permit me to make acknowledgment of the great and unvarying kindness I have ever received at the hands of the Directors and all interested in the Cemetery.

I shall always look back to my nearly twelve years' service as your Superintendent with feelings of deep pride at the progress that has been made in lasting improvements and in beautifying the grounds, unequalled in Ontario, which never could have been brought about, however great had been my zeal, except for the ever-present supervision, assistance and encouragement given by the Directors.

The great personal interest I have always felt in the Cemetery will ever

NAVAL BATTLE BEING WAGED IN THE HARBOR OF PANAMA

Revolutionary Fleet Trying to Land Men off Sabana

It is Being Opposed by Government Vessels

Colon, Columbia, Jan. 20.—A naval battle, which began at 6 o'clock this morning, is taking place in the harbor of Panama. The revolutionary fleet consists of the steamers Padilla Darien and Gaitan. They are trying to force a landing off Sabana.

The Government ships are the Chilian Line steamer Lautaro, seized by Gen. Alban; the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamer Chucuito, chartered by Gen. Alban, and the Panama Canal Company's steamer Boyaca also chartered by the Columbian Government.

As this despatch is sent three shots have just passed over the Chucuito, and she has answered with several shots. They fell close to the Padilla, which is seen to be retiring.

The guns at Las Bovedas are also firing at the rebel ships.

The Government forces are throwing up entrenchments.

The United States cruiser Philadelphia is close to the scene of the fighting.

WHY DO THE HEATHEN RAGE

As a matter of fact at the present moment "the heathen" are not raging, nor are they imagining a vain thing. They are simply working off the same old witticisms at the expense of prohibitionists, who, of course, call down a divine blessing on what they are about to do (and leave undone). Bless us! who is afraid of the p.p.'s, otherwise known as the Pious Prohibitionists? Everybody knows that they haven't backbone enough for a crawfish. Such is the tenor of the jibes and sneers of unfeeling critics. But all this does no good to the country, and we are patriotic amongst other good things. Lies and counter-lies, prayers and solemn affirmations, preaching and prohibition, and all the delicacies of the season, are as nothing to a sober action decently and manfully done, such as sawing a cord of hardwood. For the sake of all that is serious let us stop this infernal nonsense and try and be men. It is easy to be a fool. We have proved that ourselves. Come on, boys! young and old, and let us acquit ourselves like men and give over the smiling ways of Judas and a hypocrisy that would put Satan himself to shame for pure silliness.

We read how in Winnipeg the other day the poor things cried out in bitter distress: "We have been betrayed! we have been betrayed!" Some fainted, while others went out to the pump to get a drink. But who takes them seriously? Certainly not Mr. Roblin. He says he has got to legislate for the people, not for a lot of faddists, who would betray him as they have betrayed each other, if they got a chance. We can fancy the mighty scorn in his eye as the Attorney-General looked at the hysterical creatures, crying for his blood. Bah!

PROGRESS AND SUCCESS.

Progress and success have been our business reward up to the present time. No need to enlarge on our dispensing facilities; this department is run on the most approved system; promptness and accuracy mark all our work.

We are daily renewing and assorting our stock of Perfumes, Atomizers, Sponges, Brushes, Combs and Toilet goods.

THE PUBLIC VERDICT.

The public verdict is immensely in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great family medicine of the present day and never fails to do what it promises. Paine's Celery Compound will permanently cure kidney disease, liver complaint, ills resulting from impure blood, dyspepsia and stomach derangements. We sell the kind that cures. R. S. MACDONALD, Peterborough, Ont.

A naughty woman stumbles for she cannot see what may be in her way.

Trust not the woman that thinketh more of herself than another; mercy will not dwell in her heart.

The gods honor her who thinketh long before opening her lips.

A woman that is not loved is a kite from which the string has been broken: she driveth with the wind and cometh to a long fall.

A woman that respects herself is more beautiful than a single star; more beautiful than many stars at night.

Woman is the one for that which pains the father; she is balm for his troubles.

A woman who mistakes her place can never return to where she first was; the path has been covered up from her eyes.

A woman desirous of being seen by men is not trustworthy; fear her glance.

Give heed to her to whom children have come; she walks in the sacred ways and looks not love.

JUST WHAT WE WANT.

We ask the privilege of having one trial in the way of supplying your needs in goods that first-class druggists handle, or the filling of your doctors' prescriptions. Our endeavors to please you and the satisfactory way in which you will be served will make you a permanent customer.

WE CALL YOUR ATTENTION to our fresh stock of Paine's Celery Compound, the most popular family medicine of the day. Thousands of testimonials from the best people of Canada are sufficient proofs of its virtues for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, blood diseases, liver complaint, kidney diseases and all nervous troubles. PROBLEMS OF EDUCATION

An Eminent Writer Takes Objection to Our System

In these breezy days of the jocund youth of a new century, when idols and ideals are being shattered in military, scientific, commercial and political life, it is not surprising that enterprising pioneers in the educational field should discover that the traditional system of educating children is all wrong. Such an one is writing at length in the current number of the Forum, and he thus contrasts the past with the system of the future:

"A system which sets children formal tasks before they have developed substantial interests; which treats them all as units in a mass, to be put through the same course in the same time, in the same way; which stretches a few formal subjects taught exclusively from single text books, over the whole elementary period; which makes the recitation simply an affair of memory, and the examination simply a larger recitation, with more flurry and worry, which switches students onto one track or another for life before they have discovered their natural destination; which makes the cast iron course the main thing, and subjects and children alike incidental thereto; which is subjected to no rigid requirements from above, but is content to accept whatever product is left over from athletic and social distractions; which selects teachers wholly on technical grounds, and measures their worth by quantitative standards only, which counts language synonymous with letters, acquisition the equivalent of insight, and science a satisfactory substitute for art; which drives the boys from the dullness of the elementary school routine into premature work, the secondary school scholars into offices to relieve the monotony of the course into which they have drifted, and the brightest college graduates into law or business as a welcome escape from the wholesale murder of literature in the name of philology of which they have long since grown weary—that system in each and every part is a dismal failure, which it is our duty to expose, condemn, and redeem.

"On the other hand, a system which reveals to the kindergarten child the beauty and joy of the world's treasure house before it puts the cold iron keys in his hands; which, when it must train him to acquire and handle these keys, still lets him use them to unlock the myths, legends and stories of man's great visions and deeds, the marvel and mysteries of rock and soil, plant and animal, sea and star; which is ever on the watch for the bent of each individual mind, and eager to give it free play; which nevertheless, rigidly requires the task freely chosen to be done as the individual's best, and to be measured by absolute standards; which secures strong men and highly trained women as teachers, and brings them close to all students, and intimately near to the chosen few who are able to appreciate them; which goes behind the form of words to the meaning of great works of art, and grasps details in their larger signification; and which wins to the lifelong service of pure truth, beauty and goodness, the choice youth in each undergraduate class—that system is a magnificent triumph, a triumph the first fruits of which we even now can enjoy, for the sake of which we are all called to labor, and the assurance of which is the best heritage we can hope to hand down to our children."

The application of a Mrs. Fitzsimmons to have her name changed by the courts, because she has been "reliably informed that there is a notorious pugilist character of the same name," shows how fleeting a thing is fame.

Now that they talk of getting Lieut. Hobson into politics, there will be another naval hero to be demolished. He has tried his hand as a bottler of fleets, a champion osculatist, and the discoverer of what Dewey didn't do. Now he wants to risk himself in politics. Perhaps it's Hobson's choice.

His Majesty has introduced a most economical fashion. Black frock coats with deep velvet cuffs are to be the vogue. Many a fringy-sleeved garment will now be resurrected and adorned with new velvet cuffs. Now, if it could only become the "correct caper" to have velvet cuffs on trousers legs, what mirrors of fashion some of the gentlemen who decorate our public squares in summer would become.

The Great Serpent of all Diseases. – Kidney disease may well be called the "boa constrictor" disease, unsuspecting and unrelenting, it gets the victim in its coils and gradually tightens till life is crushed out, but the great South American Kidney Cure treatment has proved its power over the monster, and no matter how firmly entrenched, it will release, heal and cure.—131

No one needs to be told to try to cure a cough. But any one will be glad to be told of a means of cure which will be thorough and lasting. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a medicine which can be confidently relied on to cure diseases of the organs of respiration. It cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bronchitis and bleeding of the lungs. It cures when nothing else will cure, and the local physician says: "There is nothing more that we can do."

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

The dealer, tempted by the little more profit paid by less meritorious medicines, will sometimes try and sell a substitute when the "Discovery" is asked for. No substitute medicine will satisfy the sick like "Golden Medical Discovery." It always helps. It almost always cures.

"Two years ago a severe cough started on me and I was also bothered with catarrh," writes Mr. F. Skjod, of Danewood, Chisago Co., Minn. "I could not sleep nights, as the cough was worse at night. I tried several cough medicines, but to no avail, until a year ago, when I got so bad I could not breathe through my nose at times. I then tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. After taking eight bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and at the same time using Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, I am a well man. I can thank Dr. Pierce for my good health, and will recommend his medicines to any one suffering from the same trouble."

A NOVEL

"And never so much as to ask how she were, poor thing, and her that bad! Lor'! I'd sooner serve a stone nor Miss Mostyn; that I would!"

Katharine received the message in utter silence. By sheer force of will she had dragged herself from her bed and struggled into her clothes.

Mrs. Parsons, toiling up to inquire how she was early in the morning, had found the girl sitting on the edge of the bed, grasping the back of a chair and holding her head erect, with closed eyes and compressed lips. In the twinkling of a second the good housekeeper had taken matters into her own hands.

She had sent Patty flying for hot water and mustard, into a large tub of which she plunged Katharine's two little feet; then twisting up the masses of dark hair, she applied a small mustard plaster at the back of the neck.

Katharine slept for two hours; then, though she was as weak as a kitten; she insisted on getting up.

"The pain is gone — quite, quite gone," she assured Mrs. Parsons, who was much dissatisfied at this independent spirit on the part of her patient. And so, by dint of courage and determination, Katharine managed to sit at the table and dispatch the letters.

She felt very weak afterward, but nothing should prevent her going down as Barbara had desired.

The library was empty, so she thought, as she entered it, and she stood for one minute to recover herself.

"I—I hope I shall not be foolish and faint, or do anything stupid," she said to herself, unsteadily.

And even as she thought this, she put out her hand, and groped blindly for a chair; she was conscious of nothing for an instant but a sort of heavy cloud enveloping her, and then the cloud rolled away, and she awoke to find herself held closely in two strong arms, and a voice murmuring passionate, despairing love words in her ear.

She lifted her eyes slowly, and let them rest on those dear blue ones as one would gaze on the exquisite beauty of heaven's sky.

Ormande recovered himself first.

"You are better, dear?" he asked, eagerly. "Tell me you are better."

She rested against his heart for one instant in silence. She was gathering strength enough to draw herself away from his hold.

As if divining this wish, Ormande moved her gently to a large armchair, and put her into it as he would have put a little child.

Then he stood with folded arms gazing down at her, a world of passionate love dwelling in his eyes.

"Why do you look like that?" he asked in choked, husky tones. "Katharine— it— it breaks my heart!"

"They— they told me you were gone."

Ormande's brow contracted.

"You wish me to go, dear?" he asked gently.

She shook her head feebly, but her eyes went up to his and he understood their plaintive beauty as well as though she had spoken.

"Yes, yes, you are right," he said agitatedly. "It is better we do not meet. I will go. I will do anything to spare you pain, Katharine."

A mist rose before her eyes.

How good, how noble, how generous he was! Surely no man was ever like him.

She put out her trembling hand toward him.

"I believe you, I believe you," she whispered. "Would to Heaven you could do this, but you cannot. Lord Otway, I—I want to speak to you. I want to ask you to try and forget me. You said last night that was not possible. I am glad," she went on eagerly, a faint tinge of color creeping into her cheeks, "glad I have spoken to you again. It will be a great relief to me. I do not want to be the cause of bringing a shadow on your life. I want to know that you are bright and happy as I have always known you. The— the future must hold so much happiness for you, I——"

"Katharine," he interrupted her, his voice quivering with emotion, "Katharine, you do care then what becomes of me, you do care!"

"Care!" she repeated, and unconsciously the whole strength of her love rang out in that one word. "Care what becomes of you! Oh, Ormande!"

With a smothered cry he was on his knees beside her.

"Katharine, my darling, my darling!"

He had her two small hands in his, and covered them with his passionate kisses

"Give me one moment of Paradise," he pleaded, as she would have drawn them out of his hold, her sweet face quivering with emotion. "Only one moment before I go away from you into the dark shadows of my lonely life, Katharine. Answer me this, if —if you had been free, dear, if fate had been kinder, could you have given me your love?"

There was a sudden pause between them; involuntarily they had both risen to their feet, their hands clasped close together; Katharine's head was bent, but urged by the magnetic power of his will, she raised it slowly, and their eyes met. A look of joy flashed across Ormande's face as he read the answer written in them; with a murmur of tenderness, he stooped to press his lips to hers, then suddenly he checked himself.

She loved him but she was not free. With a groan he bent his lips to her hands instead, raining kisses on them; then he straightened himself, and, putting his right hand on her beautiful, bowed head, he said quietly and solemnly:

"Heaven bless and guard you, my darling, now and henceforth!" and then, without another word or look, he turned and went away.

Katharine clung to the oaken mantel-piece as he went, then suddenly she lifted her hands and kissed them hurriedly, passionately.

"Ormande! Ormande! my heart will break!" she said to herself, and, flinging her arms out, she fell forward on the cushions of the chair, her slender form shaken with sobs.

How long she lay there Katharine never knew; she was insensible to everything but her grief. She did not know that directly Lord Otway had gone, the window had been pushed open quietly, and a man had come into the room from the terrace outside— that this man was close beside her, regarding her with a sneer and a look of triumphant delight on his dark, handsome face. She knew nothing, cared for nothing, but this bitter new sorrow, and would have lain there prostrate from weeping and [illegible] not gone forward and touched her gently on the shoulder.

As she started up and turned round slowly, he spoke.

"A very pretty scene, on my life; but scarcely so pleasant for a husband as one might suppose! Come, Mrs. Gordon Smythe! I am waiting for a welcome. A wife should show some little signs of delight when she meets her husband, after such a long absence as ours has been. What have you to say to me, eh?"

CHAPTER XIX.

Katharine's very heart-beat seemed to stop. A sudden, a horrible feeling of fear came upon her. She clung to the arms of the chair with her poor, weak hands, and gazed up into Gordon Smythe's dark face as the caged animal gazes at the serpent that will presently devour it. Was it some hideous dream? Was it really she who crouched there on the floor and felt that heavy hand on her shoulder? She had passed through such a succession of terrible mental crises that she was scarcely mistress of herself. But her pale, tear-stained face, her dazed eyes, did not touch Gordon's pity. He had an old score to settle with the girl, and he did not intend to be thwarted in his intention to be even with her; his passionate anger and jealousy were roused at the scene he had just witnessed. It maddened him to remember with what detestation Katharine had always regarded him; how utterly indifferent she had been to his personal attractions; how little pains she had taken to let him see in what contempt she held him! And then to recall the parting with Ormande, and to know that another man possessed the love, the loyalty, he considered should be his own. Katharine's beauty, as she had lifted her eyes, laden with their message of love, to answer that sage question of Ormande's, had infuriated Gordon beyond description. He registered a vow then that he would humble her; he would have her at his feet; that she should give the sweetness of her beauty and love to him, her husband. Now, more than ever, he determined to punish her, and, with the fear of discovery and detection gone, Gordon saw the path opening to this occupation, more particularly since he had discovered that Katharine loved and was loved in return.

"Come," he said again, suavely, pressing his hold still closer on her shoulder, "come, have you no words of welcome for me, eh?"

His voice recalled her to herself.

With a gesture full of loathing, she pushed herself onto her feet and staggered back from him.

"Do— do not touch me!" she gasped, with a shudder that made her tremble from head to foot. "Do — do not touch——"

Her voice died away inaudibly.

Gordon laughed softly, but his eyes flashed at her like a flame of angry lightning.

"You are not generally so particular, are you?" he asked with a sneer, as he sat across a chair and folded his arms on the oaken back. "I fancy —I may be mistaken, of course!— but I fancy I saw that gentleman, whoever he may be, indulging in some very strong protestations of affection to you just now!"

Katharine was leaning against the tall mantelpiece, quivering in every limb. The old pain had come back into her head, her temples were throbbing, and she felt very ill. Dimly she comprehended that the small peace she had hitherto been allowed was at an end

He smiled to himself with great satisfaction as he noticed her drawn, despairing face.

"Most husbands, of course, would object," he went on in a careless manner; "but I am not so strict. By all means enjoy yourself when you are alone; when I am with you that is a different matter. Such graces as you have to spare I naturally expect will belong to me. I do not care to share my wife with any one, not even with the heir to an earldom."

Gordon drew out a dainty, jeweled case, and having abstracted a cigarette, closed the lid with a click and put it in his pocket.

"You do not object, I suppose?" he asked, coolly, and then he reached over to the table for a match and lit the cigarette. "I am afraid," he said with a sneer lingering round his lips ~~—"I am afraid that I must have given~~ you a great start just now. You did not think to see me here, did you?" He blew a tiny cloud of smoke into the air. "Had you done so, no doubt the very entertaining scene I witnessed just now would have been avoided or postponed. I really regret that our relations with each other have not been of a nature to admit of a correspondence, as then you would have learned that I was a friend of your employer, and was about to run down to this very charming old house to participate in what seems likely to be a really pleasant fete."

He put the cigarette between his teeth again and smoked it in silence, watching the girl between his half-closed eyes, and thoroughly enjoying the agony she was enduring.

"As I have just said, a letter would have prepared you for my coming. We really must not fail to communicate with each other in the future, when circumstances may happen to separate us for awhile." He broke off some of the cigarette ash into a little Dresden plate that stood at his elbow. "We really must do this," he repeated, and then all of a sudden he was on his legs, had dashed his cigarette into the fire grate, and had firm hold of Katharine's two wrists.

"Where are you going?" he demanded, his ugly passion creeping from beneath the veil of suavity.

Fear, pride, loathing, horror, all combined to give Katharine strength. She looked him straight in the eyes with her large orbs full of contempt and disgust.

"Let me go!" she said in low, distinct tones. "Let me pass — murderer!"

Gordon laughed shortly and tightened his grip on her wrists.

"Oh, dear, no! I am not going to deprive myself of the pleasure of your company just yet. I have really a great deal to say to you, my wife!"

Katharine shivered, and her heart sank like lead in her breast.

"Take care!" she murmured, as well as her pallid lips would let her. "Take care! Do not try me too much! If you have forgotten our compact, I have not. Leave me free, —— or I will ——"

"What?" he broke in very slowly. "You will do what? Beware [illegible] patience, my dear girl, and you will see that there is positively nothing you can do. Our compact, you say! Well, what of it? I promised to leave you unmolested. Yes, I remember saying something of the sort, but it really makes no difference now what I said."

"You —you swore an oath"— the poor girl's courage was deserting her —"an oath!" The words died away in a broken sob, and her head sank forward on her breast.

"Ah! no doubt. I have done many foolish things in my time; but, of course, as you can see for yourself, if I had sworn fifty oaths it can affect nothing now. Facts are unpleasant things, but it is always best to look them in the face; and the facts in our case are these —that you, of your own free will —mark that! of your own free will —became my lawful wife, and gave me full and legal power of controlling your life. Whether I swore one oath or twenty has nothing to do with it. You are my wife; you married me of your own will, and by no one else's, and so, my dear Kittie" —with another laugh —"the best thing you can do is to reconcile yourself to facts, and make up your mind to be as good a wife as you possibly can be. I will not be very exacting, only ——"

Katharine interrupted him; with a strength born of despair she wrenched herself free from his hold.

"Never! never! never!" she cried, her voice husky with agitation. "I would sooner die than —than this should be. I will speak out; I will tell the truth; I will expose you; I—I——"

"Yes," Gordon drawled, moving a step nearer. "Yes. You will tell the truth. What truth?" He paused a moment. "What truth will you tell to the whole world?"

"What truth?" Katharine stood gazing at him with distraught eyes; she was riveted, stunned by his words. "You —you ask me that?"

"Undoubtedly!" Gordon assumed a puzzled air. "Undoubtedly I do, for I assure you, my dear girl, I am at a loss to understand your words; at least, I cannot see what unpleasant truth you can have to explain, unless —unless"— he came a step nearer to her, fixing her with his coal black eyes, and magnetising her beneath their power as a snake magnetises its victim —"unless" — he pronounced each word very slowly — "it be to proclaim to the world a story that will not redound to your own credit or reputation. I suppose you have got that old madness in your brain again —that wild, improbable story that you married me because you wished to save my life, having seen me commit a murder at some vague and mysterious time. Really, my dear Katharine, I had hoped that this lunacy would have been cured. Of course, great allowance is given to a woman when she is in the state of mental distress that you were in when you became my wife; but there is a limit to everything, and when it comes to your declaring you must tell the truth" — his eyes searching hers still more fiercely —"why, then, my girl, it is time that I, too, turned and said that I would give my version of the matter, which is, after all, a very one for any girl to own. Shall I tell it to you now? Listen!" —nearer and nearer he went toward her —"if the world asks me why you became my wife, I shall answer this —that I did it to make an honest woman of you; that you had loved me not wisely but too well, and that in order to save your reputation I sacrificed myself most generously, and gave you my name. You understand that, Kattie; it is quite clear to you, isn't it? You see now that any story of yours I shall immediately declare to be an hallucination of your brain, brought on by the mental trouble you had suffered. I don't want any mistake, my dear girl. I want you to see and understand clearly that if any truth is told, it is you and not me who will suffer the most!"

He clenched her wrists again as he finished, and, uttering a broken cry of horror and despair mingled, the unhappy girl sank nerveless, prostrate at his feet, utterly crushed beneath the fiendish cruelty and wickedness of those wicked words.

"If I could die! If I could die now!" she thought wildly to herself. She was alive to the full horror of the moment. Weak, sick, faint as she was, no merciful swoon or oblivion came to her rescue; no dark cloud crept over her brain and wrapped her for a time in unconsciousness. Her limbs had given way, the power to stand up proudly and defy this villain was taken from her; but the weakness did not touch her brain. She was sensible —keenly, awfully sensible— to the terrible position in which she was placed; and even in this moment she was not selfish in her sorrow, for her generous woman's heart found time to beat sadly as she thought of the wasted love poor Lucy Smythe had poured out on this man, and the shock that any portion of the truth would be to the weak, doting mother.

"It is as well we should understand our positions at once, isn't it?" he said, with a ring of triumphant pleasure in his voice. "We shall have no more nonsense in future, no more threats about telling the truth, for we know what we have got to expect, don't we? And I think it would be advisable if you were to get up from that very unnecessary and uncomfortable position; it might give rise to unpleasant remarks if a servant were to come in. Allow me to assist you to a chair."

Nevil's Uncle Jerry.

As the junior partner of the old-established firm of solicitors, Gale, Tempest & Hopkinson, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, I was brought up in closest touch with the office staff.

One old clerk, who had started as office boy to the firm named, was called S. Nevil, but his baptismal patronymic was generally shortened by his confreres into Snivel, a name which described his temperament to a fine point. How he had been kept on so long was a mystery to many, but it was mainly through my instrumentality. The fact is that Nevil fell ill with influenza, and during his absence his daughter called for some wages due him. I saw and was greatly impressed by her. Her manners were those of a woman of gentle birth and breeding, but her face, which was more than beautiful, had those lines of patient suffering which plainly told her story. There was no need to ask her it, for it was plainly enough written. I really guessed that by domestic tyranny he found an outlet for his petty nature which his own sex would not allow him to exercise on them.

After seeing his daughter I resolved that Nevil's place in our office was to be permanent so long as I could use my influence in his behalf, and at Christmas I—but that is outside the story.

One morning as Nevil came into my office with some letters for signature I was struck with his woful appearance, and, as I have foreshadowed my interest in his family affairs, it was natural that I should ask what was the matter with him.

"A dreadful and shameful 'oaks has been played on me, Mr. 'Upkinson, sir," he said. Nevil was always erratic with his h's when "put out."

"Sit down, my man, and tell me all about it," I said, for, much as I disliked the man, I could not help feeling sorry for him, so distressed did he seem.

"You know," he continued, "that I have always looked forward to Uncle Jerry leaving some of his wealth to us when the end came."

"Well, Nevil," I interrupted, "has he died?"

"No, sir; worse than that. I am afraid I would not be so cut up about that, but he has played a dirty trick on me and mine that I am as much disgusted as disappointed."

As I saw he was bursting to tell me his sorrow I told him to proceed with the story of his wrongs.

"You must know that Uncle Jerry last Christmas, as was his usual custom, invited all his poor relations to dine with him.

"The night passed smoothly, excepting that two cousins got excited in a political argument. These evenings wound up with a speech from our host, and then, after singing 'Auld Lang Syne,' we would separate. The speech last Christmas was a memorable one, and I remember each word burnt itself into my memory as it fell from Uncle Jerry's lips.

"'My dear relatives,' he commenced, 'you will be sorry to learn, as I am to announce it, that this gathering, which it has been my pleasure as well as my duty to hold at this season of good-will toward all men, is to be the last.

"'Yes, the last, I grieve to repeat. You are all, I think, aware of the sudden collapse of the company which promised to be one of the greatest and most successful undertakings of modern time. I will be brief, as the subject is to me a painful one. In that

A Pious Parrot.

"If Coco meant the half of what he said, and was even a quarter as wise as he looked, he was a wonderful bird," says a writer in "Forest and Stream." "I met him in Paris, where he lived with an old English lady, who spent her life in her own apartments between her maid and her parrot. Coco was thus her almost constant companion, her guide, counsellor and friend. He had an easy flow of conversation, and said many funny and apt things that I have forgotten, but no one who saw and heard him at his devotions of a Sunday morning is likely to forget it. His mistress, being unable to attend the English chapel, read the service in her own room aloud, with Coco for congregation, for none ever exceeded the unction of his long-drawn 'Amens,' nor the contrite quaver of his 'Good Lord, deliver us' in the litany, and when it came to 'miserable sinners,' he rolled up his eyes and nodded his old head in dismal approval.

"It would have been unkind to smile during the performance, for Coco's feelings were sensitive, and, moreover, the old lady found comfort in the thought that he, perhaps, dimly understood. She told the following story in proof of his sagacity: A friend came to visit her one day who also owned a parrot. The talk turned upon the rival birds, and the visitor instanced, in proof of her pet's powers, an intricate sentence that he had been taught to say. She repeated the sentence several times, mimicking a parrot's nasal voice. Coco, meanwhile, showed evidence of great excitement. He sidled hand over hand across the back of the sofa on which the visitor sat, puffing out his chest and holding his breath till all of his feathers stood on end. Something was on his mind, and he was straining to get it off. As the visitor rose to go, his efforts culminated, and as she passed out of the door he screamed the sentence after her, exactly as he had heard his rival quoted."

Redmond and Parnell.

THOSE who have sought to trace a parliamentary likeness between Mr. John Redmond and Mr. Parnell have surely insisted overmuch on the "Saxon" side of their characters, says the London "Outlook." Many opportunities of carefully observing "the Uncrowned King" in the House of Commons [illegible] failed to discover in him a single one of those attributes which by common consent are assigned to Irishmen, either on or off the stage. This is not so in the case of Mr. Redmond. Mr. Parnell, admittedly, was a consummate master of strategy, a man of unflinching will, and one who kept his unruly pack in order by the sheer force, as it seemed, of a superior mind dominating an inferior. He may have been respected, unquestionably he was feared, but no one can make ever a pretense of saying that he was liked. His was the Anglo-Saxon nature in its iciest and least alluring form; and in him there was also a considerable dash of the mystic. Mr. Redmond is not a conscious plagiarist, but it can hardly be doubted that he has modeled himself largely, perhaps by force of long association — upon [illegible] remarkable man, his former [illegible] at the same time, and looking a little below the surface, there are sharp points of contrast between the two. Mr. Redmond though an Anglicized Irishman, remains an Irishman still; Mr. Parnell never was an Irishman at all, save in regard to his national aspirations.

Mr. Redmond's "mysticism," too, is rather the natural shield of a cautious politician who has learnt reticence by long practice of the game than an endowment of Nature. He has taught himself how to school and keep curbed the impulses of an essentially Irish temperament; and that he generally succeeds says much for his self-restraint. But when he does burst out—which is seldom—you know that in scratching the Parliamentarian you have found the Milesian. Mr. Parnell, on the other hand, never generated aught but white heat. In his latest platform speech Mr. Redmond has allowed himself a license which he studiously eschews when addressing the House. Nevertheless, even before an Irish audience he never entirely forgets that he is playing a "costume part," while the rougher, though equally congenial, role of "principal villain" is left to Mr. Dillon, and no attempt is made to interfere with the masterly stage-management of Mr. O'Brien. There is a good deal to be said for this sort of division of labor, since it leaves Mr. Redmond free to accept, without any sense of incongruity, the compliments which Mr. Balfour and other Front Bench leaders are wont from time to time to pay to his statesmanlike qualities. It would also—but this possibly is trenching too nearly on prophecy—make easier at some dim and distant date a "deal" between Mr Redmond, on behalf of his compatriots, and a "Saxon" Government for the settlement of the Irish question, because you can always negotiate better with one with whom you are on terms of outward and ceremonial politeness.

A Miracle Explained.

The vagaries of memory are some of the most interesting of those connected with the human mind and body. Why do we forget certain things and remember others? Myriads of these irregularities are as yet unaccounted for; perhaps not even the cleverest metaphysician will ever account for them.

Professor James reminds us how something which we have tried in vain to recall will afterward, when we have given up the attempt, "saunter into the mind," as Emerson says, as innocently as if it had never been summoned.

Again, bygone experiences will revive after years of oblivion, often as the result of some cerebral disease or accident.

Such a case is the one quoted by Coleridge of a young woman in Germany who could neither read nor write, but who was said to be possessed of a devil because, in a fever, she was heard raving in Latin, Greek, and in an obscure rabbinical dialect of Hebrew. Whole pages of her talk were written down, and were found to consist of sentences intelligible in themselves, but not having the slightest connection with one another. To say that she was possessed of a devil was the easiest way of accounting for the matter.

At last the mystery was cleared up by a physician, who traced back the girl's history until he learned that at the age of nine she was taken to live at the house of an old pastor, a great Hebrew scholar, and that she remained there until the pastor's death. It had been for years the old man's custom to walk up and down a passage near the kitchen, and read to himself in a loud voice.

His books were examined, and among them many of the passages taken down at the young woman's bedside were identified. The theory of demoniacal possession was abandoned.

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching, Foot Elm can give you wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c. a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

COUNTERFEITS AND IMITATIONS

Dastardly Attempts Made to Have Our People Buy Worthless Medicines Labelled As Celery Compounds

These Are Dishonest Men Who Foist Their Worthless Substitutes On The Public, Deceived Those Who Intend Buying

Paine's Celery Compound

If the sick, suffering or friends of such who are using or about to use Paine's Celery Compound for the banishment of disease and the restoration of health, wish to avoid deception, loss of money and serious dangers, they should see for themselves when buying that the name PAINE'S is on each wrapper and bottle that is offered. Any other preparation offered as a celery compound is a fraud and deception of the worst character.

The manufacturers of Paine's Celery Compound already know of many cases of suffering aggravated and intensified by these vile substitutes for Paine's Celery Compound sold to unsuspecting people. These spurious brands of celery compound are sold by some dealers for the sole reason of the immense profit that is derived from their sale. As far as the unscrupulous dealers are concerned, they care little whether the patient is killed or cured; profit, and a mighty one too, is their great object. If you cannot get the genuine Paine's Celery Compound from your dealer, the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, will send two bottles express charges paid to your nearest Express Station for two dollars, or six bottles for five dollars. Money must accompany order.

Wedding Bells

A happy wedding took place in St. Peter's last night, when Mr. Edward Flatterty, of Emily, was joined in the holy bonds of matrimoney to Mrs. Lynch. The bride looked charming in a dress of white silk. After the ceremoney the of white silk. After the ceremony the happy couple drove to the residence of the bride on Aylmer street, where they partook of the wedding supper. The bride was supported by Miss M. Sullivan, while Mr. Frances Buck did the honor as best man.

STRAWS SHOW WHICH WAY THE THE WIND BLOWS

The fact that grocers and general dealers are selling less oatmeal, cracked wheat and other cheaply prepared grain foods to-day than a year ago is significant. It means that our people are now using something more popular and more conductive to health. Malt Breakfast Food has become the decided choice of old and young of all classes, who have found in it nutritive qualities that the grain foods never possessed. Malt Breakfast Food has grown the cheapest proofs of its virtues as an aid to digestion, for the reason that it contains no starchy ingredients so common in other foods. Weak stomachs find it comforting and refreshing; it builds up the body and strengthens bones, muscles and tissues. Strong and weak find it a perfect food. See your grocer.

We certify that we have examined the above balance sheet, the Treasurer's books and vouchers and the Superintendent's fortnightly returns, and we find the same correct. The balance on deposit in the Ontario Bank at the end of the year was Eight Hundred and Seven 21-100 Dollars as above stated. The securities held by the Company, and consisting of seven debentures of the Town of Peterborough, amounting to ten thousand dollars, have also been examined by us.

Auditors, James A. Hall, T. Q. Quartermaine.

Dated the 16th day of January, 1902.

The auditors' report was adopted and is very satisfactory. While the balance on hand is not as large as in 1900 it is a very satisfactory report, as many improvements were made during the past year which are referred to in the report of the Superintendent. The general business being concluded, the meeting adjourned, after which the Directors held a short meeting.

DIRECTORS MEETING.

Mr. R. M. Dennistoun, moved, seconded by Dr. Burnham,—That the shareholders of the Little Lake Cemetery Company place on record a minute expressing their great regret at the resignation of Mr. Foord, who for twelve years has been the Superintendent of the Cemetery. During his long term of office Mr. Foord has proved himself a capable officer, an excellent horticulturist, a careful manager of finance, a thoroughly practical superintendent, and in addition a courteous gentleman in all his dealings with the shareholders who hereby express their pleasure at his appointment to a responsible position in Toronto, and we hope that he may be as successful in the future as he has been in Peterborough.—Carried.

The election of officers was proceeded with, and resulted as follows:

President.—W. H. Moore.
Sec.-Treas.—E. A. Peck.
Directors—Messrs. Lundy, Dennistoun, Stevenson, Shortly, Stapleton, Hay, Dr. Burnham, and Denne.
Managing Committee—Messrs. Stevenson, Hay, Shortly, Stapleton, and the President.

Dr. Burnham moved, seconded by Mr. Dennistoun—That a telephone be placed in the office of the Superintendent, providing a rate similar to that paid for private telephones can be secured, and that the superintendent have certain hours for his office hours during which time he could attend to telephone messages.—Carried.

Considerable discussion took place regarding this matter and it was suggested that Mr. Wise, the superintendent appoint certain hours—12 to 1 noon and 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. to attend to such calls as were made by telephone. It was plainly shown that when the telephone was in Mr. Foord's office that he was frequently called from his work in the most distant part of the cemetery, to answer the telephone on very trivial matters. For this reason it was decided to have certain hours appointed so that it would not be any loss of time to the superintendent.

The meeting adjourned.

Valuable Advice to Rheumatics

Eat meat sparingly, and take very little sugar. Avoid damp feet, drink water abundantly, and always rely on Polson's Nerviline as an absolute reliever of rheumatic pains. Being five times stronger than other remedies its power over pain is simply beyond belief. Buy a large 25c. bottle to-day, test it, and see if this is not so. Polson's Nerviline always cures rheumatism.

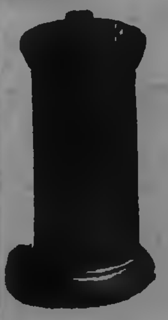
THE

Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau,
Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 5,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11 00
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	36 in.	10½ in.	14 00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	18.00
4	41 in.	16 in.	20 00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 2 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 28 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 2 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

The Ferreira Paid a Dividend of 450 Per Cent in 1898 and a 150 Per Cent on Account of 1899 (June). Before War was Declared.

Gold output of Transvaal mines for 1898, 4,555,000 ozs. $76,500-000.

Gold output for Transvaal mines for 1899, (9 months) 4'101,442 ozs, $70,000,000.

A very attractive method which enables the small invester to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust." It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in say five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time. Prices mentioned subject to change:

COMBINATION No. 1.

20 Klerksdorp at £14 9s, $71 90 per cent	$14.38
20 Witkopje at £15. $73 12, 20 per cent	14.63
20 Heidelburgs at £19 $92 62, 20 per cent	18.53
20 Salisbury at £1 7s 6d, $134.06, 20 per cent	26.81
20 Buluwayo Exp. at £2, 2s. 6d., $207.18	41.44
	$115.79

We shall be pleased to give particulars of other combinations. Write for booklet which will be ready about the end of January.

COMMANDO OF BOERS CUT UP A BRITISH PATROL

Captured Leaders Will be Banished—There will be no Extermination and no General Confiscation

London, Jan. 21.—The House of Commons this evening debated the amendment to the address in reply to the King's speech, asserting "that the House, while prepared to support all proper measures for the effective prosecution of the war, is of the opinion that the course pursued by the Ministry and its attitude toward settlement, have not conduced to the rapid termination of the war, and a durable peace."

In the course of the debate Colonial Secretary Chamberlain said that the assumption of Lord Rosebery in his recent speech at Chesterfield, that the Boers could at any time have the terms that Gen. Kitchener formerly offered to them, was a mistake. The Boers had flatly refused those terms, and since then Great Britain had lost heavily in lives and treasure. To offer such terms again would be bad diplomacy, and would encourage the Boers to continue the struggle. True, these terms still represented the spirit in which the Government would approach the conclusion of peace, but their details must be modified. The Government was not animated by vindictiveness, and was not deaf to reasonable overtures coming from responsible boers; but it was not prepared to take any action resembling weakness, doubt, or vacillation. Therefore the proclamation of August would not be withdrawn. There would, however, be a very large amnesty, as large as could be conferred with justice to the loyalists, those who surrendered, and Great Britain. There would be no extermination of the people, but the banishment of leaders who did not surrender could not be revoked. The settlement would be less hard than that imposed by the Northern States of America on the Southern States. There would be no general confiscation. He did not fear that irremovable bitterness would remain in South Africa. The war in America had resulted in complete reunion. Mr. Chamberlain instanced indications that the Boers were already inclining towards a settlement. Two thousand burghers, he said, were fighting on the British side, and the prisoners at Bermuda had petitioned for permission to take the oath. More than two hundred were willing to take the oath of allegiance immediately, and all the others were willing to take the oath of neutrality. Numbers of the prisoners at Ceylon had asked to be taken into the British service.

After Mr. Chamberlain's speech, Mr. Dillon, Irish Nationalist, moved to amend the amendment on the lines of the Irish pro-Boer views. The motion was rejected by a vote a 283 to 64. The minority consisted of Irish members and nine pro-Boer Radicals.

NO OVERTURES SO FAR

London, Jan. 22.—The Colonial Secretary, Mr. Chamberlain, in the House of Commons this afternoon said there was no foundation for the reports that overtures for peace in South Africa had been made by the Boer envoys.

TURNIPS AS JAM.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 22.—The embalmed beef investigation will be concluded tomorrow. Four Canadian firms, it seems, supplied corned beef for South Africa, and one firm evidently put in a poor lot. The result is that the reputation of Canada has been injured by the carelessness, or worse, of this one firm.

It is probable that an enquiry may be made into the shipment of Canadian jams, which were certainly not what they should have been. One Canadian officer declares that Canadian jam which he opened at Johannesburg consisted of turnip pulp with a little fruit flavoring.

CUT UP A BRITISH PATROL

Cradock, Cape Colony, Jan 22.—Wessels' commando of Boers on Saturday last cut up a patrol of fifty men belonging to the local town guard, on the Tarkastad Road. A few stragglers have returned. The remainder of the party are missing.

END THE WAR QUICKLY.

London, Jan. 21.—The correspondent of the Times at Pretoria says:—Nearly every day produces evidence of demoralization of the Boers in the Transvaal. A petition bearing the signatures of many prominent prisoners captured recently by the British has been issued, imploring Botha to "end quickly the terrible war."

Commandant Trichard has also written Botha, telling him he must come quickly and talk with his (Trichard's) commando, as his men are very much dissatisfied, threaten to surrender, and will no longer listen to their immediate commander. Prisoners now falling into the hands of the British invariably seem relieved rather than otherwise at being captured.

But it must not be inferred from this that wholesale surrenders of the Boers are necessarily imminent. The only alternative is to continue the paringdown process uninterruptedly. The great difficulty being met with by the British forces in these operations is want of horses. What is required apart from spare horses in large columns, only half the men being employed at night. It is impossible to require the men to stand more than three night marches weekly.

DR. HARBOTTLE SENT TO THE CENTRAL PRISON

The Alleged Pro-Boer Shoots One of His Suspected Tormenters and is Sentenced to One Year in the Central

Brantford, Jan. 21. — Dr. Harbottle of Burford was yesterday sentenced by Judge Hardy to one year in the Central Prison for shooting Herman Stuart on November 29, with intent to do bodily harm. Harbottle, who was reputed to be a Boer sympathizer, was constantly in conflict with the youth of Burford, and occasionally he and his home had been attacked. Dr. Harbottle believed that Stuart was one of his tormentors, and on the day in question the two men met at the village post office and walked along side by side for some few hundred yards. Suddenly the doctor drew from his pocket a revolver and fired straight into Stuart's face. The bullet grazed Stuart's temple and came out three inches behind the ear.

At the trial yesterday Mr. Stuart swore that the defendant had overtaken him on the sidewalk in question, and though they walked along in each other's company there had been no conversation. He did not know that the doctor was armed until he drew a revolver from his right pocket and fired. The ball struck him on the temple, the course of the bullet being from about an inch behind the eye three inches along the head. He was stunned by the shock, but did not fall, and picking up his cap, walked east to a doctor's office. The wound bled freely. He could not say what the motive for the deed had been. He had had no quarrel with the defendant. He thought, however, that spirit was the cause. The doctor's dislike of him came through an action brought against some boys by the defendant because of alleged damage to property during a demonstration. The witness had driven a load to Paris to attend the trial, and had himself been a witness there.

DR. HARBOTTLE EVIDENCE

Dr. Harbottle, the defendant, in his evidence said that his house had been stoned many times. He had been in danger of his life, and at times could not leave the house. He had reason to suspect Stuart of taking part in some of these assaults. He had seen him throw a stone at the house, and whenever Stuart was within hearing distance he (Stuart) would call out insulting names. Frequently shots were fired at the house. He had done all in his power to have the assault stopped. The revolver had been in his pocket since one evening when he had heard that an attempt would be made to enter his house, and he had armed himself in self-defence. In referring to the shooting, the witness said Stuart stepped up beside him and walked to the post office. The witness waited in the office so as to give Stuart time to get out of the way and go home. Stuart walked very slowly, apparently waiting for the witness to come up. "When I came up with him," said the doctor, "I tried to pass him, but he kept step with me and jostled me off the sidewalk. At the corner I drew the revolver and fired at him in such a manner that his hat would have been taken off and he would not have been hit at all. I did not intend to hit him, and would not have done so had he not dodged and thrown his head forward. I did not plan to shoot at Stuart particularly, and I did not do it for vengeance, but I wanted to have the attention of the authorities called to the fact that I was not protected."

The judge held that the annoyance referred to was no justification for the accused taking the law into his own hands in the manner in which he did. He found him guilty as charged, but, having regarded to his advanced years, his scholarly attainments and his eccentric nature, would let him off as lightly as possible.

NO TERMS TO THE BOERS.

Cape Colony Premier Still Calls for Unconditional Surrender.

Cape Town, Jan. 22—Sir John Gordon Sprigg, Prime Minister of Cape Colony presided to-day at a meeting of the Vigilance Association. In the course of an address he said that the termination of the war rested with the Boers, it being only necessary for them to lay down their arms. This, he added, would probably not occur just yet.

He was entirely opposed to England offering anything in the nature of terms to induce the Boers to submit. Recollections of the blow inflicted on the loyalists by the Majuba settlement induced him to take a leading part in the movement to prevent any recurrance of that fatal calamity. Unconditional surrender was absolutely essential, and the Boers were sure to receive better treatment than they deserve.

AMENDING THE MUNICIPAL ACT

T. H. Preston, M. P. P., will Have a Shot at it This Season

Mr. T. H. Preston, M.P.P. for South Brant, intends introducing the following bill before the Local Legislature: An Act to amend the Municipal Act. Section 551 of the said Act shall be amended by adding the following subsections:—4a, for directing and regulating the payment by the owners, lessees or occupants of real property, of the expense of cleaning and disposing of earth closets and privy vaults, and of adding such expense to the collector's roll, and collecting the same in like manner and with other municipal taxes. 4b, in the event of a municipality undertaking the work in the last sub-section referred to, as a municipal service, the said works shall be done exclusively by the officers and workmen employed by said municipality in such service, and the said municipality, its officers and workmen shall, in such case, have all the powers and authorities conferred upon the local Board of Health and its officers and workmen.

KICKED BY A HORSE

Mr. Jas. Cullen, of Town, Severely Injured in the Face by a Kick from a Horse

Mr. Jas. Cullen is suffering from the effects of a severe kick from a horse and as a result will be confined to his residence for some time. He was putting his team in the stable when one of the horses broke loose and ran into the yard. Mr. Cullen followed and tried to catch the animal and when quite close the beast turned and kicked Mr. Cullen in the face. One of the sharp caulks cut in near the eye, the other cutting his chin. Dr. Caldwell dressed the wound and Mr. Cullen is progressing favorably, although his face is badly swollen and is very painful.

Wellingtons Lose First Game

Last night the Wellingtons of Toronto played the Victorias, of Winnipeg, in that city for the Stanley Cup. The game was played under Manitoba rules and resulted in a score of 5—3 in favour of the Victorias.

The second match will be played tonight on the same ice under the O.H.A. rules and it is thought that the Wellingtons will win out.

HOCKEY.

The match between Lindsay and Peterborough which was to be played last night did not come off as expected. It appears that the Lindsay team has been disqualified by the O.H.A. for playing a man that was not eligible in their game with Port Hope.

There is considerable rivalry between Port Hope and the Peterborough's intermediates and when they meet in the Charlotte Street rink on Friday night a very exciting game may be expected.

Out of The Shadow

The discouragement, the despair of ill-health, out into the noon-tide glory of health, vigor, and strength. Are you wishing to replace weakness by strength, despondency by hope and expectation, pale cheeks and lusterless eyes, by the rose's bloom and sparkling eyes. If you but use Ferrozone, you will make rich, red blood, your nerves will grow strong. Old time vigor will return, and with it endurance that will enable you to live an active, energetic and successful life. Remember the name, Ferrozone. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

Annual Meeting of Bible Society

The annual meeting of the Bible Society will be held in St. Paul's Church on Wednesday evening, Jan. 29th at 8 p.m. The Rev. Bernard Bryan, Rector of the Church of Epiphany Toronto, will address the meeting. It is strongly urged that all friends will keep this date free from all other engagements.

Sure Cure For Sea Sickness, Nausea

Maladies of this type yield instantly to Polson's Nerviline, and if you suffer periodically from these complaints, just keep Nerviline at hand. A few drops in sweetened water gives instant relief, and in the course of half an hour the cure is complete. A large 25c. bottle of Nerviline in the house will save doctor bills, and a vast amount of suffering every year.

ANNUAL MEETING Y. W. C. A.

SATISFACTORY REPORTS OF THE DIFFERENT DEPARTMENTS

The Reports Show the Association to be in a Flourishing Condition — Good Work Done by the Society

The annual meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association was held last night, and most satisfactory reports were presented from the various departments of the work.

The meeting opened with devotional exercises followed by the president's address, giving a world-wide view of the Association's work.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The President's address was read by Miss Roberts, and was as follows:

My dear sisters,—I am glad to meet you here to-night in this large comfortable room. I would like to give you a little—very little—glimpse of what our Association is doing in the world—in the regions beyond. Mrs. Harris, President of the Dominion Association says you girls here and all the other girls who are members of this association all over the world, are the daughters; the secretary, the matron, with the Board, are the mothers; the Dominion association the grandmother, and the World association the great grand mother. The strongest ropes are made of strands, strong only through union. It is this union that makes the strength of our association, our standard—self sacrifice, and love, a kindly welcome, and a warm sympathy. The world needs it.

How skillful grows the hand
That obeyeth love's command.

Remember the light that shines farthest, shines brightest at home. The badge of the world's Y.W.C.A. is a medal with the Eastern Hemisphere on one side and the Western on the other side and the motto "By love serve one another," on one side and "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord," on the other. Our object is to take each other by the hand and help each other nearer to our Lord Jesus Christ; to know more of his forgiving love; to testify for Him in our consecrated lives; to lead each other up to the highest ideals of womanhood. The Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. are a necessary link between the world and the church—the down town office of the church. There are nine national Y.W.C.A. buildings in London, England. There are seventy homes and the central office gives an idea of the amount and magnitude of the task. They have a city office in which is a man secretary with two lady under-secretaries, also a continental office. Here we find thirty nationalities, strangers in a strange land seeking a home in the association. The secretary here speaks all these languages. In the homes in London the girls can bring their lunch or get hot coffee for 1d and soup, bread and coffee for 2d. The headquarters of the Y.W.C.A. in Ireland is in Dublin. This association this year is sending out twenty-five Irish ladies to the foreign fields. One mother has given five daughters to this work. In Rome the President is the sister of the British Consul. There is great need here and peculiar difficulties. Roman Catholic girls are not allowed to enter a Protestant church, but the Y.W.C.A. is not so regarded. The home, educational and social advantages are valued; here the secretary has to be very tactful, and finds many hungry hearts. The Italian girls look like Americans, but are prettier. In Gibraltar among the jargon of tongues it is like home to see the Y.W.C.A. sign; here are bright cheery rooms, filled where possible with beautiful flowers—indeed flowers are found in every Y.W.C.A. home, bringing a message of love and purity from their Creator. In Heidelberg, Germany, they have a directory in which is the name and address of every association in the world. A copy of this is given to every girl who is going to other places; letters of introduction are given, and letters are sent before she leaves to the association in the place she is going to, asking them to meet her at the railway station. In France the Y.W.C.A. is flourishing. In Paris they have most beautiful homes and over one door is written "Asked of God, 1890; given of God 1895."

In November 1901, during the Y.W.C.A. week of prayer held in London, England, there were several representatives from different parts of the world, and the place for which was given the most earnest prayer was Alexandria in Egypt. Miss Rose Johnstone related how she had been led into the work from the desert and how God had signally shown his approval. Often there is no bed left for the workers because of the number of applications, girls of all nationalities finding themselves alone in Alexandria, and needing the safe shelter of a home. She told of the happy Christian influence of the home prayer, which was offered for means to procure a larger home—before the week was over £250 was sent for this purpose from a distant land—the first received. In China and Japan there are Y.W.C.A. homes; there is also great need to extend the work in these lands. Miss Daw told of the spread of the work among Bengals Christian women. The notes on the monthly subject are translated into seven Indian languages, teaching them how to study the bible. Mr. Dovey spoke of the extension of the work in Australia. The picture of the Y.W.C.A. building at Bombay, complete and furnished, together with the encouraging reports from so many places, was often the subject of praise.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The Secretary's report was read by Mrs. Kennedy, Secretary of the Board, and was as follows:

In taking a look over the past year and meditating over the changes that have taken place, how heavy clouds have been lifted, how hearts have been touched and responded to the call of help, how a long felt need has been realised in a way being opened up to extend our work for young women, and thereby advance the Kingdom of Christ. We realise a new era has broken in upon us, and now at the close of another year, our hearts do rejoice. We give thanks and sing "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow." We are encouraged to trust more implicitly in the promises of God, to look to Him for more grace and patience, to toil on faithfully against every obstacle, knowing that He will bring us off more than conquerors over every foe.

During the month of March, Miss Carson, our travelling secretary, visited us, and while she was here a general meeting was held. Through the kindness of Mrs. A. L. Davis, her home was thrown open on this occasion and a very enthusiastic meeting took place. It was the general opinion of those present that the rooms we were occupying on Brock street were not large enough for the successful carrying on of our work and that an effort should be made to secure larger premises, which resulted in our locating in our present rooms on George street, which were very kindly given us by Hon. Geo. A. Cox for one year free of rent. The members of the Board desire to express a deep sense of gratitude to Mr. Cox for his kindly and timely offer.

At the regular meeting of the Board, held in April, it was thought best to appoint an advisory board of four gentlemen, namely Messrs. Davis, Dennistoun, Roger and Potter, their counsel being of material assistance on several occasions. It was also unanimously carried at this meeting that a trained secretary be secured for our work. Miss Dickson was selected, whose duties commenced the 1st of September, when the new rooms were opened. Public meetings were held on the last Sunday and Monday of the month, which were addressed by Miss Carson, being largely attended.

We as a Board appreciate the enthusiasm and general interest taken by the public, and at the same time wish to thank all those who have very kindly assisted us in the furnishing of our new rooms, also to heartily thank the Young Men's Christian Association for furnishing the gymnasium. We also wish to tender our thanks to the editors of town papers for the cordial way they have accorded us the press, also to thank the teachers of the various classes for their cheerful services given gratuitously. Only those associated with the Board know how grateful we feel. We cannot close without testifying to the faithfulness of our general secretary Miss Dickson. Since her appointment, the work has been going on very satisfactorily. We believe we were blessed in securing a young woman of strong Christian character, one whose heart is in the work for saving young women. We hope our new Board will meet with even more encouragement and success than we have in the year that has just closed.

LIBBIE B. KENNEDY,
Secretary of Board.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

The treasurer's report was presented by Miss Morrow as follows:

AFTERMATH OF THE FIRE

The Losses in Some Cases will be Heavy—Amount of Insurance Carried

The losses in yesterday's fire are very heavy. Miss Rudkins had a stock of goods valued at $5,000 in the store on which there was only $2,500 insurance.

Mr. W. G. Howden's loss, which consisted of stock on hand, fixtures, etc., amounts to about $1,000, which is fully covered by insurance.

Mr. Pete Simons stock of tailoring goods was damaged to the extent of about $600, and is covered by insurance.

Mr. Harry Long suffers more severely than was expected, by the fire. The damage to his property is about $4,500, being made up as follows: Damage to building, $3,000: furniture, $1,000 stock, $500. There is $3,500 insurance on the building, and we believe the stock and fixtures were fully insured.

The Toronto Saving & Loan Co., who own the Crystal Block, valued at $15,000, have only $6,500 insurance in the Western.

One of the plate glass windows in front of the Peterborough Bookstore was broken by the intense heat.

The Crystal Block was completely gutted. The ground floor is all that remains intact.

The cause of the fire is still a mystery. The building was all right about an hour before the fire broke out.

NON-COMS WILL DANCE

It Will Take Place on Either February the Third or Fourth.

The dance under the auspices of the non-Commissioned Officers of the 57th. Regiment will take place on Feb. 3rd and 4th, and promises to be a grand affair. The committee have decided to have the dance in the Opera House as this is the most suitable place for an affair of the kind in town. The hall will be gaily decorated and the brilliant uniforms of the officers and men will present a pleasing sight.

The dance will be given by the kind premission of Lt. Col. Edwards and officers of the regiment. The committee which has charge of the affair is composed of Col. Sergt, R. Cotterill, Staff Sergt. Sharp, Sergt. G. C. Burnham, Corporals, Paddon, Best Lundy and Gemmell, Sergt Burnham is Hon. Secy. of the dance. It is quite likely the crack band of the regiment will be present and supply part of the music.

THE GIFT OF THE CHOIR

A Handsome Set of Brevaries, Ritual and Pen Presented to Rev. Father McColl

In order to show his appreciation of the excellent work done by his two choirs, Rev. Father McColl, previous to his departure from Ennismore, invited the members of his two choirs to a supper. All the members and ex-members turned out and the Presbytery presented a very lively appearance. After the good things provided had been disposed of, a pleasant evening was spent in songs, recitations, etc., and also speeches regarding the departure of Father McColl were made. Father McColl always grateful and kind made a very nice address setting forth the importance of the work to be done by the choir and the necessity of having a high standard of music. He thanked the choir for the deep interest they had always taken in their work, and hoped that they would in future as in the past look upon the preparation of music for the services as a holy duty.

Father McColl was made the recipient of a neat address and a handsome set of Brevaries, Ritual and pen.

Father McColl was taken completely by surprise but recovered himself and made a feeling reply, in which he expressed his sincere appreciation of the honor done him.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT RESENTS IRISH SLURS

Hon. Mr. Balfour Vigorously Denounced the Imputations and was Loudly Applauded

CHAMBERLAIN CRITICIZES THE LIBERAL PRESS

Mrs. Redmond Interupts the Speaker and Mr. Redmond Called to Order—Are Allans in Alleged Trust

London, Jan. 22.—Mr. Balfour's spirited rebuke last night of the Nationalists in the Commons for the imputation on the loyalty of Canada and Australia was warmly applauded in Ministerial circles.

O'Kelly asked whether steps would be taken to induce the colonies to pay a share of the cost of the war.

Mr. Balfour evoked loud Ministerial and Liberal Imperialist cheers by his grateful acknowledgement of the contributions the colonies had already voluntarily made in men and money, and said the imputation in question was uncalled for, and expressed in quite unnecessarily offensive language.

W. Redmond asked what the colonies had paid.

The Speaker ruled him out of order.

Redmond, whose wife is an Australian shouted: "Why not ask Australia to pay as well as Ireland?"

Cries of "Order!"

The incident illustrated the solidarity of the Ministerialists and Liberals in appreciation of the part Canada and Australia played in the war.

On the other hand Chamberlain criticised the Liberal press for insisting that the colonies should have no say in the South African settlement.

STEAMSHIP TRUST.

No confirmation is obtainable here of the statement that the Allan Line is included in the plans now being submitted by J. Pierpont Morgan for a gigantic trust of transatlantic steamers, though steamship authorities here may doubtless the Allans, like most British firms, would sell ships if a sufficiently big price were given.

WEDDING BELLS

Two Cathedral Weddings Yesterday Morning—The Contracting Parties.

CROWLEY—FLAHERTY

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning the marriage took place of Mr. Patrick Flaherty, of Otonabee, to Miss Annie Crowley, daughter of Mr. David Crowley of the same place. The bride was assisted by her sister Miss Catherine Crowley, while Mr. Michael O'Brien performed the duties of groomsman.

DOHERTY HEFFERMAN

At nine o'clock mass yesterday, Mr. Michael Hefferman, of Otonabee, was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Doherty, daughter of Mr. John Doherty, also of Otonabee. The bride was assisted by Miss Mary A. Doherty and Mr. Thos. Powers performed the duties of groomsman.

POULTRY SHOW

Formally Opened to the Public Yesterday Afternoon—The Exhibits

The Peterborough Poultry and Pet stock exhibition opened yesterday afternoon at two o'clock. The attendance in the afternoon was not large, in the evening a large number visited the building in spite of the weather, and were well pleased with the exhibits. Mr. True, of Lindsay, was busy all afternoon in judging the poultry and his work will not be completed until early this afternoon.

The exhibits number over 800 and are the finest collection of birds ever shown here.

A large number of ducks, geese and turkeys are on exhibition and among them are several very large birds, one turkey especially is worth the entrance fee to see it.

Last night Mr. Silverwood, of Lindsay, one of the best authorities on poultry gave an address on "Poultry, from the purchasers stand point," which was greatly appreciated. Mr. Silverwood is an experienced poultry raiser and knows how to handle the subject. This afternoon he will speak on "Poultry, from breeders standpoint.

There should be a good attendance today and to-morrow. The doors are open from 10 a.m., to 10 p.m.

A Brief But Telling Letter From a Famed Educational Establishment.

Paine's Celery Compound

Is Called

The "Wonder-Working Machine."

NO OTHER REMEDY HAS EVER BEEN SO HIGHLY RECOMMENDED

When the nervous system is out of repair, disease in some form lays its deadly hand upon you. Nerve troubles give full and forcible warning of their presence. Your insomnia, dyspepsia, indigestion, excruciating neuralgia, rheumatism, liver complaint and kidney disease are all strong reminders that the brain and nerve centres need nourishment and strength.

Paine's Celery Compound does for you a work that no other medicine can accomplish. It quickly nourishes all nerve tissues and purifies the blood, removing from it all impurities and poisonous acids. All who give Paine's Celery Compound a trial soon experience strength and freedom from disease. The Sisters of the Convent of the "Holy Names of Jesus and Mary," Montreal, write as follows:

"We feel it our duty to add our testimony in favor of your "wonder-working" Paine's Celery Compound. Many Sisters suffering from debility dyspepsia, sleeplessness and indigestion, have been completely relieved after taking it. We shall strongly recommend its use in all our houses, as the best medicine to restore health, and give tone and vigor to the nervous system."

The Difference

We take the following from the Lindsay Post:

"Ratepayers who notice any neglect of duty on the part of snowplow contractors should drop a postal card to Town Commissioner Chalmers or leave a statement in writing with Town Clerk Knowlson, when the matter will be attended to promptly."

In Peterborough things are different. A man may keep on complaining and no notice whatever is taken of his grievance. We know of cases where street watering was neglected for weeks, and the Town Engineer notified personally and by letter without the slightest notice being taken of it. This state of affairs cannot last forever.

Good Things in a Bad Place

Pies, puddings, cake and goodies of all sorts (missionaries excepted) are intended for human use, but such good things should not be put in a bad stomach. They are nearly always made up of nourishing articles such as milk, sugar, butter, flour, etc., but the combinations are too hard for any but healty stomachs to digest.

You must use carefully selected food if you are a little below par, and the sooner you do this the sooner your stomach will heal up and get strong again so that you can eat whatever pleases the appetite.

Don't be a crank and think you can only drink hot water and eat white bread.

Use Grape-Nuts breakfast food with some rich cream, and you will discover the food will agree with the weakest stomach and supply the highest form of nourishment, pre-digested and ready for quick change into good, rich blood.

Strength (nerve strength) comes from feeding on Grape-Nuts. There's a reason. Try it and prove for yourself.

It seems good to be [illegible] and feel well fed.

THE ADVERTISING OF MUNICIPAL SECURITIES.

Gustave Simon, Bond Editor, The Financier.

Although the advertising of bonds and securities has been somewhat overlooked, still it is important enough to warrant some attention in advertising trade journals, as it presents an excellent field.

The municipality which wishes to call the attention of bankers throughout the United States to its bond offering, usually fails absolutely to recognize high-class banking journals, thinking that its local papers will do all that is necessary for the sale of its securities. This is a mistake. Let us say that the village of Sparhock has an issue of $60,000 in bonds for sale, and the authorities wish to bring the facts before all parties who may be interested in the offering. The first step they take is to run a small advertisement, calling for bids, in the Sparhock Trumpet, which only reaches to a very small degree the class of people who are bond buyers. Bankers are not reached in this way. Tell this to the officials in charge and they will say that no further appropriation for advertising has been granted, or will be granted.

Thus, a good, reliable publication, which reaches the proper firms dealing in municipals is overlooked, and, as papers of this class are largely taken by firms dealing in these securities, they are often unaware of the proposed sale, losing for the village large sums, which, if it would use publications of this kind, they would receive in bids and premiums.

But, say the village inserts an advertisement in a well-standing paper, publishing matters on municipal bonds. In short order inquiries will begin to pour in; bids will be submitted, and finally on the date of the sale, high competition will be the result. Many times has the writer tried to influence a village official to look into the matter with more consideration, but to no avail.

Cannot a reliable journal advance the premium on a bond by at least one-half per cent., if the wording of an advertisement is correct and attractive? Say the issue is for $50,000. Even on a par value a bid of one-half per cent higher would net a profit to the municipality of $250, which would certainly pay the advertising cost many, many times over.

Generally the officials of a village will listen to some eloquent lawyer, who will lay before them the uselessness of advertising their bond sales outside of the local papers. In this case, it is quite probable that a private deal will be effected, and the general banking world will be kept in the dark about the proceedings, thus casting discredit upon the place of issuance. The financial papers make it a point to report matters correctly, but this is sometimes impossible, owing to the confusing reports and the lack of details as to the issue. And so, if three or more papers insert a little unofficial notice, it does more harm than good. But if the official notice is inserted, it is matter taken for granted, and bids from the investment bankers will follow to the satisfaction of the municipal officers.

It should also be the business of the financial journal to have a complete debt statement of the place issuing the securities, or it would be beneficial to insert this important factor in connection with the advertisement. Village clerks, recorders, treasurers, and all others in charge of sales, know full well that a small, one-inch advertisement will do more service than a six-inch unofficial report as culled from some other source. A splendid specimen of a bond ad is the following:

SPARTANBURG COUNTY

South Carolina.

$60,000 4 Per Cent. 20 Years.

The County Board of Commissioners of Spartanburg County, So. Carolina, will receive bids until DECEMBER 3D, 1901, for $60,000.00 of 20-year 4 per cent. coupon bonds of said County, bearing date of January 1st, 1902, interest payable 1st January, 1st July.

The bonds are non-taxable.

The right to reject any and all bids is reserved.

The present bond debt of the county is........................$212,000 00

And the assessed value of property is............................$11,808,271 60

Copy of act authorizing bonds and any further information can be had by addressing

J. D. LEONARD.
County Supervisor,
Spartanburg, S.C

It will be noticed that every point is carefully covered, and if other municipalities will take a lesson from this notice, they will be sure to obtain far better results than they anticipate. The bankers at once see when the bonds mature, how much interest they bear, the debt of the county, and, in fact, everything is concisely stated entirely to the credit of the city.

ASSESSMENT LEGISLATION.

A most important duty which devolves upon the Legislature at the present session is the putting right, beyond doubt or quibble, of that notorious section 28 of the Assessment Act, which has come to be known as the scrap-iron law. The law-makers thought they had accomplished the end last year, but they discovered that Maxwell knew what he was talking about when in his standard work, "The Interpretation of the Statutes," he says, "Language is rarely so free from ambiguity as to be incapable of being used in more than one sense." Perhaps the Judges of the Court of Appeal will agree with the decision which has been given, but if they do, there must be new legislation, and that at the earliest moment.

Afterwards it will be necessary to deal with the numerous less important inequalities of the present Assessment Act, of which we will hear something one of these days, when the commission hands out its final report. The scope of that commission was so wide and the injustices, real and imaginary, which were brought to its attention were so varied, that it will be strange if many of the issues raised by their recommendations do not give the Legislature a great deal of work. No law gets closer to the firesides of our Province than the Assessment Act, and a far-reaching revision of it—a revision introducing changes which should be applicable to conditions for many years—should be adopted only after consideration, the most careful, calm, and non-partizan which the members of the Legislature can bestow upon it.

It is a question if such consideration will be available during the present session. In the first place time will be limited, for a great many speeches must needs be delivered for subsequent service in pamphlet form, carefully franked to the back townships. And, besides, there is that prohibition problem from the Privy Council to be disposed of. While in the public accounts every fifty cent item for a coal scuttle will have to be probed to make sure a scandal is not concealed. A pre-election fever is already in the air and will grow as the session advances. A grave problem like the Assessment question will be in danger of being slighted. By a year from now every taxpayer in the Province would have had an opportunity to acquaint himself with the provisions of the proposed legislation, and to discuss all the pros and cons of it as it would apply to himself and his neighbors. And it would be a fine subject for a brand new Legislature to tackle.

Reincarnation Defined.

The doctrine of reincarnation, along with Karma and other Oriental hypotheses relating to the spiritual life, has attracted much attention in the Occident of late years, and, as now appears, it has even become a subject of discussion among the Dutch Jews. The Bombay "Guardian" gives a dialogue on "transmigration" of souls, between two gentlemen of this nationality. As the doctrine is often found to be a difficult one for Western comprehension, we give the "Guardian's" report of the conversation, which has the merit of being at least a clear statement: Strauss—O, say, Mishter Isaacs, vot new dochtrine ish dis I hear? Dey call it tdrampsmikrashun. Isaacs — O, tdrampsmikrashun, tdrampsmikrashun; you not know vot dot is? Strauss—No, und I hears very much about it sometimes now. Isaacs—Vell! Vell! I soon dtell you vot tdrampsmikrashun is. It is dis vay. You are now Strauss. Some day you dies, und den your soul or spirit goes into a tdonkey. Den some mornin' I gets up und I valks oudt early down ve vay, und I meets dot tdonkey, und it (you) brays und brays, und says, "Mishter Isaacs! Mishter Isaacs!" Und I says, "Vy, who are you? I tdon't know you." Und you says, "Vy Mr. Isaacs, you tdon't know me? Vy, I am Strauss!" Und I says, "Vot, you Strauss? No! No! Vy you are a tdonkey." A Girl With Grit

Will "go" until she drops, and think she's doing rather a fine thing. Very often the future shows her that she was laying the foundation for years of unhappiness. When the back aches, when there is irregularity or any other womanly ill, then the first duty a woman owes to herself is to find a cure for her ailments.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in cases of womanly disease will insure a prompt restoration to sound health. It regulates the periods, stops unhealthy drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free of charge. All correspondence absolutely private and confidential. In his thirty years and over of medical practice Dr. Pierce, assisted by his staff of nearly a score of physicians, has treated and cured more than half a million women. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I will drop you a few lines to-day to let you know that I am feeling well now," writes Miss Annie Stephens, of Belleville, Wood Co., West Va. "I feel like a new woman. I took several bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have no headache now, and no more pain in my side; no bearing-down pain any more. I think that there is no medicine like Dr. Pierce's medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Naked Greeks and Romans.

A TRAVELING correspondent of the "Argonaut" writes that one rainy day lately he met "ar Middle West" in the Louvre. He was seated, looking across the room at that beautiful picture, "La Gioconda."

"Sit down, I've got something to say," said he. I sat next to him. "I've had a relapse; I'm not feeling well today. I've just come up from the museum downstairs and I've seen the same nakedness there that I saw in Italy. I don't know whether it is on account of my nervous prostration that I cannot see straight, or have not mental veracity, as you say a great Englishman named Carlyle called the great quality of seeing things correctly; but, however that may be, I am sick and tired and utterly disgusted with the exposure of the naked human figure in Italy and France. In Italy you see these naked old Greeks and Romans everywhere—in the shops, museums, picture galleries. They are unfit for anything but the bathtub. Do you suppose that I will let my two young daughters see these things? Not for all the riches of the great State of Ohio would I do it. I gave a groan whenever I saw young American girls going through those museums and galleries. I never saw Italian, French, German or English girls—only American girls—looking at Jupiter as the swan and Leda, for instance.

"Now I am sitting here looking at that lovely Joconde, dressed nearly up to the neck, with her charming smile and interesting face. That's all I want to see of a woman, or a man—the face. Ralf Stanzio painted one picture of a woman, not a Madonna, dressed up to the neck; La Fornarina, she was a bakeressee the guide told me. He loved her; think of loving a woman who stood all day in front of a roaring furnace, baking bread, in hot summery Italy. He painted another one of her showing her—well, not dressed up to the neck. But my wife says I must not talk of such things. I have seen five thousand such naked ladies in Italy—of course I mean in pictures and statues—and I'm tired of them. I prefer looking at cow or horse pictures. It rests me.

"But isn't that Joconde picture a beauty! That's the way to paint men and women, dressed up to the neck. When I see naked pictures in a man's house, I think there's a coarse streak running through him. When I see them in a woman's house—it disgusts me. When I get back to Chicago I am going to send five thousand nightshirts to the Italian Government as a present, to cover the naked statues, and I am going to give them my pyjamas, too—that new-fangled scheme my wife makes me wear. She says they are fashionable. What's the use of being fashionable when you are in bed?—nobody sees you. My father slept in his jeans, and he lived till he was eighty, too. That's a copy of a German joke."

Like sheep that be leaderless are many women come together for much talk.

The happiest mother of daughters is she who has only sons.

The minds of women are quicksilver and their hearts of wax.

Those of the public who may imagine that there is no room for initiative and ingenuity in the cats' meat trade, says the London "Chronicle," are vastly mistaken. In Kensington an enterprising young fellow is said to be making a fortune through the happy idea of supplying, on request, fish instead of meat for the cats on his round. The pets of the prosperous can obtain meat at almost any time, and they will not look, for the most part, at the wares of the cats' meat man. But no cat can resist a tasty bit of fish, be it offered when it may, and a huge success is the result of the innovation. Again, there are certain purveyors who take trouble to obtain a close knowledge of every single animal on their rounds and its little peculiarities. This knowledge once gained, the cats' meat man buys and cuts his portions accordingly, taking care that each cat gets its favorite bit. All chance of rivalry is removed at once by this means, for a cat will not for weeks, unless driven by desperate hunger, touch the strange cuts of a new purveyor.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

He drew the girl to her feet as he spoke, and would have supported her to a seat, but Katharine recoiled from him, and staggered into the big arm-chair without his aid.

His brow darkened, then cleared.

"Never mind; I can wait. I have won so far—the rest [illegible] follow," he muttered between his teeth.

And Katharine, in that pause, was thinking wildly, desperately.

"Let me be calm. I must temporise, then I must get away — anywhere, to the utmost ends of the world!— to escape from him."

Poor girl! She had her woman's wits to aid her, but she was no match for such a nature as Gordon Smythe's. She little knew that her silence and calmness were translated as rightly as though she had spoken out her thoughts.

Gordon smiled complacently as he watched her.

"She thinks to deceive me!" he muttered to himself. "Poor fool! An escape will not be so easy, as she will find! By Jove! I never bargained for a jealous woman as an ally, nor for a lover to play into my hands. Katharine is the sort of being who will tear out her very heart for the man she loves. Curse him!"

He took out another cigarette and lit it quietly, then came nearer to the girl and sat down.

"Now we are going to be sensible, aren't we? Commend me to you Kattie, for a clever woman. You were simply wasted in Ledstone, a second-rate, dirty, provincial town."

Katharine shuddered. He could even dare to speak of Ledstone then —Ledstone, the place where——"

Gordon took no notice of the shudder.

"You require bright scenes, blue skies, and cheerful society, and you shall have it. I have often heard you descant to my mother on the charm and beauty of continental life, my girl, and a thoroughly jolly one you shall find it. I can answer for that!"

Katharine was trembling in every limb. Words of loathing, hatred, pride rose to her lips, but she forced them back; she must be silent, she told herself feverishly, and wait. Some chance of escape must be found —it should be found, even if it cost her her life.

Gordon smiled to himself and smoked on slowly.

"You are very silent, Kattie," he observed, turning his lurid eyes on her. "Don't you like the plan? Oh, well, we must give it a trial, and then if you can suggest anything better, why, of course, I will be quite ready to—— No, no, my dear wife, sit down;" for, with an inarticulate murmur Katharine had sprung to her feet again. "Sit down, I have not half finished, and you need not be alarmed that Miss Mostyn will require you; she has very kindly given us the use of the library for this afternoon. I dare say she imagines, naturally, that a husband and wife have a good deal to say to one another, and so she——"

"You— you have told——" Katharine could get no farther; words failed her, and, bending forward, she buried her ashen face in her hands.

Gordon smiled again as he blew another cloud of smoke from between his lips.

"I told her," he said softly, "that it was with great joy I had received and accepted the kind invitation she telegraphed to me yesterday afternoon, as I was most desirous of making my peace with the dearest and loveliest little wife in the world— a wife who was at that moment under her roof, and acting as her companion. I think Miss Mostyn a very sympathetic woman; very sympathetic, indeed!" Gordon finished drily.

Katharine was weeping bitterly.

"Come," he said softly. "Come, you have shed quite enough tears for to-day. I don't want your eyes to be spoiled entirely— they are much too beautiful. Come!" he put his hand suddenly on her shoulder. "Do you hear me, Katharine?"

The bitterness of her despair woke her proud anger.

"Leave me!" she cried wildly, darting from the chair and his touch. "Leave me! I—I can bear no more. If you come near me again, I will kill myself; I swear it!"

For one instant she reared her tall, graceful form with a superb gesture.

"I loathe you, I hate you, Gordon Smythe!" she said in fierce concentrated accents, "and though I sacrificed myself once, I will not again. Go! Go, before I rouse the entire household, and tell them what a coward and villain you are. Go, I say, or——" Her voice broke; as quickly as it had come, her strength left her. She clutched wildly at a chair, at anything for support, her form swaying to and fro uncertainly. A low, broken groan came from her white lips as she felt herself caught in Gordon's strong, hateful arms, and clasped close to his black, murderous heart; and then the tension of the brain relaxed, the horror faded into the background; mistily and vaguely, nature gave forth her aid at last, and Katharine knew no more.

"You loathe me, you hate me, do you?" Gordon muttered, gazing down at the still, white, lovely face. "Loathe me, hate me though you may, I am your master, Katharine, and you know it at last!"

Bending his lips, he poured passionate kisses on her unconscious face, and then, putting her down on the cushioned chair, stood guard over her till she should recover, till the poor, weary, heart-broken spirit struggled back to life again— a life that was worse to her than death itself!

CHAPTER XX.

Gordon Smythe had a very distinct plan for the future sketched in his mind as he sat gazing at Katharine's mute, white face. He had been making up his mind ever since that journey to Bromley, and the discovery he made, there, that he should bring Katharine to her senses, not only for the sake of satisfying his revenge, but as a means of procuring for himself a life full of luxury and idleness.

The girl's beauty was his only capital, but Gordon knew his world. Katharine's face was a possession to conjure with. He had resolved to leave London; in point of fact, London was getting just a trifle too hot to hold him, and he had not spent so pleasant a time there since Craven Adair's disappearance that he should care to make it his perpetual home; added to which the occupation which his ambitious heart had determined on following was not one calculated to flourish in England, or under English legislation. The continent held forth much brighter prospects to him, with Katharine as his decoy; in plain words, he saw no reason why he should not turn his long experience in gambling to a most excellent account. At any rate, he meant to try, regardless of any obstacle the girl might put in his path, and heedless of his mother's failing health, from the constant worry and care he had caused her.

All this he planned and arranged during the past week or so, and it really seemed to him a stroke of the most extraordinary luck when he received a telegram from Barbara Mostyn, begging him to overlook the briefness of the invitation, and to give her the pleasure of his company at Brezley Hall without further delay.

Gordon had been a little amazed at this invitation, but in the very first moment of his meeting with Barbara he had fathomed the mystery, and had discovered that jealousy and hatred of Katharine were at the bottom of it all. Although he had told Katharine he had spoken of their marriage to Miss Mostyn, he had only deceived her; he never did anything hastily, and he wanted to see how the land lay with Barbara before he confided too much to her. He had lied to Katharine on this point, because he wished to impress upon her that there was no escaping him, and as we have seen, he succeeded even beyond his hopes.

"Now let me see how I must continue," he thought to himself, rising to pace to and fro, and making no effort to restore Katharine to consciousness. "I want no scenes with that parson chap; he might give me some trouble. I must get her more completely into my power. If I boldly state that she is my wife, that will not do. She has a tongue in her head and would speak, and though I have managed to silence her effectually, her words might have an ugly significance to others; very ugly, taking into consideration the fact that Adair has disappeared. Let me think. That Mostyn girl is as eager to do her harm as I am to get her completely under my thumb. She would help me in anything, but that fellow Otway may give me some trouble. Surely I am not going to be beaten when I have got so far as this."

His brows contracted, and he bit his lip savagely, but all of a sudden his face cleared.

"I have it!" he muttered to himself; "of course the very thing! What a fool I was not to think of it before! The sweet Barbara will perform her share most admirably, while Katharine"— he moved a step nearer — "Katharine will do anything in the world to save that man from trouble. She will sacrifice health, honor, even life itself for her love. I know her —I know her well!"

His eyes fastened themselves savagely on her wan, lovely face, and a mad sort of feeling surged up in his heart, as he realised that with all his brutality, his strength, his wicked power, he could never be master of the girl's soul; he could never be anything but hateful and degraded in her eyes.

He turned away with a short, uncomfortable laugh; conscience will assert itself sometimes, and brief-lived though it was, a wave of self-disgust passed through Gordon Smythe's breast as these thoughts came. But that feeling soon passed, and old, evil ones sprang up in its place.

"Yes," he said, over and over again to himself. "Yes, that will do; nothing could be better. I fancy Miss Mostyn will come to my aid. I must risk that, however, for there is no time to lose; she is coming to herself. I must strike while the iron is hot, and then get at the gentle Barbara afterward."

Katharine's lips had parted, and a sigh had come from between them.

Gordon had thrown himself into his old attitude on a chair, and, with his arms folded, was carefully surveying her with a smile. Consciousness did not come entirely at first, but, as the faintness wore off, the dazed look vanished out of her lovely orbs.

A small stand of liquors and spirits was on one table, and Gordon, rising, poured out a little dose of brandy.

"Drink this!" he commanded abruptly. "No, don't refuse. You will require all your strength, I can tell you."

In fact her undeniable illness was alarming and provoking to him. A sick wife was not exactly what he wanted. Weakened beyond all description, Katharine found herself obeying him. She swallowed the spirit, and he left her in peace for a moment or two, then, drawing up his chair close to her side, he bent forward confidentially.

"I am glad we are beginning to understand each other so well, Kattie," he said, in that semi-affectionate, familiar tone which made her proud blood boil; "it is so much better to begin as we mean to go on, isn't it?"

Gordon smiled to himself; he understood her face thoroughly.

"Of course you have determined to be a sensible girl, and do everything as I wish, Kattie; haven't you?"

She shivered, and clung to the arm of the chair for protection, as it were.

"I will never link my life to yours! I will die first!" she muttered, hoarsely and quickly.

Gordon laughed outright.

"A most praiseworthy declaration! Die! Oh, by all means, my dear, die, if it will give you any satisfaction to do so! Tastes differ! I don't consider that death holds out such tempting prospects; but then I forget— all martyred young females talk of dying on the smallest provocation, don't they?"

Katharine shivered again. What—what was she to do with such a nature as this to struggle against?

"Laugh away!" she said bitterly, in tones of utter misery. "I know there is not a spark of honor, of manliness, of generosity in you to which I can appeal, but"— her voice sank from weakness— "I do— do not mean to even speak with you again if I can help it; there are others who will help me when the truth is told, who will——"

"Are there?" Gordon interrupted with a sneer. "You think the world will treat you with kindness and consideration when my story has been told?"

Katharine's anguish-laden eyes met his.

"They will not believe your story," she said feebly.

"Will they not? I must beg to differ from you in that, Kattie. Perhaps you think they will believe yours. Foolish child! Why, when it came to be proved, it would melt into thin air!"

Katharine drew a deep, sharp breath.

"You— you forget!" she whispered. "There is always the— the old mine, and—" she could say no more.

"The old mine? Oh, yes, of course, that remains; but what of it? There is nothing in the mine that would support your accusation!"

Katharine repeated the last words to herself in a slow, dazed way. She looked at him undecidedly, then gave a broken cry, and buried her face in her hands suddenly.

Was he right after all, and her brain was going? The thought rushed wildly into her mind.

"Absolutely nothing!" Smythe went on suavely. "And with Craven Adair out in Australia, why, you see, my dear Kattie, your story would be nowhere beside mine; would it?"

"Oh, what crime have I ever committed that my life should be darkened and cursed by you as it is now?"

The words broke fiercely from her pale lips, and Gordon frowned.

"Come," he said roughly, "we have had enough heroics for to-day; let us arrive at a good, practical understanding. You are my wife, there is no gainsaying that. You wish our marriage to be denied and kept secret, do you not?"

A momentary gleam of light in her eyes answered him.

"Very well," he observed; "now it suits my purpose to be kind to you, Kattie, much as you may be surprised at the fact, therefore I wish to tell you that I will meet you in this desire half way. Our marriage shall be secret. No one but ourselves shall know of it. We will meet as friends and cousins while we remain under this roof together, for if either of us goes away suddenly it will be a very regrettable thing, from many points of view, and you shall be as independent and free of me as you were before I came."

He paused.

Katharine, in her surprise, agitation and excitement, was leaning forward, with parted lips.

"Yes, I am quite in earnest," he said, answering that look with a sneering smile. "Quite. Do you doubt me?"

She did not reply. She was almost too weak for words, but at length a whisper broke from her lips.

"But— but you have told Miss Mostyn!"

"I only said that to frighten you at first," he answered promptly. "No one knows anything of this, and no one shall know! You must swear to guard our marriage secret, to divulge it to no one, until I take the seal from your lips. Be sure I shall say nothing; it is you who must be careful not to utter a word."

Katharine gazed at him blankly; she did not comprehend him; this sudden veering round unsettled her more than she could say.

"In fact, so earnestly do I enforce this secrecy," Gordon went on, "Kattie, that I shall add a little condition to our compact, to be fulfilled if you break it by breathing one word to any single living soul that we are man and wife. Give me your hand!"

She hesitated; at any other time she would have started up proudly and dashed past him, but to-day she was not herself in the very smallest degree; she was still ill. The brief interview with Ormande had broken her down yet further, and now she was quivering and trembling with dread and loathing at the horrible thing that had come to pass, the sinister fate that had thrown her into Gordon Smythe's power.

"Give me your hand!" he said sharply, and with that he stretched out his own strong, sinewy one and grasped hers.

"Now, hear my condition," he said, in slow, even tones. "I command you to be silent, to meet me, until such times as I shall name, with only the natural ease that would be between two cousins, such as we are; if—mark this clearly, Katharine!— if I hear that you have spoken of our marriage, I will, without hesitation, shoot or kill Ormande, your lover, dead on the spot. You see that—" Katharine was trembling in every limb. What horrible, what awful words were these! "Do you understand me quite clearly?" came the smooth, cruel voice of her torturer, "or shall I repeat the condition once again? You know I make no idle threats, Kattie; I am not a man who fails in any purpose I wish to carry out, and so I warn you. If—I only say if— you hold this man dear, you will remember our little bond, and keep a still tongue in your head. After all, I am only serving you, my dear girl. You are not desirous of publishing the fact of our marriage to the world, nor am I; but in case you may feel a sudden desire to confide in any one, I have thought it wise to restrict you by one little condition—a very small one, after all, you must own, Kattie, and as it fits in so well with your wishes, one that you will easily keep, I feel sure."

The girl lifted her beautiful eyes to that smooth, implacable face, but she was met by the same sneer, the same inscrutable smile, and experienced the same utter misery as had come upon her before. She felt she was not equal to try and grapple with the hideous, fast-growing thread of thought that burned in her bosom. To what end? Let her puzzle and plan as she might, she would never read the mystery aright, and that there was some hidden, mysterious motive for this new torture Katharine knew only too well.

"Kill Ormande, your lover!"

Her lover— her brave, frank, loyal, generous-hearted lover— the man who had knelt at her feet and prayed for her love, and who had studied her so much that his own sorrow at her refusal should not touch her! Kill him? It would be like shutting out the sun, robbing the earth of its fairest flower, its sweetest fragrance. Such a pure nature as Ormande's was something to be guarded and treasured in this sordid, cruel world; Gordon had sworn to kill him, if—if she — Katharine started to her feet with a cry.

"No, no!" she murmured incoherently; "you— you will not, must not, harm him! I love him, I love him; he shall not—"

Half blindly she staggered back against the table.

"Air, air!" she breathed wildly; "give me—air—"

Gordon half-led, half-carried her to the open window. He could have shouted aloud with joy. The battle had been won so easily.

As he saw the faintness leave her he spoke again.

To be continued.

Private Marriages of Royal Widows.

WRITING of the alleged morganatic marriage of the late Empress Frederick, the Paris correspondent of London "Truth" says:

"A Berlin paper stated some days ago that the Empress Frederick was at the time of her death the wife of Count Seckendorf, her house marshal. The other journals call on the Government to disprove 'the monstrous assertion.' Why should it be a monstrous assertion? The Count was an old and faithful friend of the Empress. He accompanied her in her artistic tours. Frederick esteemed him highly. It is now some years since her youngest daughter married. Why should she not marry a gentleman so distinguished as the Count? The truth is that the private marriages of royal and imperial widows are not the exception, but the rule, and have been so for centuries. Some august widows were satisfied to look much lower for their second husbands than the Empress Frederick is said to have done. In France and Italy marriage with a person of inferior rank was thought a sign of greater weakness than a 'friendship.' The worship of a first husband or wife does not necessarily exclude affection for a second. I had a relative who presented colored glass windows that cost £1,000 apiece to churches in memory of his first wife when he was walking about London with his second wife. There was never a widow more devoted to the memory of her first husband than the late Duchesse d'Orleans. Nevertheless, she was believed to have married her secretary. 'A conscience marriage' is easy in Catholic countries save in France. Nobody except the priest who officiates need know about it. 'A conscience marriage' might be celebrated very quietly in England by publication of banns with a slight change of names changing, say, Guelph to Wolf, or Bonaparte to Goodshare. There is also the registrar's office, where things might pass with utter privacy. Scotland is the country of all others where private marriages can best be entered into. No solemnization is required and the status that arises from a mere exchange of vows is stable."

A Contrast.

CONTRASTING the England of today with the England of forty years ago, E. L. Godkin says in the New York "Evening Post:" "The poor man in England who had ever left his home then was somewhat of a prodigy; now nearly half of his substance goes in excursion fares. A dissenting minister used to be an object of abhorrence and contempt; now he is quoted in Parliament by politicians. A lord used to be an object of dread and reverence; now he is hardly better than a foreign count. In the England that I remember, third-class passengers on the then newly-built railroads stood in boxes like cattle; now they sit on cushioned seats, the third-class cars being so like the first-class that the gentry have largely taken to using them. The loveliest parts of the country at this summer season are thronged with excursionists, and it is fair to say that there are no longer secluded spots in England. The famous seat of the lake poets, Cumberland and Westmorland, is so overrun with tourists that the road through the mountains seems to be leading to a fair; the small steamers on the lakes are thronged to their utmost capacity. Unhappy is the place which has some touch of 'Americanism' in its history. The railroads dump on it thousands of our countrymen, who poke their noses everywhere, cut chips off every wooden memorial, and apply the hammer to every stone one, and almost compel the inhabitants to move out. The 'American' in England used too often to be regarded as a low-class foreigner; to-day he is a welcome guest who has a right to have his curiosity gratified, and whose weaknesses and desires are referred to in almost every paper read before a learned society, so that now hardly anybody achieves fame so readily as an 'American' traveler. The old cabined, cribbed, confined English hotel, consisting of a private house converted into an inn, and kept by an ex-butler or housekeeper, has almost disappeared. New hotels, 'on the American plan,' are springing up everywhere, and the English railroads are copying them at their stations, to their great advantage. In fact, it would be difficult to imagine a greater transformation than the England of my youth has undergone."

Temptation.

In our carelessness we may often tempt other people without knowing it. Sir Edward Malet writes in "Shifting Scenes" that he had gone to a hotel, at Milan, and eager to see the sights, sallied forth, leaving his portmanteau yawning, his dressing-case ajar, and money on the table.

I thought of nothing save that I was once more in Italy. Still, I locked my door, and took the key with me. When I came back, an aged and shriveled housemaid followed me into my room. She was wringing her hands.

"Ah, mio signore," cried she, going up to the dressing-table and opening a little drawer. "Is this yours?"

In the drawer lay ten or a dozen gold pieces.

"Yes," I said, "they are mine."

"Ah, signore, how could you do it? How could you leave this money about? It was all lying on the table."

"Why, I locked my door. I knew it was safe."

"No," she cried, "it was not safe! It was cruel to put such temptation in my way!" She sank upon a chair and burst into tears. "Think of me, signore. I am very poor. I have six children to keep and a husband who can do no work. The money would make me rich, and you leave it on the table, the gold pieces all loose to dazzle my eyes and to put the devil into my heart! Through your thoughtlessness I might go to jail, my children might starve, my husband die. Ah, signore mio, never do it again! Think of the poor. Be merciful to us. Do not put temptation in our way."

It does not seem to have occurred to Sir Edward Malet that possibly the old housemaid was trying to work him for a gift of the gold pieces.

First Boy—It's six o'clock. Let's go home. Second Boy—Nit! If we go home now we'll git licked for stayin' so late. If we stay till eight we'll git hugged and kissed for not bein' drowned.—"Puck."

His Ideal.

First Cat—If you had your choice of all the world, where had you rather live? Second Cat—China! They say there is a wall there 1,500 miles long! Just think of moonlight nights—and a wall like that!

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

No Cure No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills if no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

ONTARIO'S LUMBER OUTPUT

It is Estimated That it Will Be Larger Than For Years.

Ottawa, Jan. 19.— The output of pine logs in the lumber woods of Ontario, according to estimates received by the Department of Crown Lands from the timber inspectors, will be [illegible] feet board measure. This is the largest in years. Last year the quantity was estimated at 700,000,000 feet, but was actually 631,000,000 feet, the difference being doubtless due in part to the scare occasioned by smallpox. The chief increase this year are [illegible] in each of the Webbwood and Sault Ste. Marie Districts. The cut of square timber this year is estimated at [illegible] cubic feet. The wages in the lumber woods range from [illegible] per month with board, which is [illegible].

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

Water Commissioners

In a few days the ratepayers will have an opportunity to select two Water Commissioners. Already several names have been mentioned in this connection, among whom are: Dr. Boucher, R. B. McKee, W. H. Hill, T. F. Matthews, T. E. Bradburn, and Harry Winch.

Opera House To Night

The University of Toronto Harmonic club appears in the Opera House tonight. They come highly recommended and consist of 35 members. A full house should greet this entertainment. It is a rare treat. The plan is open at Ormond & Walsh's and is fast filling up. Prices, 25, 35 and 50c.

WATER COMMISSIONERS

Names of Several Prominent Citizens Mentioned for the Position

On Monday next the ratepayers will be called upon to nominate two candidates for the position of water commissioners. There are a number of names mentioned in this connection, amongst whom are Mr. W. H. Moore, Dr. Boucher, Ald. Rush, Harry Winch, T. E. Bradburn, T. F. Matthews, R. B. McKee and others. These are all good men, and it would be difficult to choose two from amongst them. However, The Times is on the first choice. He is an old and he the first choice. He is an old and esteemed citizen, has a large stake in the town, and would be sure to safely guard well the interests of the ratepayers. It is just such gentlemen as he who ought to be selected.

Mr. Harry Winch is another whose claims are strong. He is well qualified in every way, and we think the ratepayers would make no mistake in selecting him. Dr. Boucher is equally acceptable and has had experience on the board of directors of the Water Company. The Doctor is in favor of proceeding slowly in extending the mains—that is, he would not extend unless a revenue sufficient to pay was assured.

Mr. Bradburn, Mr. Matthews and the others are also well qualified, and, it seems to us, there will be no fear of the future with such splendid material to choose from.

SPOT HIM.

Perhaps Coffee is Getting Its Work in on You.

People who think they can digest coffee and yet are sick half the time might learn a valuable lesson in health and get some happiness out of life if they would make up their minds to quit coffee and take Postum Food Coffee.

You can trace the results so accurately as to leave no possible doubt of the cause of the sickness and the reasons for the return of health.

A lady from Blue Mount, Miss, gives her experience. She says: "I always used to drink milk but in '98 I went down to the southern part of the state to teach school and boarded in a family of coffee drinkers. I began drinking one-half of a cup at a meal. The habit grew on me and I increased the amount.

Gradually I became nervous, my complexion grew sallow and yellow and finally my stomach would frequently throw off the food. I gradually ate less and less, depending upon the coffee to keep me up. Finally I concluded that the trouble was malaria, and the doctor advised me to leave that part of the country. So I went back up to the hills in the hope of getting better. Instead of that I got worse. Palpitation of the heart set in and I got so weak I could scarcely work.

I took a great many remedies, but found no relief. I went to the mountains in California for two months without improvement. I was thoroughly discouraged about my condition when one day a friend said, 'why don't you give up coffee?' 'Quit coffee,' I said, 'why that is about all I live on.' She begged me to try leaving it off and use Postum Food Coffee.

I did not have much faith in the experiment, I had tried so many things without benefit, but I decided to yield to her entreaties. In less than two weeks after I quit coffee and began using Postum the pall of ill health left me and I began to sleep as sound as anyone. My complexion improved, and my stomach began to regain its strength.

Now, after three months' use of Postum, I feel as well as I ever did, I would not be without Postum Food Coffee and will never drink another drop of coffee. It came too near killing me." Mrs. Vera Daniel, Blue Mountain, Miss.

BOARDING HOME REPORT.

The Y. M. C. A. Boarding Home has to outward appearance been pursuing the even tenor of its way during the past year, and yet each day has had its own particular history.

During the spring and early summer some of the elderly ladies gave up their rooms and, in the ensuing vacation season, we had but few boarders remaining, so that at one time five rooms were vacant. Notwithstanding this, the years income is somewhat in advance of the year previous.

In the month of June the home had somewhat the character of a convalescent home, several of the transient boarders being invalids, one came from Nicholls Hospital, to gain strength before returning home, another who has since gone to the better land came to be near medical advice and treatment, another who is still an invalid, came to have attention for a bad throat. First one and then another came with eyes requiring treatment and care, one recovered, the other has had a weary time of suffering, but has been so grateful for the care she received while here. One of the permanent boarders in the home also became seriously ill and required the services of both doctor and nurse, but we are thankful to say recovered quite satisfactorily.

Besides these we had several others for short periods and some very interesting people, among whom I mention an elderly Quaker lady from England going on a mission to New Zealand. She had travelled much and seen many Y.W.C.A. Homes, but expressed herself as so comfortable and so much at home here. In conversation with her she reminded one of a King's daughter shining with the reflected beauty of Christ our Lord. Her visit was a benediction.

Another interesting visitor was a young lady missionary from China who had been obliged to leave on account of the recent troubles there. Still another who was engaged in mission work in South California and had had a varied experience among the orientals who find their way there.

Some have needed the help of a place to stay either while on a journey or when coming to town to look for work and have appreciated the help gladly given.

For the last three months the home has been full. Mothers have expressed their pleasure and thankfulness for the institution of the Y.W.C.A. Boarding Home so that when their daughters have their own home they can not only find a comfortable place at moderate prices but have home protection and security and not only be shielded from evil associations, but surrounded with those that are pure and good.

We hope and pray that young women so brought together may be influenced to reach after and attain to stronger, broader, higher lives of reality and usefulness, blessing others in their turn and so may the purpose of the Young Women's Christian Association be fulfilled, which is the extension of the kingdom of Christ among young women.

Thanks from the manager of the boarding home are due the friends who have sent gifts at Christmas and at other times during the year.

Appended is the financial report.—

GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPORT.

In reviewing the history of the past twelve months in the Peterborough Young Women's Christian Association those who have prayed, trusted, and labored for the extension of the work for young women in our midst, have proven the truth of the words "Faithful is he that calleth you, who will also do it." The steps taken for enlarging the borders of the work have demanded a faith which believes that nothing is impossible with God, and which acts accordingly. As a result, the present commodious quarters on George street were opened for the general work of the association on Sept. 29th, 1901. Since that time the names of 92 new members have been received, making a total senior membership of 142 at the close of the year. In addition to the senior membership must be mentioned the junior department organized in the month of September. This department consists of two self-government clubs, for girls from 8 to 15 years of age, the "Victoria" and the "Alexandra" numbering 70 and 60 respectively, and making a total junior membership of 130 and a total association membership of 272.

Time will permit only of a brief summary of the work in the various departments of the association.

First and foremost stands the Religious Department. This association aims to secure the all-round development of every young woman connected with it, in her social, physical, intellectual and spiritual life—the spiritual permeating all and above all.

During the earlier part of the year a bible class was held weekly, and in the month of March the association was privileged to have the Dominion city secretary, Miss Carson give a series of bible readings and gospel addresses in the Association rooms and to several of the young people's societies in the different churches. One result of these meetings was the institution of a Sunday afternoon gospel meeting; the service consisting of a song service followed by a helpful practical talk. The meetings were discontinued during the summer months, but recommenced in October. The association was also favored by a visit from Miss Little, the college secretary for the Dominion Y.W.C.A., who gave several very helpful addresses and suggestions for work.

In the month of October the Sunshine society was reorganized in the form of an "I will trust" club, its chief work being bible study. The meetings are held weekly and the study for the present year is the "Life of Christ," the lessons being illustrated by the use of Perry pictures. In addition to the regular bible study sets of promises from God's Word (one for each day) are distributed weekly, to be used and passed on to others.

The world's week of prayer for young women was observed by special Sunday and week-night services, which were most helpful to those privileged to attend.

The educational work consists of classes in Book-keeping and stenography, dress making, wood carving, instrumental music, English composition and English literature. We desire to express here the thanks of the Association to Miss M. Marks, Miss Agar, Miss Main, Miss Anderson, Miss Detcher, the Misses Dennistoun and Sheriff Hall, who are so cheerfully and willingly giving their services for the work in this department.

In connection with the social department, monthly social evenings were held in the early part of the year, a reception at the opening of the new rooms in September, which was very largely attended, also a social evening and entertainment in November. The reception held on New Year's Day was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by all who were present.

One special feature of the new rooms is the gymnasium, furnished through the kindness of the Young Men's Christian Association. The apparatus consists of Whitley exercisers, clubs, wands, punching bags, and basket ball, the size of the room not permitting of a more extensive outfit. Arrangements are being made for the addition of a plunge bath, to complete the furnishings. Evening classes are held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of each week, and several young women have testified to the benefit received from these classes after the work of a busy day.

In connection with the junior department, weekly club meetings are held, the "Alexandra" on Tuesday afternoon, and the "Victoria" on Thursday. The work of the Victoria club has been arranged as follows: Monthly business meetings, practical talks, bible talks, and natural history lessons. Through the kindness of Miss Jessie Dennistoun, physical culture classes are held in connection with the club on Friday afternoon of each week.

In addition to the gymnasium and club work, junior department sewing classes are held each Saturday afternoon under the able direction of Mrs. Stewart and seven competent assistants. The average attendance at the club meetings is 40, and at the sewing classes 70.

The total number of visitors to the new Rooms, not including attendance at classes, meetings, and receptions, has been 1002, from Oct 1st to Dec.. A daily average of 14.

Looking backward we thank God for the progress made in the various departments of the work, knowing that what has been accomplished has not been by might nor by power, but by "His Spirit," and looking forward to the year before us with its infinite possibilities, we cannot do better than take the New Year's message given by the world's president of the Y.W.C.A. to the Associations of the world.

God is able. AGNES J. DICKSON.
General Secretary.

THE

Most Perfect Stove Made

THE

STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,

BY

Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As any one who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	21½ in.	9 in.	$11 20
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.50
4	41 in.	15 in.	25 00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 32 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

RICAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

The Ferreira Paid a Dividend of 450 Per Cent in 1898 and a 150 Per Cent on Account of 1899 (June). Before War was Declared.

Gold output of Transvaal mines for 1898, 4,555,000 ozs. $76,500-000.

Gold output for Transvaal mines for 1899, (9 months) 4'101,441 ozs, $70,000,000.

A very attractive method which enables the small invester to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust." It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in say five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time Prices mentioned subject to change:

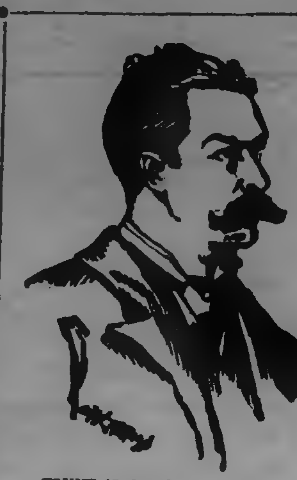
GERMANY'S ATTEMPT AT IMPERIALISM

Her Effort to Lead in the World's Commerce Ends in Failure

Her Expenditure Far Beyond Her Income, Dark Days are Ahead

Berlin, Jan. 21—Germany's return for a "world-power" ambition is a financial breakdown whose meaning is enforced by its coming when the rest of the world is mainly prosperous.

Her colonial empire has grown, but her revenues from railroads are declining. Trade has "followed the flag"—and the subsidies — but the smaller states cannot, Von Thielmann says, pay their share of the federal expenses. Germany owns more than half the world's fastest passenger ships, but some of them are "laid off" and shipping shares are below par. She is becoming a great naval power, but her imperial debt is four times what it was when William mounted the throne. Her army is a marvel of costly preparation for unimaginable wars, but "affairs have become even more unfavorable than we were able to foresee." The poor have groaned under higher tariffs and increased cost of living, but the gap between national income and outgo widens.



COUNT HERBERT BISMARK.

Grave results are feared in the near future. It will be difficult, if not impossible, to restrain the ambition of the emperor to possess a first-class navy. Like the Emperor Napoleon, the German ruler may be forced to seek relief by war.

GROWTH OF BRITISH SHIPPING TRADE

No Signs of Decay in the Trade of the British Isles

A LARGE INCREASE IN TONNAGE

Mr. Gerald Balfour Gives Some Statistics That are Interesting—The Life of the Nation.

London, Jan. 22.—Mr. Gerald Balfour, President of the British Board of Trade, delivered an address on Britain's shipping trade the other day at a dinner of the Liverpool Shipbrokers' Benevolent Society. In the course of it he said that the growth of the British shipping industry since the accession of Queen Victoria had been marvelous, even in an age of progress. The number of vessels on the register of the Empire had increased from 26,000 in 1836 to 35,000 in 1900, and steamships from one in forty to one in three. There had also been an enormous increase in the tonnage of steamships. With all this enormous advance there had been, with the substitution of steam for sailing ships, a very great diminution in the loss of life at sea.

Dealing with the question of foreign competition, he said that the transference of British vessels to foreign flags had naturally occasioned a great deal of comment within the last few years. During the past year there had been two transferred vessels of the gross tonnage of not less than 600,000, but it was to be remembered that during the same year there had been added to the British register 1,200,000 tons gross, the significant fact being that 93 per cent of the latter was new tonnage, almost entirely constructed in the United Kingdom. Of the vessels transferred, 33 per cent. were constructed before 1885, and no less than 65 per cent. were constructed before 1890. That was a very material fact, he said, in the true significance of this transference of ships to foreign flags. He admitted that they could not regard with anything like indifference efforts made by foreign governments to secure a larger share of the carrying trade of the world.

The British shipping trade occupied a unique position among the industries of the country. More than any other, it was essential to, and intimately connected with, the life of the nation. If the British lost their mercantile marine, it would mean nothing less than the destruction of the British Empire. That Empire was essentially an Empire of the sea; it rested upon two great supports, the navy in the first instance, and the mercantile marine in the second. Heavy would be the responsibility of any government which by fault of commission or commission placed in jeopardy the mercantile marine.

SENSATIONAL CASE TO OPEN

Lawyer Patrick, Charged With Murder of Millionaire, to be Tried.

New York, Jan. 21—The trial of Lawyer Albert T. Patrick, charged with the murder of William Marsh Rice, the eccentric Texas multimillionaire, will begin before Recorder Goff in general sessions to-morrow. It will prove, it is expected, one of the most sensational murder trials ever held in this country.

The murder was committed at 500 Madison Avenue on September 23, 1900. Patrick was not indicted until the following April. He had been arrested a month after Rice's death and was held, together with valet Charles F. Jones, who will be the principal witness for the prosecution, charged with forgery. The murder theory did not develop until months afterward.

Boers Capture and Strip a Patrol and Then Release Them

A REBEL GETS HIS DESERTS

Scheepers Tried and Shot for Murder—Boers are Gathering on the Natal Border

Ladybrand, Orange River Colony, Jan. 19.—A corporal's patrol of Imperial Yeomanry, belonging to Major Heath's commando, were captured by the Boers in the mountains nearby and stripped of their clothing. They were then released and returned to the camp. Although the British take every precaution to prevent these surprises, it is almost impossible, owing to the rough nature of the country and the Boers' acquaintance with the passes and defiles. Small batches of prisoners are arriving here daily from the columns operating nearby. Major Heath captured six Boers north of Kurremsburg, where heavy firing was heard yesterday.

SCHEEPERS SHOT.

Graf Reinet, Cape Colony, Jan. 19.—Commandant Scheepers, the well-known leader of Cape rebels, was shot on Saturday last after trial by court martial. Scheepers admitted slaughtering a native spy but denied six other murders with which he was charged and proven guilty at the trial. He admitted that on two occasions he had flogged natives for reporting the presence of Boers on farms, but it was at the request of the farmers themselves that he had inflicted this punishment.

BOERS CONCENTRATING.

London, Jan. 22.—Information has been received here of the concentration of 1,500 Boers, under Botha, near Vryheid, on the Natal frontier.

APSLEY

—Since election and council day is over our village is resuming its peace and quietness. About the deepest question that is now discussed around the Corkscrew Drum is snow.

—Messrs. Lumbsen, carpenters, of Warsaw, were in the village last week making arrangements and drawing the plan for Mr. T. Wilson's new house.

—Our new stage driver gets our mail up to us two hours earlier than usual. We always appreciate improvements.

—Mr. Duncan Brown, who left here two years ago for New Ontario, has returned. There are worse places than Apsley.

—At foreman Stone's lumber camp, of the Dickson Co., the boys are running the logs into the lake at the rate of over 1,000 per day.

—The oft-repeated expression, "away back at Apsley," was recently heard again from the lips of some of our friends, who seem to be quite in love with the fact that they live "at the front." They have somehow got the impression that we are in a land so far north that the sunbeams are frozen into icicles, where the polar bear chatters his teeth to think of approaching; where even the cold, old moon shivers to shine upon us, and where gravitation is frozen to death. Why is it that intelligent people at the front have such rankly erroneous ideas as to where and what Apsley is? Why is it that when we go into towns along the line that our loyalty to our community is attacked, and we bear expressions about our village that cause a creepy feeling to run up our back, and makes us mad? When we take time to consider, it is not hard to explain. How can we expect any better report to spread concerning our community when people come up here from the front (principally preachers and schoolteachers), with exalted opinions of themselves, and desire to make a name for themselves, having no original ability they plan to be generous. They send to some church, Ladies' Aid or Missionary Society for a contribution of second-hand clothing, with a long letter of heart-melting poverty stories of the poor people of Apsley. Some of the stories are even laughable. One man is said to have stated that the people were so poor they lived on turnip skins. What did they do with the turnips? Another is said to have made a long lamentable speech to a Toronto congregation about the work he was doing among the heathen in the north, when his mission field was in Peterborough County. As a result of such reports large sacks and boxes of articles to wear are sent up each year enough to stock a good-sized dry-goods store. Any one knows that we may travel north or south, east or west, and in every community, along the line as well as further back, there are always some who are lazy enough and low enough to be willing to be considered objects of charity rather than work; and some also will be found who are stingy enough to take the small end of nothing, whittle it down to a point, push the pith out of a hair and use it for soap grease; and some there are in this world who have so little principle that they will depart from a straightforward, upright life for the sake of a handful of "charity rags." To such are the articles given with the exception of a few cases. We willingly acknowledge there are a few who need help, but they can be amply supported from their own neighborhood. There have been Peterborough congregations appealed to for helping the poor people of Apsley while some of our Apsley people sat in the congregation and wondered who it was for. There are also some who come up here for a short time during hunting and fishing season to enjoy a few of the many luxuries our country affords. They also report a rough, hilly, rocky country. One reason is that in order to either fish or hunt one must leave the more settled districts for the rougher parts to insure success. Another reason may also be given. Let me illustrate. Here is a green valley, with trees, running streams and surrounded with hills. Put a donkey into it. He sees the grass as food to eat, the stream as furnishing water to drink, the trees as giving him shade to rest in. Put an artist into it. He sees the figure that the landscape will make on canvas. Put a miller into the same valley and he will see the motive power of the stream. We would say to our visitors, don't show your donkey elements by letting us see how much there is that you don't know. However, lest we be mistaken, or our judgment mis-led, we will not ask you to accept our logic. We will give you facts, that you may reason for yourselves. In our village there are four new buildings to be erected, three of which are already started, two dwellings and a church. Our men have a special advantage to earn money. They may attend to the farm work during the spring and summer seasons, then those who desire may go into the neighboring lumber camps, where they get from $20 to $25 per month throughout the winter. Farmers have all the up-to-date implements to work with. [illegible] some have fine horses, nice harness, robes, cutters and buggies as good as will be found. Besides being comfortable otherwise, we find in almost every home one of the latest Singer sewing machines; in many we find the large steel range, which retails at $70 each, and in almost every home there are musical instruments galore, all kinds from a jew's harp to a piano. These things do not speak of poverty. Apsley cheese factory turned out this summer about 75,000 lbs. of cheese, which means about $7000.00 of hard cash; and this is only one of the many factories in this section of country. In many respects it is cheaper to live here than in other places. People along the line will pay from $5.00 to $6.50 for a cord of wood while we get it so cheap that we only burn the part that splits easy. Farmers at the front on 150 or 200 acres cannot go into the dairy farming to the extent they would like to, because the land is taken up for pasture in the summer, and as sufficient fodder cannot be raised for winter supply, while in this country the whole farm with the exception of a part used for grain and roots may be used for pasture and depend on the beaver meadows, which supply an abundant crop of hay that cattle thrive on all winter. Where is there one of our town friends who would not travel far or pay two prices for only a dinner of the delicious mountain lamb that we can grow fat on, and it only costs a cartridge and some genuine sport. We are not clothed in rags nor fed on turnip skins, even if the clergy do say we are. There are good clothes, fur coats, caps and mitts in abundance where they are needed. The man who wants to work can live here just as comfortably as anywhere, but a lazy man can starve if he really wants to. We do not mean to discourage giving; it is a good principle and a Christian grace, but we don't believe in giving where it encourages laziness, or where it is used as a means to proselyte. Thank you, friends, for your mission rags, but we don't want them, the country doesn't need them, and honorable citizens are ashamed of them.

THE SNOW STORM

Heaviest Fall of Snow in Years—Streets in Town Blocked

The storm which visited this section of the country on Tuesday night and yesterday was the heaviest for a number of years. The snow on the level is now about 24 inches. The storm began in earnest about eleven o'clock on Tuesday night and continued for some hours, yesterday it had abated some what but still a considerable amount fell. The high wind on Tuesday night drifted the snow, which blocked the streets and roads. The streets in town were waist deep with snow in many places yesterday morning. The roads in the country are almost impossible. The trains on the rail roads were all late yesterday. The Toronto mail C.P.R. was nearly two hours late and the express due here at 4.45 was one hour late. The Toronto train G.T.R. was over two hours behind time.

Malt Breakfast Food

Imparts Health, Strength and Vigor to Nursing Mothers

It has been most satisfactorily demonstrated that Malt Breakfast Food is the best morning diet for nursing mothers, as it provides ample nutrition for the maintainence of health, strength and vigor, and wonderfully promotes the secretion of milk.

Malt Breakfast Food, because of its many nutritive qualities and virtues is daily prescribed to nursing mothers by our best doctors. No other food is so easily and rapidly digested, and no other contributes so largely to comfort and happiness. Mothers with weak and capricious stomachs should give Malt Breakfast Food an immediate trial, it will quickly place them on the highway of health, give them pure blood and a well regulated nervous system. ABOUT TRADE PERIL WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. John Charlton Makes Strong Pleas For Canada

CANADA WILL RETALIATE

Unless the United States Modifies Her Tariff Laws Materially

Declares Canada is Indignant at the Treatment She is Receiving from Uncle Sam—A Plea for Reciprocity.

Chicago, January 22—Retaliation by Canada in the enactment of tariff laws against the United States will result unless this country adopts a reciprocity agreement with its sister country, according to John Charlton, member of the Canadian parliament, who spoke last night at the Marquette club's banquet. Public sentiment in the Dominion of Canada, he declared, is rapidly ripening to the enactment of high rates of tariff that will place that country in a position to do the United States much harm.

"If the United States refuses to grant concessions in the way of reduction of rates for Canadian products; if the policy of buying little and selling much is continued, the dream of the United States of becoming a great export nation will be met with the barrier of high tariff rates by the various great nations of Europe," he said. "The relations between these two countries must be settled not on the principle of the huckster, that one side must make a profit by the trade, but on the broad policy of mutual benefit."

Mr. Charlton's speech was a presentation of Canada's side of the reciprocity question that has been debated fiercely in the houses of congress and by joint commissions for years. It was the plea of the farmer, the miner and the manufacturer of the north for the admittance of his goods free of duty into the United States.

The speaker argued for the reduction of the great discrepancy in the balance of trade between the two great nations of the American continent. The balance of trade last year was $70,000,000 in favor of the United States, he showed. Even with the wide-open markets desired by the Canadian Government and the Canadian people that balance, though considerably reduced, would still show a good amount to the credit of this country, Mr. Charlton said.

"Public feeling in Canada leads the nation to believe, continued Mr. Charlton, that it is not fairly dealt with; that while buying freely it is not permitted to sell its own products. The Canadian farmer buys annually from this country $32,000,000 worth of machinery and in return is allowed to sell $8,250,000 of his products. That is not fair. All we desire is fair treatment. If reciprocity is denied the Canadians will adopt retaliatory measures. Your duties on our products are now 25 per cent. We will make our duties on your products 50 per cent. and rebate from 20 to 40 per cent. to countries which adopt reciprocity treaties with us. It would not be more unfair than we are treated, but it would be a very undesirable solution of the problem of trade relations. I would deprecate this action except as a last resort, but then I would adopt it willingly."

Members of the club listened with close attention to the speech. As member of the joint commission, appointed by the United States and Canada to come to some terms as the basis of a reciprocity treaty between the two countries his words were taken as authoritative regarding the sentiment in the northern country.

"This club has been a factor in molding public opinion in the past," said Frank O. Lowden, the toastmaster for the occasion, as the distinguished Canadian closed his address. "I may say to you, sir, that your words have not fallen on deaf ears."

Shortly after when former Congressman George E. Adams arose to speak he said, "What true American would not welcome a settlement of every question that arises between Canada and the United States in such a manner as to advance the moral, intellectual and mercantile welfare of the whole continent of North America?"

FIGHTING PARSON JOINS YEOMANRY

Anglican Clergyman Enlists Earns a Right to His Title

THE VICAR OF WEST MERSEA

His Wit and Kindliness Have Endeared Him to His Parishioners Who are Sorry at His Departure

London, Jan. 18.—The Rev. Pierrepont Edwards, vicar of West Mersea, and formerly known as the "Fighting Parson of Southwark" has joined the Essex Battalion of Imperial Yeomanry as a trooper.

Writing to the hon. secretary of the Colchester Rifle Club, who, with twenty members, has also joined the Yeomanry, Mr. Edwards says:—"My advice to all members of the club is be good—if you cannot be good-looking—but all may be both by donning the uniform of the Essex Imperial Yeomanry."

In an interview yesterday the patriotic clergyman said that with tithe at its present figure he could not take a commission in the Yeomanry or Volunteers, as certain other clergymen were able to do. Neither could he become Chaplain of the Essex Yeomanry, because the Bishop of Colchester, himself once a captain of Dragoons occupied that position. He therefore joined as a trooper, and saw no more harm in a parson learning to ride and shoot than in playing ping-pong which was hardly an asset in our national defences.

Enough people, continued Mr. Edwards, did no more than shout for Empire, while better men gave their lives for it. Besides, he would like to justify his title of "fighting parson" in a more dignified way than heretofore. The only foreign enemies he had yet encountered had been Italians, but if a German band—and the vicar paused significantly.

"After all," said the interviewer, "mediaeval bishops rode in front of armies, using a sort of iron flail."

"You must not talk about them," said the vicar. "The flail was not all they used. Their language on the battlefield was dreadful. I shall not emulate them. But the Empire is as much to the 'cloth' as to anybody else. Surely a man should not keep his love of fatherland when he takes Holy Orders.

"Yeomanry training is, or should be a training in manliness, and my idea is that if parsons are to do any good at all they must share the life of the people around them. It would be a bad day for the laity if the clergy became a caste apart.

"By the way," he added, "I should be very glad if some clergyman would volunteer to take duty for me while I am in training."

Conversing on horsemanship, Mr. Edwards appeared doubtful whether some cunning old troop horse might not prove more than a match for "a simple country parson," but he was determined to see the matter through. Bishops, he thought, might regard clerical troopers benignantly, for the Archbishop of York was once in the army.

The Rev. Pierrepont Edwards resides on Mersea Island, the scene of Baring Gould's "Mehalah." His wit and kindliness have endeared him not only to Mersea Islanders, but to all Colchester, in which town he was formerly curate.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

London, Jan. 22—A telegraph line is being built across South Africa and occasionally bits of information regarding the undertaking find their way to civilization. These reports show that the hardships suffered by linemen and the difficulties they are compelled to overcome are something tremendous. The line has now been carried up to the southern shore of Lake Tanganyka. During the last 200 miles the road was impassible for vehicles and all the supplies and material had to be transported by carriers. One section of the line passes through a swamp in which vegetation grows to such a height during the wet season as to stop the wire and cause troublesome leakage. The natives cannot be induced to go in during the season and cut down the weeds owing to the swarms of crocodiles. On another section the elephants have caused several interruptions by breaking off the poles. In some of the forests through which the line passes trees are met measuring over 100 ft. in circumference. Some of the ravines are impassable even to the linemen during the rainy season owing to the paths being under water and the rank growth of vegetation.

London, Jan 22—Marie Corelli in a letter to a paper caps the climax of the anti-German feeling existing in England. This authoress declaims passionately against the similarity of the new British army uniforms with those of the German army. "Bearing in mind," she writes, "the absolutely criminal offence against our king by the vile prints circulated in Germany, is it justified or justifiable to insult our brave officers by compelling them to wear any uniform even remotely resembling that worn by admitted slanderers of our king, army and country?"

Andrew Lang joins the long list of critics of Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Islanders," with a scathing denunciation of the author's personality. Mr. Lang takes the character in "Stalky & Co.," generally supposed to be Kipling himself, holds him up to derision for his "unathletic brutality," and concludes:

"The Americans notoriously excel in many games, like the Australians. Surely they are none the worse for that. It is not the games, but the fanaticism about the games and the rubbish written against the games that we have to regret."

London, Jan. 22.—Sir Edward Grey's first impressions of Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech have been confirmed after careful analysis. He has told a Liberal meeting at Newcastle so.

"We have not had unity hitherto," said Sir Edward, "and in my opinion if unity is to be obtained it must be obtained on lines laid down by that speech.

"It is to greater national efficiency that the Liberal party must devote its attention. I say the Liberal party because the stock of thought of the present Government is exhausted. Such ideas as they had are crushed under the weight of misfortune and miscalculation, and the Liberal party is free to develop ideas and discuss purposes and plans for the future."

As to the effect of the Roseberry speech, Sir Edward would say nothing which would anticipate party development. "You must take all that is said as individual opinions only, and the most important individual opinion of all, that of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, has yet to be expressed.

"In that speech there is a policy before the country, something with completeness and shape about it.

"Recently you have had nothing more than a running commentary upon affairs, but you want more than that. You want an alternative. You want to know that there are people who can mould things better for the national welfare, and you get that for having something with shape and completeness about it.

"But bear in mind if that be the merit of Lord Rosebery's speech, you must take the speech as a whole. If the policy is to be of use it must be taken as a whole. Incorporation, I maintain, must remain the end of the two Boer territories. We must be lavish in repairing the ruin of the country when peace is secured.

"The widest possible amnesty must be given, though some men are beyond the Boer language nor prescribe it, as the pale of amnesty. I would not touch the language has in it the spirit of the people."

Speaking of Boer independence, Sir Edward said that Lord Rosebery declared that he would not make overtures to the Boers, and he thought his Lordship was right. Such an advance on the Government's part would be a mistake.

THE WAR STILL COSTING $1,000,000 PER DAY

Statement by Hicks-Beach in the British House of Commons Yesterday

CAPE COLONY CLEARED OF THE BOER FORCES

Continuous Rains Everywhere Interrupt British Operations—British Columns Unable to Move Against the Enemy

London, Jan. 22.—Sir Michael Hicks-Beach stated in the House of Commons to-day that the cost of the Boer War from April 1, 1901, the commencement of the current financial year, to December 31, was £46,300,000.

DELAYED BY RAIN.

London, Jan. 22.—A report to the War Office from Lord Kitchener, which is dated Johannesburg, yesterday, says continuous rains everywhere have interrupted the British operations. Gen. French reports that the number of Boers in Cape Colony is 150, under Commandants Fouche and Myburgh, and 130 under Commandant Wessels.

DISCUSSION IN THE COMMON.

London, Jan. 22.—Sir William Harcourt continued the debate on the address in reply to the King's speech in the House of Commons this evening. He asked how could the Government expect the Boers to lay down their arms under a proclamation when every leader who came forward came with a halter around his neck. If the Government wanted peace overtures from the Boers they should be approached differently from the manner outlined by Sir J. Gordon Sprigg, the Prime Minister of Cape Colony, who had declared that they must come on their knees. Sir William quoted from the proclamation of Acting President Schalkburger of the Transvaal, of September 6 last year, ten days before Lord Kitchener's proclamation, the passage in which the Boer leader said, "We have been all along for peace." Sir William urged the Government to make up its mind respecting the terms on which it wished to have the war ended, and let the Boers and all the world know them.

Winston Spencer Churchill (Conservative) said he preferred a settlement by compromise rather than by force, as the latter would entail the tremendous expense of long military occupation.

The Opposition amendment to the address in reply to the King's speech was rejected by the House of Commons by a vote of 333 to 123.

The division on the amendment illustrated the divisions in the Opposition. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader, Sir William Vernon-Harcourt, Mr. John Morley, and Sir Charles Dilke supported it, as did Sir Henry Fowler, although some other Imperialists, including Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Richard Haldane, abstained from voting. Mr. Herbert Asquith was absent. All the Irish and extreme Pro-Boers abstained from voting.

DENIES BRIBING NEWSPAPERS.

The Hague, Jan. 22.—Dr. Leyds, the former Transvaal plenipotentiary writes to the Daily News correspondent scornfully repudiating the allegations that he bought the support of the Continental press for the Boer cause. He says that such a performance would have been beyond the power of money, and points out that the burghers have the sympathy not only of Europe, but of all the world outside of King Edward's dominion.

Dr. Leyds asserts that charges attributing newspapers purchasing to Boer representatives in Europe are the result of ignorance, stupidity and malice.

LADYBRAND BURGHERS SURRENDER.

Ladybrand, Orange River Colony Jan. 22.—Four hundred native refugees were sent from the north-east Sunday and are now quartered in St. Augustine's mission at Modderpoort.

Fourty-three Ladybrand burghers have taken the oath of allegiance during the past few days.

DEWET MUST BE ENERGETICALLY DEALT WITH

It is Expected That When the Fresh Troops from Australia and Canada Arrive in S. Africa Operations will be Expedited

London, Jan. 21.—Winston Spencer Churchill (Conservative), in resuming the debate in the House of Commons to-day on the amendment moved by Frederick Cawley (Liberal) to the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne at the opening of parliament, gained the distinct approval of the opposition benches by his criticism of the government's shortcomings in South Africa, the insuffiency of the troops supplied to Lord Kitchener and other matters. He said he preferred a settlement by compromise rather than by force, as the latter would entail the tremendous expense of long military occupation.

WHEN CANADIANS ARRIVE.

Bloemfontein, Jan. 21.—It is believed here that, in view of the British concentration against Dewet, Botha is likely to make another move in force against Natal.

Dewet, however, can now command a larger force than can be brought together in the Transvaal and the military authorities recognize that he must be energetically dealt with.

Accordingly a growing number of columns are vigorously pressing him, but the country in the northeastern part of the Orange Colony where he is favors his tactics of scattering and then reuniting his force.

A feeling of hopefulness, however, prevails.

It is noticeable that the surrenders which are taking place are only to a very small extent of Free Staters, who for the most part, represent the irreconcilables.

Everyone expects that military operations will be greatly expedited when the new troops arrive from England, Australia and Canada, and their advent is awaited with keen expectancy.

London, Jan. 22.—Mr. Chamberlain has cabled the governors of Australia and New Zealand, inviting each to send a farther contingent of one thousand men to South Africa.

A representative here of the Associated Press learns that at the close of the war the British government contemplates offering special encouragement and facilities for emigration on a large scale to South Africa.

IMPUTATION REBUKED.

London, Jan. 22.—Mr. Balfour's spirited rebuke last night of the Nationalists in the Commons for the imputation on the loyalty of Canada and Australia was warmly applauded in Ministerial circles. O'Kelly asked whether steps would be taken to induce the colonies to pay a share of the cost of the war. Mr. Balfour evoked loud Ministerial and Liberal Imperialist cheers by his grateful acknowledgements of the contributions the colonies had already voluntarily made in men and money, and said the imputation in question was uncalled for and expressed in quite unnecessarily offensive language. W. Redmond asked what the colonies had paid. The Speaker ruled him out of order. Redmond, whose wife is an Australian, shouted: "Why not ask Australia to pay as well as Ireland?"

KITCHENER'S WEEKLY RETURN.

London, Jan. 22.—Lord Kitchener reports that since Jan. 13, 31 Boers were killed, 13 were wounded, 170 were made prisoners, and 41 surrendered.

CAUGHT HIM SINGLE-HANDED.

London, Jan. 22.—The capture of Commandant Breytenbach, which has already been reported, was effected single-handed by Capt. Tremayne, who, seeing a Boer fleeing in the distance, pursued him alone and caught him.

Ottawa, Jan. 21—Mr. George Johnson, statistician of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, has compiled a statement showing that 18 per cent. of born Canadians live in the United States. The number of Canadians resident in the Republic, as shown in the last three census counts, was:

1880 717,157
1900 1,181,778

There is a crumb of satisfaction in the fact that between 1890 and 1900 the increase was only 200,840, whereas in the preceding ten years it was 263,781. There is a bitterness even in thinking of this, however, because while in 1890 of every hundred Canadians in the count, 83 were in their own country and 17 in the United States, in 1900 there were only 82 in Canada and 18 in the United States. Going back twenty years, there were in 1880 86 Canadians out of each hundred at home, and only 14 in the United States. It would seem too, that, after falling off somewhat, the exodus had increased of late years. A Massachusetts state census is taken every ten years, half way between the natural census years. It's records and those of the national count show the number of Canadians in the state as follows:—

1885 147,352

This shows an increase in this one state, between 1885 and 1890, of 60,249; between 1890 and 1895, of 36131, and between 1895 and 1900, of 49,437. Probably what is here noted in regard to Massachusetts is true of the other states to which Canadians go in largest number.

Vienna, Jan. 16.—A hurricane, the violence of which has not been equaled in many years, struck this city, and district to-day, and during the last hours of the storm there were more than a hundred accidents, requiring the use of ambulances. Many persons had limbs broken, and two were fatally injured. In the outskirts, a freight train was blown over.

There were earthquakes yesterday and to-day at Agram, capital Croatia and Slavonia.

In Budapest there was a heavy gale, accompanied with snow. Wreckage that had been blown on the track derailed a train near Eger.

Denmark is being storm swept. Neither the English nor German mails that were due to-day have yet arrived. The barque Arab has foundered in the North Sea and 22 persons perished.

The Anaemic Young Girl

Perhaps she is sixteen. Suddenly she seems to lose strength. Her beauty fades because her strength fails, her eyes lose their lustre. How her spirits droop! It alarms you, but all this may be corrected quickly. Get her Ferrozone, it is a nerve tonic, it aids the stomach to do its work. Appetite? she'll eat anything and digest it too. Ferrozone is an absolute specific for the anaemia of young people. Ask your druggist for it.

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 25, 1902

PRAISE FOR THE GLOBE.

The Globe, despite its tendency to squirm upon the Prohibition question, comes forward manfully on the educational question, and acknowledges that the Ontario school system is a failure. We strongly suspected this all along, and have mildly protested against the tendency of our schools to breed a race of children better in figures than in the principles of morality. But along comes the heavyweight journal to our aid with the frank and truthful admission that the annual report shows a falling off in both High and Public Schools. But why should the people of Ontario have been compelled to wait until the [illegible] of the Education Department at Toronto was confronted with the painful facts? We have been accustomed to hear magnificent eulogies of our educational system, which took more prizes abroad than a Shorthorn bull, but it has only served once more to illustrate the old and well-known fact that appearances are often deceitful, and that Bray is a poor watchdog. Of course we had to know the truth sooner or later, but it raises a variety of questions in the popular mind, not the least important being, "Why did you tell us the reverse?" It must be borne in mind also that our population has increased while the schools fall away, which is doubly painful. It is true the increase in population in ten years was only 31,000 (the natural increase alone should have been 300,000!) but it is large enough to give increased support to The Times's contention. But, then, after all, what do people want? Do they really want these things, or are they shamming?

BEET ROOT SUGAR.

The development of the beet root sugar industry in the United States is an interesting matter, although as yet it is comparatively trivial in relation to the total consumption. Approximately speaking, the United States uses about 6,081 tons of sugar per day. Last year there were 39 beet sugar factories in the country, with a total output of 160,000 tons, or about 411 tons per day, the total being equal to some 24 days' consumption. The production, however, showed a steady increase since the first establishment of the industry, the statistics being as follows:

Year	Factories	Product
1893	6	12,018 tons
1897	7	37,536 tons
1900	34	76,859 tons

It is claimed that the output for 1902 will amount to 250,000 tons, but on the other hand it is shown that the total consumption of sugar in the United States increased in 1900 by more than 141,000 tons above what it had been in 1899, and the ratio of increase is also developing.

BALLOT PAPER IRREGULAR

Amaranth Township Wants Recent Election Declared Void.

The Township of Amaranth, in the County of Dufferin, has got into a muddle also on the recent election for councillors. On the same ballot paper a vote was taken asking the opinion of the ratepayers whether or not they were in favor of the county road scheme. There were seven candidates for election, and the names of the seven added to the vote on the road scheme made the ballot paper a little long. It is claimed by some ratepayers that on account of the small majorities received it is likely that the irregular ballot paper affected the result.

G. M. Vance, barrister, of Shelburne, has received the necessary instructions, and proceedings are being taken to have the election of the four councillors declared void.

Mary Stuart's Rehabilitation.

MARY STUART'S champions have been well to the front lately, and quite a library might now be formed of histories of her reign, volumes written to defend her character, and novels founded on her life. In the eighteenth century John Wesley, a man of just judgment, investigated her case during his rare intervals of leisure and came to the belief that most of the charges brought against her were false, and only supported by forged documents. As the years have rolled on many men have become of the same opinion as the great preacher, and have refused to take the Elizabethan view of Mary Stuart's conduct.

In a work recently issued by Mr Samuel Cowan there is a fresh interest for admirers of the Queen of Scots, by reason of the portraits of Mary (no less than sixteen) given with the two volumes. Some of these have never been published before, and in more than one she appears as a really beautiful woman who might well charm all beholders. In fact, these portraits quite justify the price asked for "Mary Queen of Scots, and who wrote the Casket Letters?"

Many portraits supposed to represent Mary Stuart differ so remarkably that doubt is often expressed as to her having been so beautiful as her contemporaries alleged she was; yet out of twenty-four a good dozen will give the idea that this famous Queen was indeed a handsome woman, and as for the remaining twelve likenesses, as contradictory as they are unflattering, allowance must be made for incompetent artists and for the possibility that these dissimilar portraits represent other women.

Catherine de Medicis had three daughters, Claude, Duchess of Lorraine; Elizabeth, Queen of Spain, and Margaret, Queen of Navarre; and three daughters-in-law, Mary Stuart, wife of Francis II.; Elizabeth of Austria, wife of Charles IX., and Louise of Lorraine, wife of Henry III. The queen-mother had a passion for portraits, especially for those of her own relatives, and occupied artists constantly. Besides her own collection—in the contemplation of which she passed many an hour—she kept a stock for presents to royal kindred and great people. Catherine was a generous giver, from motives of policy, even when dealing with persons she distrusted or disliked.

It is quite possible that the portraits of these Valois queens and princesses have become rather mixed in course of time, and some without names have been passed off as likenesses of Mary Stuart, when really representing the odd-looking Claude, Duchess of Lorraine, who had a curiously long nose, or her better-featured sisters, Elizabeth and Margaret. They would all appear richly dressed, some wearing crowns as queens, and this would help considerably in the mistake. Mary Stuart used to be sumptuously attired when Dauphiness and Queen of France and when, as Queen of Scotland, she was Darnley's wife. Her later portraits, of course, represent her in widow's dress.

A SCRAP OF LIFE HISTORY

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS OF WRETCHEDNESS, HAPPINESS AND NEW LIFE WERE BESTOWED BY

Paine's Celery Compound

Mrs. W. Wigglesworth, Liverpool, N. S., has given for the benefit of suffering women a scrap of her life history. It is interesting to those who have thus far failed to secure a permanent cure for nervous diseases and the many complications that result from such dangerous troubles. Her case baffled the best medical skill, and many considered her incurable. A friend who had tested the curing powers of Paine's Celery Compound, advised the use of the great medicine, and soon a happy change came to the sufferer. The terrible dangers — nervousness and insomnia—which threatened her life were forever banished. Mrs. Wigglesworth writes thus: "For fifteen years I suffered from nervous diseases and other serious troubles. A lady friend recommended me to use Paine's Celery Compound, and I have since received great benefit. Paine's Celery Compound has done what no other medicine could do for me. I can sleep well now, and my appetite is splendid. I advise all who are sufferers from nervousness and other diseases to use it. Seven bottles of Paine's Celery Compound restored my health wonderfully."

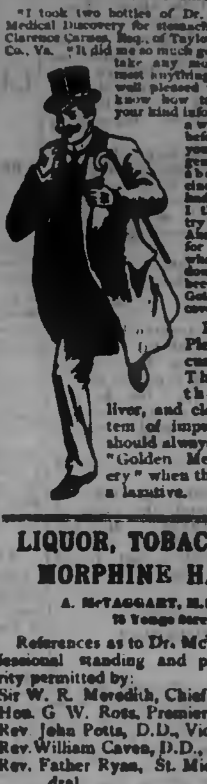
Avoid Contact With Sick Pets.

Dogs and monkeys are subject to tuberculosis and are said to be capable of communicating the infection to human beings. A large number of the canaries that die in captivity fall victims to the same disease. Parrots suffer from a malady peculiar to themselves. The bacillus that causes it is thought to originate pneumonia in man. Cats have been known to be the carriers of diphtheria, and possibly of scarlet fever and other infectious diseases. Great care should be taken during an epidemic to keep pet animals out of the reach of infection, or else away from the children, and at any time a bird or animal that seems ailing should be at once isolated.—Ladies' Home Journal

Eat and Run.

There isn't a man who would be seen running through the street munching a piece of pie. Why not? Because it would mean dyspepsia and stomach trouble? Not at all; but because it wouldn't look well. As a matter of fact many a business man snatches a lunch in such a hurry that he might as well take it on the run. That is one reason for the prevailing "stomach trouble" among men of business.

There is a certain remedy for diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It is Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The worst cases of dyspepsia and catarrh of the stomach have been cured by this medicine. It cures where all other means have failed to cure.



"I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for stomach trouble," writes Clarence Carnes, Esq., of Taylorstown, Loudoun Co., Va. "It did me so much good that I didn't take any more. I can eat most anything now. I am so well pleased with it I hardly know how to thank you for your kind information. I tried a whole lot of things before I wrote to you. There was a gentleman told me about your medicine, and how it had cured his wife. I thought I would try a bottle of it. Am now glad I did, for I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness. They stimulate the sluggish liver, and cleanse the system of impurities. They should always be used with "Golden Medical Discovery" when there is need of a laxative.

The Duke of Norfolk takes pleasure in telling many stories about himself. Here is one of them: A large party of Americans arrived one day at Arundel, with an order to go over the Castle. As the butler was away, the Duke, fond of a joke, acted his part, and conducted them personally through the various stately rooms. They plied him hard with questions, such as, "What sort of man is the Duke?" "Is he good-looking?" "Couldn't we have a peep at him somewhere?" "Is he a good master?" "And how long have you been in his service?" etc. The Duke preserved a perfectly rigid demeanor through all this personal cannonade, replying respectfully to all their queries, and when the party left was rewarded with a handsome tip of half a crown.

Green, the English historian, one day asked a friend which of all the inventions of their day had done the most for the people as a whole. His friend guessed this and that, but the answer was: "Beyond doubt, sixpenny photographs." A reply involving quite as great an absurdity as that was made by Cecil Rhodes in answer to a lady who, seeking to draw him out, suggested that he owed his phenomenal rise to the impetus of noble sentiments. "Madam," returned Mr. Rhodes, "I owe my fortune simply and solely to cold mutton." "Cold mutton!" gasped the lady. "O Mr. Rhodes, what do you mean?" "When I was young," continued the South African millionaire, "I was so dosed with cold mutton, and I hated it so cordially, that I resolved to grow rich in order to put it off one side for the rest of my life. Yes, madam, cold mutton was at the root of my success; noble sentiments had nothing to do with it."

A NOVEL

"You must go up to your room and rest, Kattie; remember we have our parts to play and there must be no breaking down. Come; rouse yourself; you are known to have been ill, so your looks will not cause any surprise if you are seen. Come, that is good, and, Kattie"— just stopping her for an instant—"we understand each other, don't we, eh?"

Her eyes met his unflinchingly, and the next moment, with weak, faltering footsteps, she had crawled across to the door and he was alone.

CHAPTER XXI.

The dinner table at Brexley Hall that evening was unusually merry and pleasant. Barbara this time was adorned in a brilliant red gown, and with her flashing diamonds in her hair and round her throat and arms, she certainly made an imposing picture, which, if not exactly to every one's taste, certainly seemed to afford intense satisfaction to herself, as she caught her own reflection in one or another of the mirrors that studded her rooms. The real reason of this unusual hilarity was easily discovered in the person of Gordon Smythe, the new guest; every one united in declaring Mr. Smythe to be the most delightful and amusing of men. He kept the whole party in one long roar of laughter, with his really witty anecdotes, and altogether he was humorous, bright, spontaneously funny, and a great addition to the Brexley Hall party.

Barbara had allotted herself to Lord Otway to-night, and although she laughed and chatted to one and another of her guests, she was watching him keenly all the while.

"Is it a fast day, Lord Otway?" she asked by and by, lifting her eyes with assumed innocence to his face. "Oh, I wish you had told me; I would have made other arrangements, and——"

But Ormande broke in quietly on this.

"I am not very hungry, Miss Mostyn," he answered. "The day has no special religious significance."

His tone was so cold that Barbara bit her lip suddenly. It infuriated her to see him sitting there with that new born sorrow on his fair, frank face, and to know that it arose through Katharine, while he was as utterly indifferent to her, Barbara Mostyn, important though she might be, as though she had never existed. She had known that he was in the library when she sent for Katharine to come down there, and then had calmly suggested to Gordon Smythe, who had arrived at luncheon time, that he should stroll in and enjoy the papers there. She had no very settled determination in her mind as to what might arise from this, and she had only Ormande's sad face from which to glean any satisfactory news of what had occurred. Olympe, her maid, had brought her the intelligence that Miss Brereton was too ill to remain up longer that day— and putting two and two together, Barbara began to be very cheerful indeed. Her spirits had risen ever since Gordon Smythe had been in the house; she felt convinced that his dark, handsome eyes did not wear that strangely elated look for nothing; she told herself it was a very clever move of hers to have brought him there so unexpectedly.

"Is he not a charming man?" she said, turning to Lord Otway, as a shout of laughter had followed on some new sally of Gordon's. "Really, he seems to have brought a new atmosphere with him, hasn't he?"

"Yes," Ormande answered quietly, "he has."

All the doubt and the amazed horror that he had experienced that day at Northminster Station at first sight of Gordon Smythe's face returned to him again. He marveled how it was he could have ever forgotten it, or the extraordinary feelings it had produced on his mind that never- to- be- forgotten day. When he had come across Gordon in his inquiries after his cousin, he had been so deeply engrossed in his anxiety, and in the sweet thought of Katharine that all connection between this man and the man of that summer afternoon completely vanished. Truth to tell, he was rather favorably impressed by Gordon, as he managed to convey to Katharine in those few words he uttered when they were outside Brexley Station. But now that impression was gone altogether.

"I cannot love you. I am not free!"

These words rang again and again in his ears, stifling all hope, beating in despair.

"Not free!" What did it mean? Ormande had asked himself as he had wandered through the grounds after leaving Katharine in the library. Not until he was sitting at dinner, gazing at Gordon Smythe, did he arrive at anything like an answer to this query. "Not free!" That meant that another held some control over the destiny of her future. Back like lightning came the sound of a girl's agonized voice uttering words of despairing hatred and contempt. Where had he heard it? was the thought that flashed into Ormande's mind. At first he could not remember, though he ransacked his memory, then the veil of mystery was lifted, and he felt himself standing on Northminster platform, gazing down at the gleaming metals, and listening to that strange, sweet voice.

He gave a great start as this came back to him.

Not free— not free to love him! Had he not seen from the very first that she was shadowed by some great sorrow? Sometimes it almost seemed as if the sorrow were not untouched by fear, too. Ormande drew his breath quickly. Those words she had spoken that bygone afternoon. What did they mean? She said something about having kept her vow, the exact words he could not naturally recall, but their meaning flashed back. Had he not here a clue to the reason of that barrier that stood in the path of their great happiness? Not free to love him! Did it mean that she was bound to another; that——"

Barbara tapped him lightly on the hand with her costly fan.

"I shall be quite jealous of your thoughts, Lord Otway, if you don't spare me one word."

He turned, and colored suddenly.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Mostyn; I am very rude, I fear; but the truth is, I am not quite myself to-day. I hope you will forgive me."

"You do indeed look pale. I am glad Lady Blanche is not here to see you; she would be quite uneasy, I am sure."

"That would be absurd—I am not ill," Ormande answered, flushing slightly. Then, as if to change the conversation: "Have you heard from my aunt lately, Miss Mostyn?"

"I had a sweet birthday letter from dear Lady Blanche only this evening; I really must show it to you—it makes me so conceited, Lord Otway. Lady Blanche says such sweet things. I only wish I could have her here, but she is quite given up to her nursing your poor little cousin, she tells me."

"Yes. Marian has time to remember her own sufferings now that her mind is relieved about Craven."

Barbara tried to make her face appear deeply interested.

"Ah, yes; and when will that naughty Mr. Craven send you news of himself? You will be having a letter soon, I suppose?"

"Yes," replied Ormande; "soon, I suppose."

His eyes at that moment met Gordon Smythe's, and at the contact a strange thing happened. Ormande noticed that Mr. Smythe shivered and turned pale, and all at once a doubt sprang to life in Ormande's pure, simple breast— a doubt that curiously connected Craven's whereabouts with Gordon Smythe.

"I must question this man more closely," Ormande decided to himself. "Now I come to remember, it was all very vague and frothy about Craven. I do not feel satisfied." As these words formed themselves slowly in his mind, he kept his eyes on Gordon, who undoubtedly objected to the gaze, by the way in which he fidgeted in his chair.

"Curse his eyes!" he muttered to himself; "they send a cold shiver through me, they are so like those others, with their big, blue stare in them. I am not easy in my mind about this man. I will hurry things up; there must be no failure now; from the look on Miss Barbara's face I should say the movement was ripe to begin."

Gordon devoted himself to Lady Clara Lennox, and carefully refrained from even glancing in Ormande's direction again while dinner lasted. When the ladies rose Lord Otway rose, too, and, making his way into gardens, gave himself up to his troubled thoughts again.

It was a bitter thing to face his disappointment. Not until this moment did he realize how much he had allowed himself to dwell on the certainty of Katharine becoming his wife. Vision after vision of happiness, which had come almost unconsciously, rose to confront his misery and mock at his despair.

The memory of that one last look in Katharine's lovely eyes lived to haunt him, but as the memory made his heart throb and his pulses thrill, there always came those few sad words to check the brief transport of joy:

"I cannot love you. I am not free!"

There was something vague and disagreeable in them, and, with the confusion of ideas and thoughts roused at sight of Gordon Smythe filling his breast, Ormande grew more and more troubled. He wandered away beneath the trees, and Barbara seeing him from the drawing-room windows, bit her lip; suddenly she longed to rush after him, but the demands of her duty as a hostess prevented this.

Just as her face was clouding over and a frown was settling on her brows, the door opened and Gordon Smythe came in.

"The air is very cool and delicious outside, Miss Mostyn; do you feel equal to a stroll?" he asked, with a smile lurking at the corner of his mouth.

Barbara's face cleared as if by magic.

"He wants me," she thought to herself; and then, seeing that the other men had come in, and she might with etiquette leave her lady guests, she gave a Gordon a cold smile.

"I shall be delighted, Mr. Smythe. If you will come this way I can pick up some sort of wrap; these summer evenings are rather treacherous."

Several of the younger ladies looked rather enviously after Barbara as she carried off the delightful Mr. Smythe. Gordon's flashing eyes had worked havoc in their very commonplace hearts.

But Barbara never devoted a thought to this, and if Gordon saw the disappointment which was legibly inscribed on one or two faces, it only added to the intense satisfaction which reigned in his breast. He carefully adjusted a silk shawl round Barbara, and then they passed out through the hall together.

Ormande, away in the distance, caught the gleam of the diamonds in Barbara's hair, and he watched the flashing of the jewels, enhanced by the clear, strong moonlight, in a dreamy, preoccupied way. Had he guessed for one instant what the matter was that seemed to be so interesting between Miss Mostyn and her companion—he was too far off to distinguish who that companion was—he would not have stood there leaning moodily against a tree, his arms folded across his aching heart.

"If I were wise I would go from this place now, without a moment's delay. The pain, surely, will not be so great when I am at work among my poor people in my old haunts. There will be no spectre there in Katharine's shape to torment me and torture me; while here the very trees whisper her name. She is everywhere. Yes, I ought to go—yet—"

Yet Ormande, like many another man felt that he could not tear himself away from the place where, for a few short hours, his love-dreams had lived and grown. Like many another, he clung to the joy of seeing his beloved, hearing her speak, perhaps touching her hand, and so, despite the warning voice of wisdom, he remained on.

He had yet to experience the crowning blow to the sorrow that was so new and bitter to him.

CHAPTER XXII.

Gordon Smythe made no plans to circumvent Katharine in case she should take it into her head to leave Brexley, and so escape him. First of all, he knew she was in no condition to run away, her wan face and weakened strength told their own tale, and secondly, he was more than aware that his threat of danger to Ormande would stay the girl, were she ten times as strong as she was. He had judged her aright. Katharine's love was no empty word— it was complete, absolute, entire! She had never indulged in the little flirtations and frivolities which are the usual and harmless prerogatives of girlhood; she had grown up a simple, pure-minded, [illegible] creature, who, when love had come, grasped it with both hands and treasured it beyond her very life.

Yes, Gordon Smythe had struck the right nail on the head when he spoke those calm words of vengeance toward Ormande. His very calmness lent them additional weight, and Katharine, as she lay through the long night hours with beating heart, throbbing temples, and a heart as heavy as lead, within her breast, went over them again and again.

"He will do it! Yes, yes; he will do it if I go against him!" she whispered through her pallid lips. "Have I not seen myself what— what awful wickedness he can do? Ormande! Ormande, my darling! you must not, you shall not, be hurt! I will— do anyth—"

And then Katharine's senses faded for a moment from the intensity of her misery. But only for a moment; the next the old words returned, and she went on fighting with herself, struggling, fearing, full of dread apprehension, knowing nothing, seeing nothing beyond the fact that Ormande's life was threatened should she dare to disobey her husband and her foe.

Finally she fell asleep from sheer exhaustion, and woke to find Patty standing by the bed.

"Mrs. Parsons wouldn't have you disturbed on no account," Patty explained, as Katharine uttered an exclamation of dismay when she learned the time. "She said as how you weren't wanted, and the sleep 'ud do you good; and now, miss, please you're to eat up this omelet— yes, every bit; the cook sent it up with 'er respectful duty, miss, and she'll be quite hurt if you don't like it."

Katharine pushed the hair back from her brows and supported her head in her two hands.

"Put it down, Patty," she said in a low voice. "I—I will try and eat it, but I am afraid it will be impossible. My head is still so bad."

"I wish Miss Mostyn 'ud try and write her nasty letters herself when she's bad, that I do," Patty declared vehemently. "She ain't got no more heart nor a block of stone." Then she came back to the bed and looked at Katharine with eyes full of sympathy. "Lor! you do look bad, miss,

I hope from my heart— I shall never see Brexley Hall or village again. But I must not keep you here, Aunt Blanche. I know your weakness about the horses; besides, I am in a hurry. Good-by, Marian, dear. You must begin to get strong and well before Craven comes back you know. No, thank you, Aunt Blanche. I would rather walk; I am going into a neighborhood not altogether fit for you ladies. I will say good-by now."

"Oh, not good-by, Ormy," Marian cried, giving him her pet name; "not good-by! You will come and see us won't he, Aunt Blanche?"

"Ormande knows he will pain me very much if he does not do so, Marian," the elder woman replied; and then the carriage rolled away.

Ormande replaced his hat with a sigh of relief and sorrow mixed. This unexpected meeting with his aunt had suddenly riven apart the thick, vague, horrible clouds that had surrounded him ever since that memorable day at [illegible]. Even now he can scarcely recall all that occurred then; he has a confused memory of bands playing, voices laughing, soft draperies flying in the ball-room; but beyond that, nothing but those words of Mr. Montague's— those words that told of Katharine's shame!

Ormande had been nearly crushed to earth by the events that followed one another so quickly. Try as he would now, he could not unravel the mystery. Was it true that Katharine's eyes had spoken a lie that afternoon in the library, when they had met his and answered him as well as though her tongue had uttered the words, that she loved him with all her soul? Was that deep, soul-giving look an acted lie? And if so, why?— to what end? Why should the girl have troubled to coquette with him? What end could she gain?

Had he been utterly deceived in Katharine? Was she nothing more than a cruel, worldly, heartless woman, who, even while she permitted him to kneel at her feet and pour out the sweet treasures of his love before her, was plotting and planning an elopement with another, and that other a married man? Was all her outward purity and simplicity one huge sham? and had he been nothing but an amusement and a laughing stock for herself and her lover?

Those and many other mad and bitter thoughts ran in the poor fellow's brain, as he had paced to and fro through the early morning hours at Brexley, when at last the ball was concluded and the fete done; and then, when he had left his room and gone down into the hall, where he had given orders to have his portmanteau conveyed at once, he came upon Barbara, and his torture was renewed, his trouble redoubled.

Miss Mostyn, in most effective dishabille, was full of the shameful affair of the night before.

"Oh! Lord Otway, what am I to do? I feel almost broken-hearted!" she cried, putting her lace handkerchief to each dry eye. "I am sure I feel as much as though that poor misguided girl had been my sister. Do you know, she actually refused to listen to my words of advice and wisdom. I had occasion to go to her room before dressing for dinner, and there I found her all ready for starting, her box packed, her hat on. Naturally I was astounded, and asked what it meant; and then she informed me— yes, with her own lips, calmly, deliberately— that she was leaving my house forever, and was going away with Gordon Smythe. I—I really feel quite ashamed to speak of such things to you, Lord Otway; but you are a clergyman, and it relieves me to tell you all my trouble. I went down on my knees to her"— Barbara here had clutched her hands together with a gesture significant of despair— "but all to no good; her mind was made up; she declared if I knelt there till doomsday she would never give way. Gordon Smythe was her lover, he needed her, and she should go. I spoke of his wife— you know he told us he had a wife, Lord Otway— I tried to awaken a spark of conscience, of principle, but I failed. All I got in return for my trouble was insolence and a shocking amount of depraved bravado! Oh, I have been terribly disappointed [illegible] Ellen [illegible] Miss Brereton, and, of course, she would not have been allowed to come [illegible] respectability; and"— [illegible] turned up the whites of her eyes— "now I have been harboring a snake in the grass, and all my sympathy and affection— for, do you know, Lord Otway, I was getting quite fond of Miss Brereton— have been wasted on one who has proved herself utterly unworthy and immoral."

The House of Rothschild.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN is not generally regarded as a very important financial center, but for more than a century it has been the headquarters of the foremost banking-house of modern times, the Rothschilds. It was in this city that the great establishment had its modest beginning, and since rising to affluence and power and extending its operations to all parts of the globe, the ancient seat has never been abandoned. The following facts regarding the origin and development of the Rothschild house are taken from the August issue of the "Bankers' Magazine:"

The founder of the house was Mayer Anselm (1743-1812), the son of Anselm Moses Bauer, a small Jewish merchant of Frankfort-on-the-Main. His father wished him to become a rabbi, but he preferred business, and ultimately set up as a money-lender at the sign of the "Red Shield" (Rothschild) in the Frankfort Judengasse. He negotiated his first great government loan with Denmark in 1802, and his transactions on behalf of William, Elector of Hesse-Cassel, were so profitable that when he died ten years later he was a very wealthy man. He left behind him five sons, and branches of the business were established in Vienna, London, Paris and Naples, each being in charge of one of the sons.

The third of these brothers, Nathan Mayer, has generally been regarded as the financial genius of the family and the chief originator of the transactions which have created for the house its unexampled position in the financial world. He came to Manchester about 1800 to act as a purchaser of manufactured goods for his father, but at the end of five years he removed to London, where he found full scope for his financial genius. The boldness and skill of his transactions, which caused him at first to be regarded as rash and unsafe by the leading banking firms and financial merchants, latterly awakened their admiration and envy. By the employment of carrier-pigeons and fast-sailing boats of his own for the transmission of news, he was able to utilize to the best advantage his special sources of information, while no one was a greater adept in the art of promoting the rise and fall of the stocks.

The colossal influence of the house dates from an operation of his in 1810. In that year Wellington made some drafts which the English Government could not meet; these were purchased by Rothschild at a liberal discount, and renewed to the Government, which finally redeemed at par. From this time the house became associated with the allied powers in the struggle against Napoleon, it being chiefly through it that they were able to negotiate loans to carry on the war. Rothschild never lost faith in the ultimate overthrow of Napoleon, his all being virtually staked on the issue of the contest. He is said to have been present at the Battle of Waterloo, and to have watched the varying fortunes of the day with feverish eagerness. Being able to transmit to London private information of the allied success several hours before it reached the public, he secured an immense profit by the purchase of stock, which had been greatly depressed on account of the news of Blucher's defeat two days previous.

Rothschild was the first to popularize foreign loans in Britain by fixing the rate in sterling money and making the dividends payable in London and not in foreign capitals. Latterly he became the financial agent of nearly every civilized government. It is said that since 1815 the Rothschilds have raised for Great Britain alone more than $1,000,000,000; for Austria, $250,000,000; for Prussia, $200,000,000; for France, $400,000,000; for Italy, $300,000,000; for Russia, $125,000,000; for Brazil, $70,000,000.

In 1895 they took $15,000,000 of the February loan of the United States through the Belmont-Morgan syndicate.

There are at present living eleven barons of the Rothschild name. Of these Nathaniel, Alfred and Leopold are located in London; Gustav, Edward, Adolphe and James are in Paris, and Nathaniel, a baron of the Austrian Empire, is head of the house in Vienna.

"Maintaining an identity as unchangeable as the Hebrew race to which they belong, and with purposes as inflexible as the ruler of Russia, and a policy as far-seeing as the Church of Rome," says the "Bankers' Magazine," "the Rothschilds have steadily built up the prestige of their name until it now outranks that of any other, while their fortune has grown year by year until it has attained to colossal figures. Those who have a talent for guessing have set the actual sum at two thousand million dollars, but until some member of the firm displays a confidential mood, the correctness of this conjecture must remain unverified. Whatever the amount may be, its vastness is undoubted, and the accumulations of a century and a half are being swelled each hour by innumerable tributes from every quarter of the world."

Why She Quit the 'Phone.

"The young woman employed as a stenographer had a beau named Will, to whom she talked some twenty-five times a day," says the Boston "Record." "The lawyer who labored under the impression that he was paying for the stenographer's time was not pleased that Maggie should drop her work and rush frantically to the telephone every time the bell rang, and stand there for fifteen minutes debating whether or not Will ought to have told Clara that secret which he knew well enough was none of Clara's business. One day the lawyer left his office, and going to another telephone in the building, called up his own office. Of course Maggie rushed frantically to the 'phone, and answered.

"'Hello,' said the lawyer, in a muffled voice. 'This is a lineman testing the wire. Kindly stand one foot in front of the receiver and say hello.'

"Maggie obeyed.

"'Thank you. Now stand two feet to one side and say hello.'

"Maggie complied.

"'Thank you. Now stand two feet on the other side and say hello.'

"It was done.

"'Thank you. Now stand on your head and say hello.'

"Maggie seems to be somewhat backward in answering the telephone now."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Dr. Caldwell dressed the wound and Mr. Cullen is progressing favorably, although his face is badly swollen and is very painful.

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed). T. Buckart

Wake Up, Mr. May!

Complaints have reached The Times regarding the way the snow plowing is being done on Brock street. This street appears to be sadly neglected. A lady, whose duties make it necessary for her to get to business shortly after seven in the morning, was forced yesterday and on other occasions, to wade through deep snow. Complaints have been made to the Town Engineer, but no attention is paid to them.

Native Birds of Canada

Through the thoughtfulness of Mr. R. B. Rogers, kindly assisted by Mr. E. Elcome, taxidermist, the teachers and senior pupils of Ashburnham Public School were treated to a series of excellent lantern views of the "Native Birds of Canada." The views were shown in the Ashburnham Town Hall on Saturday evening, Jan. 18, and were much appreciated by those who were present. Previous to the presentation of the views, some time was spent in playing games of various kinds. The pupils are now busily engaged in practising for the fourth annual school concert to be held in the Town Hall on Friday, Jan. 31. The proceeds are for the public school piano fund.

I. O. O. F. District Rally

Arrangements have been completed for an Oddfellows Rally to be held in Peterborough, on Thursday, March 13, beginning at half-past seven sharp, when the Initiatory Degree will be presented. This will be followed by the presentation of the three degrees, the Oriental degree and refreshments, coupled with speech, song and story.

The Initiatory and first degrees will be exemplified by Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, and the First and Third Degrees by Peterborough Lodge, No. 111. Invitations have been sent to the lodges at Pontypool, Millbrook, Havelock and Norwood. It is expected that each of these lodges will bring several candidates for degrees.

This gathering will give members of outside lodges a chance to see the degree work, and will give all a chance to become better acquainted, and promote that social and fraternal spirit for which Oddfellowship is noted.

Attention is called to the early hour at which the meeting begins, 7.30. This is to give a chance to get through before the arrival of the C.P.R. midnight train.

OFFICERS' MEETING

The Officers of the 3rd Dragoons Met Yesterday—Regiment is to be Re-organized

A meeting of the officers of the Third Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons was held in town yesterday afternoon and discussed matters connected with the reorganization of the regiment under the new regulations, and to consider the season's arrangements. Under the new regulations the Dragoons will have thirty officers, where formerly there was 24, and the strength of the regiment will be raised from 290 to 361 of all ranks. Each squadron captain will be raised to the rank of major upon qualification, and will have a captain and four lieutenants under him. This reorganization is on imperial lines, and indicates the important part mounted troops take in modern warfare.

WITHOUT MEDICINE

Good Food Will Cure Disease.

A good natural food that will correct constipation is a valuable thing. Grape-Nuts has that reputation among those that know.

A lady writes from San Pedro, Cal., that after suffering a long time from indigestion and irregular bowels she changed her food and used Grape-Nuts regularly. She says she immediately began to improve and in a short time was entirely well. Commenting further she says, "The only fault I find with it is that it is so good I want to eat it all the time. Please omit my name, but I will answer any letters if stamped envelope is enclosed." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

INDUCTION AT ALL SAINTS

Rev. Mr Armitage Becomes the First Rector of the Congregation

The service at All Saints' Church last evening, in which Rev. Mr. Armitage was inducted by the Bishop of Toronto to the Rectorship of All Saints' Church, were most impressive, indeed.

After the solemn reading of the instrument by the Bishop, and his investment of the incumbent with a copy of the Holy Scriptures, and Book of Common Prayer, the service of the day was said, Rev. Mr. Langfeldt, and Rev. Mr. Tifft, Omemee, read the appointed lessons, after which the Nunc Dimittis was sung.

The sermon by the Bishop, which followed, was an able exposition of the duties devolving upon the faithful pastor, and the aid which is due him from the people. The reverend Bishop took as his text, I Thess. 5; 12-13. This is an appeal by Paul for those specially appointed to minister to the Thessalonians. The relation of the minister of the gospel to his people may be considered under three aspects,—his duties as pastor, his position over them in the Lord, and his pulpit administration.

As a pastor, "he laboreth among them," is the best expression of the work of the faithful and earnest preacher. His efforts must prove ineffective if confined to his public ministrations on Sunday. He must enter into the private life of the people on working days. He is not always to be found in the study, but more frequently day by day in the streets and lanes of his parish. Thus his work is of an incessant nature, and the business which a clergyman undertakes is serious and urgent. The idea that through the week, while the merchant is closely engaged in his office, while the farmer is at work in his fields or bush, while the laborer is toiling for his living, the clergyman has nothing to do but prepare his next sermon is a wrong one. There is the wanderer to be sought out, the deathbed to be visited, the absentees to be looked up, the new-come strangers to be located, the systematic visiting of the parish to be maintained, and the spiritual standing of his people to be cared for. He must comfort the bereft, admonish the evil doer and act as peacemaker in petty difficulties.

As over them in the Lord, he is vested with authority, but he is not to lord it over God's heritage. Dominance in contradictory to the calling of the clergyman. His mission is ministerial, not magisterial. He has no right to claim power over the conscience of any man, and no power to forgive sin. He administers the sacraments of grace and the disciplines of Christ—excommunication for continuance in known sin and restoration on sincere penitence. Every person is encouraged to tell the story of the cross, but the layman has his proper sphere—in the home, at work, in bible-class and Sunday School. God is not the author of confusion, he has appointed apostles, prophets, evangelists, preachers and teachers.

In his pulpit administration he finds that too often people are impatient of admonition, preferring to be entertained by some fluent declamation on leading topics of the day or by some piece of the history nicely analyzed.

The true preacher must admonish, he must be fearless and courageous in his utterances. In return, he should be known and esteemed by his people. They should manifest an active interest in him and mindfulness of his temporal estate. Too often a congregation measure their respect and love of their clergyman by his own personal qualities. If he is not possessed of winning manner socially and otherwise, all he can expect, is that they will put up with him.

The Bishop expressed his complete satisfaction in inducting the first rector of All Saint's. He required no introduction, for he had labored amongst them for four years, his work is known and they learned to love him. He trusted that the full charge might be product of closer relationship, that we the rector's hands might be strengthened and that it might draw closer the bonds of sympathy and co-operation between pastor and people. It meant a separation from St John's, but there should be no separation of the people and the spirit of rivalry or competition should be entirely absent. He solicited the prayers of the people for their rector, that he might be strengthened, directed and sustained by the Lord. During the offertory the choir sang "What Shall I Render unto the Lord for all His Benefits Towards Me?"

Besides the Bishop and Rev. Mr. Armitage, there were present Revs. Langfeldt, Davidson and Tifft.

After the services, a reception was tendered to the Bishop in the basement of the Church.

Dismiss Your Fears

There is no need of soiling the hands in using the Diamond Dyes. While the goods are in the bath tub, just lift and stir them with two sticks, and see how easy it is to dye with Diamond Dyes, and how little need there is for soiling the hands in the dyeing operation. Diamond Dyes are made in all the new and fashionable colors, and one package will dye as much material as three packages of any other make of dye. Diamond Dyes give the richest colors to fabrics heavy and fine; you get grand results when dyeing the heaviest cloths and blankets or the finest lawns and muslins.

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns are worth seeing. Send your address at once to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P.Q., and you will be supplied with sheets of newest designs.

CRYSTAL WEDDING

THE

Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion. Why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard rooms the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

THE POULTRY SHOW

The Attendance Yesterday was Fair—The Show Closes To-Night

The poultry exhibition was very well attended yesterday notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. A large number of birds arrived late on Tuesday night and yesterday morning, and to-day the coops are full. Mr. True, who is the poultry judge completed his task early yesterday afternoon. He was very busy and had some very particular work before him in awarding the prizes, the birds were all of the one standard and it was very difficult to decide which one was the best.

A large number of pigeons are on exhibition also a large cage of canaries.

The exhibit of dressed poultry is not as large as it might be, the exhibit however is fine and well prepared.

There is on exhibition in one of the coops a very rare bird. The entry card gives the variety as, American boar, Wild Cockerel from Japan and is said to be an exhibit of Lord Kitchener. Judging from the appearance of the bird he should be a splendid fighter as he has great spurs. The public are notified that this bird may be rather cross and must not try to feed him with candies as his disposition is treacherous his name would signify. This bird is of various colors, red green, purple and yellow.

The exhibition will be open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., to-day but as a number of exhibitors will remove their birds at 5 p.m. the public should make it a point to visit the show at an earlier hour when they will see the entire exhibit.

A very attractive method which enables the small invester to speculate in South African Stocks is by the formation of a "combination," or "trust." It is also the safest way. By this we mean that shares should be purchased in say five different companies, and by this method the possibility of loss is considerably reduced, as should one or more of the selections prove unprofitable, the profits on the others will more than likely compensate for any loss and prove sufficient to make the whole transaction remunerative.

Below will be found combination showing number of shares, present value and amount required, viz. $115.79, to carry them on 20 per cent margin. This combination will, we believe, show a good profit in a short time Prices mentioned subject to change:

PROPOSED NAVY FOR COLONY OF AUSTRALIA

Will the New Commonwealth Create a Strong Navy of Its Own?

BRITAIN IS NOT IN FAVOR OF THE IDEA

Would Prefer That the Great Colony Would Assist the Mother Land in Contributing to the British Navy

London, Jan. 24—One of the important questions which the Government of the New Australian Commonwealth will have to decide is whether it will contribute a sum of money to the British Admiralty, the contribution to be used in strengthening the Royal Navy, or whether it will create and maintain a navy of its own. The British Admiralty has advised the former course, and Admiral Beaumont has urged it in a memorandum addressed to Lord Hopetoun, the Governor General. For a time it seemed certain that the advice would be followed. The Military and Naval Defence Bill introduced in the Australian Parliament by Sir John Forrest, the Minister of Defence, treated the protection of Australia as if it were purely a question of land warfare. It contemplated the organization of a land force numbering ultimately nearly three-quarters of a million men, but the construction of not a single ship. Of late, however, there have been signs of a reaction in Australian opinion. Sir John Forrest himself now realizes that there is a naval as well as a military side to Australian policy. In a recent speech he declared: "I am convinced that the present policy of mere payments of money to the Imperial Government in return for naval defence furnished entirely by that Government will not satisfy the people of Australia." This view of the matter finds advocates even in the British press. The Spectator, for example, warmly approves the plan of forming a separate Australian navy.

As a matter of fact, the Australian colonies have for some time been doing something for their own sea defence. All the States have naval reserves; Queensland, Victoria, South Australia and New Zealand have gunboats of their own. It certainly does seem that confederation ought to quicken, instead of chilling, the sea life of Australia and that, even from an imperial point of view, it would be a mistake to miss the opportunity of training a school of Australian seamen. Australia is an island-continent, and the volume of its sea-borne trade is to-day double that of the whole Russian Empire. Under the circumstances it would seem expedient that Australians should be specially encouraged to develop the naval side of their own defence. The Spectator explodes the fallacy which lurks in the argument put forward by the British Admiralty, the argument, namely, that Australia will defend herself best by increasing the sea-power of Britain, and that the best way to do this is by supplying money to augment the imperial sea-going fleet. While this sounds plausible, it is misleading, because, as a matter of fact, a cash contribution made by Australia would not add a penny to the naval strength of the Empire. It would merely relieve the British taxpayer to a certain extent. If the United Kingdom received no cash contribution from Australia, it would spend not a farthing less upon its fleet, but would estimate the naval needs of the Empire exactly as before. If, on the other hand, Australia spent her money on providing a naval contingent of her own, the naval force provided by her would be a real addition to the Empire's naval strength, just as her military contingents are real additions to the imperial land forces. She would have called into existence not only extra ships and guns, but, what is far more important, extra men.

As for the assertion that Australian ships would have to be built by the British Government and commanded by British officers, the Spectator contends that it would be better for Australia, like Japan, to place its orders with private firms. It is not disputed that, until Australian naval officers were trained, it would be wise to place the Australian navy under a British Admiral, just as Australian military forces are placed under an experienced British General. But, according to the Spectator, the aim should be to qualify Australian officers as quickly as possible to take command of their own ships, in order that the Australian community might acquire a keen personal interest in sea-power, and its maintenance. In certain matters, no doubt, there would have to be a strict agreement between the Australian Naval Office and the British Admiralty, especially in the matter of the guns and the ammunition used. So, also, outside of their own waters, Australian warships would naturally be attached to some imperial squadron. A foreign cruise would practically mean a loan of the vessel to the British Admiralty.

It is probable enough that the existence of an Australian squadron would make the people of Australia turn their attention to the sea, as nothing else would. It is certain, too that the Australian Commonwealth, with its huge seaboard and considerable maritime population, ought to supply a naval reserve of seven or eight thousand seamen. The time may come when the British Empire will regret a failure to turn such resources to account.

KRUGERISM AT HOME BEING DISPOSED

The Calumny From Which the British Empire is Suffering

A LOT OF LYING STATEMENTS

How Traitors at Home Injure the British Cause—W. T. Stead's Lying Proclivities

London, Jan. 24—It seems that much of the calumny the British Empire suffers from in foreign countries originates within the Empire. This is notably exemplified by some investigation work which has recently been done by the London Daily Chronicle.

Mr. Maxwell, the Standard correspondent, in his spirited denunciation of this campaign of calumny has declared that the libels were manufactured in Germany. The Daily Chronicle has unquestionably tracked down the lying story of the maltreatment of the Boer women in the Irene camp to a leaflet printed in the United States by C. D. Pierce, "Consul-General of the Orange Free State," reproducing an interview with a certain Fred LaValle which appeared in the Clarion Ledger of Jackson, Missouri, for May 14th, 1901.

On the back of these leaflets are anonymous letters, purporting to come from English people, ordering supplies of these documents, of which they had come to know "through the Stop-the-War Committee office in London," or through the Pro-Boer journals. One of the leaflets prints a statement about Kitchener's "Hints to kill prisoners," which is given on the authority of what purports to be an extract from a Pro-Boer newspaper in London.

The trail is followed up one stage further by a correspondent in Monday's Chronicle, who quotes from Mr. W. T. Stead's circular, "British Atrocities in South Africa," issued on November 7th, 1901, a passage in which the writer, after charging the Government with inflicting death by famine, on women and children, asks: "Is cannibalism less awful than the enforced degradation of matron and maid, compelled by hunger, to submit to the extremity of shame in British camp and Kaffir kraal?" The "foul and filthy lies," are, in their origin neither of German nor American fabrication.

As we have before had occasion to point out, more damage is being done to our common country by those who simply are trying to embarrass the Government of England for party reasons, than by the paid work of foreign Krugerites.

Commission Appointed to Consider Biblical Interpretation

DISTINCT CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

One Holds That the Scriptures Should be Broadly Interpreted, the Other That They Should be Strictly Read

Rome, Jan. 23.—The announcement of the Tablet that a special Pontifical Commission had been appointed for the consideration of all questions concerned with Biblical studies has caused great dissatisfaction at the Vatican, for it appears that the Pope had pledged the Commission to absolute secrecy. The Commission will have a most arduous task in determining the degree of inspiration of the different books of the bible. There are two distinct tendencies in Roman Catholic circles. There are those who would give a somewhat broad and liberal interpretation to the Scriptures and others who would have only a literal interpretation. Three years ago Mgr. d'Hulst, one of the most eminent of the French clergy maintained that the inspiration of the Bible was limited to passages relating to morals and doctrine. This opinion, at the instigation of the Jesuits, was condemned by an encyclical letter issued by the Pope. This letter, however, did not convey the idea that the Pope claimed infallibility in making his protest, and, in fact, it seemed later on that he was disposed to adopt a broad view of the interpretation of Scripture. Last year an eminent French Dominican and Orientalist, residing at Jerusalem, Father Lagrange, maintained in the Dominican Review that the story of paradise and of Eve and the apple should be regarded not as a reality, but simply as a symbol or legend. The Jesuits tried hard to secure the Pope's condemnation of this opinion, but failed to do so. In fact, it was intimated to Father Lagrange that he was free to hold the opinion he had expressed, and that he would have the protection of the Vatican. This little incident, which is not generally known, shows what an arduous conflict has been going on round the Pope on this question of the interpretation of the bible.

TOO OLD AT 23.

London, Jan. 23.—The Admiralty have given instructions for the armor-plated coast defence ships Gorgon and Hecate to be placed on the non-effective list of the Royal Navy as unfit for further service as effective ships of war. The Gorgon and Hecate are sister ships of 3,480 tons displacement and belong to the same class as the Cyclops, which was recently condemned as unfit for further service. These ships were built just 23 years ago.

London, Jan. 22.—A 50-page supplement to Friday's "London Gazette," was issued last night, containing the names of 7,624 bodies which have forwarded to the Home Secretary for presentation to His Majesty King Edward VII. addresses and resolutions expressive of sympathy of the King and the Royal Family on the occasion of the lamented death of her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and congratulations to the King upon his accession to the throne. It is a wonderful list, catholic to a degree, embracing political bodies of all complexions, religious bodies of all denominations, commercial, municipal, judicial, professional, bodies, learned institutions, charities, hospitals, school boards, men's societies, women's societies. It is as though every aggregation of human beings everywhere in the British Isles that could, by hook or crook, be called a "body" had risen up with one accord to hail the King. The only individual in the list appears to be Mrs. Hogg-flesh.

AMAZING MAIDEN TRIP.

London, Jan. 23.—The steamer Cymric, of Glasgow, which recently arrived at Baltimore, has made a remarkable "maiden" trip. She left Greenock in September, 1900, a new vessel, and has since steamed twice round the world, covering 57,000 miles, and calling at over fifty ports. During the fourteen months the Cymric has burnt 5,000 tons of coal.

LIQUID FUEL V. COAL.

London, Jan. 22.—The destroyer Surly, which for the past two years has been used for the purpose of experiments with liquid fuel, has been ordered to carry out a twenty-four hours' trial at sea. Up to the present one of the greatest obstacles encountered has been the thick volume of black smoke belched forth from the vessel's funnels whenever her furnaces were in full blast. The oil used is a thick mineral product, not unlike coal tar in appearance, and bears no resemblance to that used for domestic purposes. It is blown from the tanks into the furnaces by a steam spray, which distributes it upon a bed of Welsh coal, and the Admiralty are endeavoring to solve the problem of how to make it act satisfactorily in boilers designed for coal heating. So far the experiments have not given very promising results, but although dearer than coal, liquid fuel has many advantages, not the least being a considerable economy of labor.

AMBUSHED BY TORPEDOES.

Cherbourg, Jan. 23.—The armored cruiser Admiral Trehouart came into port to-day. On her way here she was waited for by the submarines, Morse, Narval, and Francais, which were submerged and attacked her from below. The Morse torpedoed the Admiral Trehouart, which in actual warfare would have been destroyed. The experiments are looked upon by the naval officers as being very important.

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.—Walter W. Bell, a journalist and real estate man of this place, was one of the 32 men who organized 46 years ago the Last Man Brotherhood.

The brotherhood bought a bottle of the finest wine the world could afford. This was to be opened and drank by the last man when all his fellows were dead. Then the brotherhood went ahead with its annual banquets. This year finds Mr. Bell the last man. All his 31 fellows are dead. So he will hold the banquet on the regular date and drink the bottle of wine.

THINKS COW SERUM CURES CONSUMPTION

A Brooklyn Physician Claims to be Able to Beat Consumption

A YOUNG WOMANS RECOVERS

Other Doctors Inclined to Discredit Confident Claims—Animal Said Declared to Have Been Free from Tuberculosis

New York, Jan. 23.—Emma H. King, the trained nurse, who was inoculated with consumption germs some time ago and later treated with serum from a cow, has wholly recovered from the operation, and Dr. George H. Barney of South Brooklyn points to the fact as proof of his theory that tuberculosis can be cured.

Shortly after Miss King received the hypodermic injection of tubercular bacilli from a patient, the doctor announced that the young woman had the disease. Then he trotted out the tuberculous cow and from the serum he prepared gave the patient injections of it.

The board of public health one day seized the cow and killed it, and the surgeon said there was no trace of disease about the animal.

Miss King has returned to Brooklyn and is feeling very well. This shows, the doctor says, that consumptive cow serum is the real thing for those who have tuberculosis. Other physicians say he is prejudiced in his belief and that it is only his own opinion.

Boycott on Germans Grows

St. Petersburg, Jan. 23.—The Polish boycott of German goods is spreading. The Association of Agricultural and Cooperative Societies, covering several provinces around Vilna, has passed a resolution not to purchase any more German products. Many firms which had always handled German agricultural machinery and implements are now exclusively ordering implements and machinery of American manufacture.

The Cause of Nervous Headache

This most distressing and common malady doubtless has its origin in some unbalanced condition of the nervous system. Probably the simplest, safest and most efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. Twenty drops in sweetened water gives immediate relief, and this treatment should be supplemented by bathing the region of pain with Nerviline. To say it acts quickly fails to express the result. Sold everywhere in large 25c. bottles.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

ANNUAL MEETING HELD YESTERDAY AFTERNOON

In the Council Chamber—Satisfactory Reports Presented by the Secretary-Treasurer and Agent of the Society

The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society was held in the Town Council Chamber at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The attendance was very good. Among those present were,—Mr. J. J. McBain, Pres., Mr. R. M. Dennistoun, Sec., Mr. P. Campbell, Treas., George Cochrane Agent, Rev. Father McColl, Rev. Dr. Torrance, Rev. Armitage, Rev. J. P. Wilson, Mr. H. Burnham, Wm. Henry and Mrs. Garvin.

The report of the Secretary, Mr. R. M. Dennistoun, was read as follows:—

SECRETARY'S REPORT

During the past year the progress of the Society has been steady and uniform. There has never been a day when there were not children in the Shelter being cared for by our competent Matron, and in addition, there has been a steady run of quiet work which has been done without attracting much attention from outside. A careful record has been kept of all the children placed in foster homes and the reports of the Provincial Visitor, as received from Mr. Kelso, have been examined and where necessary action has been taken upon them. Many cases have been investigated and warnings have been given to parents whose conduct towards their children, while not sufficiently cruel to justify the Society in taking possession of the children, was yet of such a nature as to call for interference. It is believed that, the influence of the Society has proved a powerful factor in the community, in many cases where no direct action has been taken. Parents now know that there is an organization which can reach them, and many are afraid of the disgrace of an exposure, with the result that there are fewer local cases of cruelty to children reported than formerly.

The following is an outline of a few of the cases dealt with during the year.

Case F.—A very pretty little girl of twelve years of age; father insane mother dead: completely placed in a good foster home where she is highly thought of.

Case S.—A little boy of four years of age and his sister aged eight years; placed in the Shelter under order of the Magistrate. Both children now with well-to-do farmers who are acting as faithful foster parents.

Case F.—This child was placed in the Shelter on the 24th, Oct. 1900, and remained there until the 18th. Oct. 1901. The reason being that he had a defect in his eyesight which prevented his adoption by foster parents. He was finally sent to Mr. Kelso in Toronto for treatment.

Case S.—This child was weak minded and remained in the Shelter 122 days. He was then admitted to the Asylum at Orillia. His parents were both insane and there was no place for the child but the common gaol if the Society had not intervened.

Case H.—This case was from the Township of Belmont. The stepfather is serving a term in the penitentiary; mother left without means of supporting the child. Placed in good home.

Case E.—A child, eighteen months of age, illegitimate; mother unable to provide for child. Placed in the Shelter for a short time when it was adopted by an excellent family.

Case A.—A boy, fourteen years of age; destitute. Put in charge of a farmer under contract with the Society; has now $35 in the Bank and is making his own living.

Case B.—A child, living under very distressing circumstances with stepfather. Placed in the Shelter under order of the Magistrate and now in a good home in Town.

Case D.—A little girl, five and one half years of age, illegitimate, now in a good home in town.

Case W.—Two little boys; mother in gaol on charge of insanity father utterly unable or willing to provide for children. Taken from the back country and placed in comfortable homes. And so we might go on at considerable length.

One of the pleasantest duties of this department is to receive and record the reports upon the children who have been placed in foster homes. As a rule the child is found to be healthy, happy, attending school, receiving religious instruction and a knowledge of household or farm work, at the same time gaining the affection of the foster parents. Those of us who know the utterably deplorable condition of the same children a few months previously have reason to be well satisfied with the results.

THE SHELTER.

The Shelter is warm, comfortable and well managed. Mr. and Mrs. Henry not only perform the routine duties of their office well but in addition gain the affection of the children under their charge. Nineteen children were admitted during the year. Ten of these were town children and nine from the Country. Three children were on hand when the year began making 22 for 1901.

POLICE COURT

One of the Society's Solicitors has attended the trial of all juvenile offenders and has offered to the Magistrate all assistance possible in investigation and disposing of such cases. In a number of instances children have been allowed their liberty upon the undertaking of our Society to keep an eye upon them as far as possible.

ILLEGITIMACY.

In several instances illegitimate children have been taken into the Shelter as it has been made a rule that no case of cruelty, destitution or desertion will be refused admission.

WARNINGS ETC.

Our agent Mr. Cochrane has been active in the discharge of his duties. Many cases have been investigated, warnings served, and truants reproved. Parents have been notified of daughters who were keeping late hours and undesirable company. All communications are treated as confidential and those who call upon the Society to take action need have no fear of consequences to themselves.

FINANCES.

Sufficient funds have been forthcoming, often from very unexpected sources, to keep us out of debt. Thanks are due to many contributors and public institutions for moneys received.

We trust it will not be forgotten that we rely on the kind and continued support of charitable people for the future. Over $17,000, was bequeathed to the New York Society last year.

We hope our Canadian people when making their wills will remember our Children's Aid Society as there is no sweeter charity in the world to-day than the rescue from cruelty and destitution of the little children.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

Thanks are again due to several members of the medical profession for kind services rendered during the year with great cheerfulness.

I append a number of reports received from the Government Visitor, Mrs. Harvey. Of course all the reports are not as favorable as the ones attached but the latter are a fair sample.

A number of communications were read from the Superintendent of Neglected and Dependent Children stating that the different wards of the Society had been visited and were all in good homes where they were receiving careful training and were being well cared for.

Rev. W. L. Armitage, moved, seconded by Rev. J. P. Wilson, that the report be adopted,—Carried.

Mr. H. Burnham said it was particularly gratifying to the Society and others that the work of the Society was in such a flourishing condition and that the work done had proved so satisfactory showing that the offices were in close touch with the work to be done.

Mr. P. Campbell, Treasurer, presented the financial statement for the year 1901. The receipts have been very good and although the expenses were considerable still there was a balance to the credit of the Society amounting to $261.80. This report was very satisfactory and was adopted as read.

Mr. Geo. Cochrane, Agent of the Society, presented his annual report as follows.

LATEST FROM OTTAWA

The Senate Still Tory by Small Majority

THE DIVORCE LAW RULING

The Forthcoming Session of Parliament Likely to be a Short One

Salmon Eggs Ship Well—A Grist of News From The Dominion Cabinet.

Special to The Times

Ottawa, Ont. Jan. 24—The result of the by-elections has not affected the standing of the two parties, and will not affect their relative strength during the next session of Parliament, which opens on February 13. Even in the instance where a constituency went Conservative by a small majority the incident was of no significance, more than that the Liberals, knowing the immense majority they have in the house, do not mind in the least if this is cut down a little.

In addition to that it is a fact that the Senate, which has so long during Laurier's tenure of the Premiership been of an opposition majority, is fast turning Liberal. The Conservative majority has almost disappeared. They were motley old gentlemen, these senators, and in Canada, as differing from the United States, senators are not elected, but appointed by the Government for life, so that when a Government changes the new Government may have a majority in the house and yet a minority in the Senate, through which all its bills could be thrown out.

SENATE STILL CONSERVATIVE

At the present time the Senate stands forty-three Conservatives to thirty-four Liberals, but there are four vacancies, and they may be counted virtually as Liberals. The Premier will not hesitate to fill these before Parliament meets, so that the Senate will then have forty-three Conservatives against thirty-eight Liberals. This gives the opposition a majority of five, but as there is every likelihood of at least that number being absent at different times through sickness and advanced age this majority will not trouble the Government very much. When the four appointments mentioned have been filled it will mean thirty appointments made by Laurier during his five and a half years in power, as against forty-one appointments made by the Conservative leaders during the eighteen years that they have been in power.

As stated before, the Senate used to be made up almost entirely of old men, men whose voices could not be heard in debate by those in the gallery, and there have been instances of men having been brought from their homes on stretchers to vote on important questions. Since the Liberals came into power, however, they have been steadily dying off, and it has been Premier Laurier's policy to appoint middle-aged, vigorous men, whose aggressive attack in the Senate probably will drive the remnant of the old gentlemen holding the seats to their graves.

Little can as yet be said about the work that will be done during the coming session. But it would be very strange if somehow or other the temperate matter, although really of direct interest only to the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, were not brought up.

The latest in both provinces is the impending "referendum." In both provinces the Government is trying to save itself with this. The question of prohibition was in the first place submitted to the populace by means of a plebiscite, and the populace voted in favor of it. Then the Privy Council voted that temperance legislation was quite legal for the provinces to pass, and now the Governments of both provinces are so afraid that the people did not know what they were doing when they asked for prohibition that they have decided to give them a chance to put themselves on record once more by means of this ingenious affair called a "referendum."

It need not be thought, however, that the referendum is a certainty, for it will in all probability take a few weeks at least yet for the different political forces in the provinces to agree upon the exact proportion of the vote that is to settle the question. Some favor a straight majority of the votes cast and others a majority of the possible vote to be cast. It looks very much, however, as if they would decide upon accepting 62 1-2 per cent. of the actual vote cast to bring prohibition into effect.

DIVORCE LAW RULING LIKED

There is a name which at the present time is blessed by hundreds of Canadians, and that is the name of Chief Justice Meredith of Ontario. His pronouncement regarding the Canadian divorce law has met with considerable approval. There are very few people in Canada who favor the dispatch with which divorces are granted in certain states of the union, but there is a feeling that if there is a provision in the law at all for divorces that they should be made available to the poor as well as to the rich.

As the situation is at present only very wealthy people can afford the expense, and to this Chief Justice Meredith referred in his decision in the case of Joshua Curtis. This was one of those accusations for bigamy that have set the people of Canada, who have had divorces granted to them in the United States and have married again here by the ears.

He procured a divorce from his first wife in Kansas City, the wife defending the action, and afterward he married a second wife at Niagara, both being Canadians. They were arrested by the provincial authorities, who have started in on an anti-American the jury on the technical point that they were British subjects and that American divorces could not affect them.

The Chief Justice took the case from the jury on the technical point that there was no proof that Curtis was a British subject, but his real opinion was shown when he said that there was no evidence that the prisoner wished to evade the Canadian criminal law, but that in his opinion he evidently went to the United States to get rid of the injustice which limits divorce here to Parliament, where nine-tenths of the citizens cannot go on account of the expense involved, to rid themselves of unhappy marriages.

SALMON EGGS SHIP WELL

The Government, or rather the Fishery Department, is much pleased at the success they have had with the shipment of salmon eggs to New Zealand. They were sent out last year via San Francisco and were sent, together with California Salmon eggs, in charge of United States officials. Word was received at the Department that, although a number of them perished on the trip, 200,000 were in good living condition when they arrived.

The border officials of the United States Customs Service feel highly elated over the capture of the old Jew who had thousands of dollars' worth of gems hidden away in little bags that were sewn in the armpits of his undershirt. They claim that they have been looking for this man for years and never managed to catch him till now. They had a large number of special men here for some time watching for the importation of the unset jewels, which can be made free into this country.

Their eagerness however, to believe all the information that was given them just about that time caused them to make a mistake in the case of the President of the Montreal Lacrosse Club and one of the directors of the Montreal Amateur Athletic Association, who, being a working jeweler with a reputable business, was in the habit of carrying a few trinkets amounting to about $100 in value in his waistcoat pocket. An enemy denounced him as a smuggler, and he was nabbed. They let him out on $500 bail, however, and he now threatens suit against the United States and is a martyr among his friends who number among them the best men in Montreal and Ottawa.

The people upon whom the eyes of the United States customs are fixed just now, however, are some of the wholesale furriers, who make a practice of selling cheap and agreeing to see that the purchases are sent to the States duty free. Some of these in Canada have for years been so situated that they cannot cross the borders, and of late seizures have been made, which will prevent a few more from doing so.

HAMILTON AND METHUEN MAKE ANOTHER HAUL

Methuen, After a Running Fight of Eight Miles, Captured All the Boer Waggons and Cattle

BOERS CAPTURED IN ORANGE RIVER COLONY

1,100 Boers Move Eastward Toward the Brandwater Basin—Another Canadian Ill—Scheepers' Execution

Ladybrand, Jan. 23.—Tennant's column encountered a large Boer force under Commandant Rautenbach near Witney on Monday. The Boers had a large amount of grain, a quantity of stock, and eighty waggons. The British captured a lot of the grain, which was burned.

The burghers offered only a slight resistance. They removed three of their wounded. Later they were reinforced by 150 men from the north. The Koos commando has also been reinforced, and now numbers 250 men. They have twelve waggons containing families.

To-day and yesterday 1,100 Boers moved eastward towards the Brandwater basin. A number of Boer refugees have arrived here from Ficksburg.

London, Jan. 23.—Lord Kitchener, in a despatch from Johannesburg, Transvaal Colony, dated Tuesday, January 21, says—General Methuen overtook a Boer command near Boschpoort January 20, and, after a running fight of eight miles, captured all their waggons and cattle and twenty-four Boers.

General Bruce Hamilton made a night march against General Botha, near Witbank, January 18, and captured twenty-seven of the Boers.

ANOTHER CANADIAN ILL.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—A cable to the Governor-General from Mr. Chamberlain to-day, states that Haliburton Jackson, of the S.A.C., is dangerously ill from Nephritis and dysentry at Heidelburg. His mother is Mrs. Jackson, of Moose Land, Halifax.

HOWARD'S MURDER IN SOUTH AFRICA

Lieut. Jeff Davis Was on Scene Ten Minutes After Tragedy

CANADIAN SCOUT ON THE WAR

He Contends That the Struggle in South Africa is Not Nearly Finished

Montreal, Jan. 24—Jeff Davis was at the Windsor Hotel yesterday—or rather, Lieutenant Jeff Davis, who, for some time now, has been fighting the battles of the Empire in South Africa.

Lieut Davis, who, as scout, was attached to the Canadian Mounted Rifles had a good deal of interesting information to communicate about the present situation in South Africa.

"It is quite impossible," said he, "to make any forecast at present with regard to the war are in South Africa It is my opinion that the war is a considerable distance yet from a satisfactory conclusion. I think that the probabilities are that a very considerable period will elapse before the struggle is over, and as for the predictions frequently made to the effect that the horizon will be cleared before the coronation, why no one can make such forecast with any degree of certainty. Personally, I believe the war will be still going on then as now.

"The great trouble is the immense country which the British forces have to cover in their operations. The troops stand every chance in this wilderness of getting into all sorts of ambuscades, owing to their officers' ignorance of the country. Every column which starts out on an enterprise seems to be watched, and the news of the movements of the British forces is communicated to the Boers in the most astonishingly effective manner. The result is that when the British column thinks it has the enemy in a tight place at the end of days of weary marching, why they find the Boers have completely disappeared, and are nowhere to be seen. This is most wearing on, and disappointing to the British troops.

"It seems to be almost impossible to deal with these Boers, they are so mobile and elusive. They won't fight, but are repeatedly getting away and without the reach of the British arms. They are well nigh impossible to deal with in daytime, and the only chance to strike an effective blow at them is at night, and you can understand the difficulty of carrying on operations under these circumstances.

"The English soldier is brave—as brave as can be, but he is not the man for the style of warfare prevailing in South Africa. He will fight hard and rigidly, obey orders under all circumstances, but he cannot take the initiative. He can obey, but he cannot plan. Thrown upon his own resources in the field, he is sadly at sea. He cannot reason out a definite plan of action with the necessary swiftness. He is not individually a reliable military agent.

"Very different is the material which Canada and Australia has sent to South Africa. Here we have bodies of troops eminently fitted for scouting. Men who have all their lives been accustomed to act on their own initiative in their various callings, and who quickly make up their minds upon an emergency and having decided are in a position to take the full responsibility for their actions."

It would be hard to calculate the immense amount of assistance which has been rendered to the British arms in South Africa by the troops which have been sent thither by the colonies of Canada and Australia.

"Yes, I know 'Gat' Howard. In fact, I was at his side about ten minutes after he was foully murdered. Poor 'Gat' was brave, but he met his end at last. He had got separated from the main column, was surrounded and had given up his arms, when he was cruelly shot and killed by a man I know well and who is yet alive. This man shot him through the mouth and also through the shoulder. The orderly was also killed and a Kaffir servant was shot but feigning death managed to afterwards escape. I came up about ten minutes later, but Howard was dead, and nothing could be done."

Lieut. Davis is returning to his home at Calgary, N.W.T. He may return later to South Africa.

Curious Bits of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

It is not surprising that more people live to be over 100 years old in warm climates than in the higher latitudes. The German Empire, with 56,000,000 inhabitants, has 778 centenarians. France, with 40,000,000, has 213. England has only 146, and Scotland 46. Sweden has 10, Norway 23, Belgium 5, Denmark 2, Spain 401, and Switzerland none. Servia, with a population of 2,250,000, has 575 people over 100 years old. It is claimed that the oldest living person, one Bruno Cotrim, living in Rio de Janeiro, is 180 years old.

Ever since the Forth bridge was opened—eleven years ago—painting has gone on continuously, according to the "Mechanical Engineer." "Beginning at the south end, the workmen take three years to cover the entire length of the bridge, and, as three years represents approximately the life of the paint, no sooner are they finished than the men have to begin again. In this way every square inch of steel comes under observation at least once in three years. The staff of men employed varies in number from the maximum of 35."

In comparison with the English tongue, foreign tongues seem parsimonious in some ways of expression and wasteful in others. For instance, it is impossible to "kick" a man in French. You must give him a "blow with the foot." The Portuguese do not "wink" at one; they "close and open the eyes." In the languages of the American Indians there is no word with which to convey the idea of "stealing," perhaps because the idea of property is so vague. It is related of one of the early missionaries that, in attempting to translate the Bible into Algonkin, he could find no word to express "love," and was compelled to invent it.

The first thing that strikes a landsman on a man-of-war is the rigid discipline observed everywhere. On some of the ships belonging to the tropical countries, however, discipline is very lax. The "Defense," a Haytian man-of-war, was lying in the harbor of Port au Prince. One day a mess cook, for some reason, cleaned about a peck of knives and forks on the gun-deck, and, being suddenly called away, and not wishing to spend time to go to the galley, he seized the mess-pot full of knives and forks and stuck it in the muzzle of the ten-inch gun, putting the tampion in after it. About an hour afterward the admiral came aboard, and as the gun was loaded with blank cartridge, they used it to fire a salute. It happened that the gun was aimed toward the town, and almost pointblank at the Grand Hotel. The guests assembled on the porch to witness the ceremonies, when they were saluted with a rain of knives and forks, which stuck against the wooden walls like quills on a porcupine. Fortunately no one was hurt, although there were many narrow escapes.

A Famous Necklace.

The famous pearl necklace of the Countess Castiglione, which has just been sold by auction to a French jewelry [illegible] for eighty-four thousand three hundred dollars, is one of the most beautiful things of its kind in existence. The piece consists of two hundred and seventy-nine pearls, which are [illegible] in five strings. Each string [illegible] put up separately and knocked down to different bids. Granberg of Paris succeeded in securing all of them, thus giving him possession of the beautiful necklace in its entirety. The countess was an eccentric character. To punish France for having become a republic she shut herself up in her house and never let the light of day shine on her, contenting herself with candles and gas. At the same time she abolished mirrors from her apartments, and thus spared herself the pain of looking at her face as it aged.

Down on the Modern Theater.

EVERYONE is familiar with General Sherman's famous definition of war. The great Italian actress, Eleanora Duse, now applies the same harsh epithet to stage life. She says it is "hell—downright hell."

Duse has confessed to an interviewer that she is "tired of the theater, but not of art, tired of the theatrical part of stage life, tired of the necessary cooperation of artists, managers, sceneshifters and lamp-lighters."

"Yes," she continued, "I am tired of all and everything liable to obstruct my artistic endeavors and to interfere with my plans, executed or intended. I am dreaming of entering the lecture platform, but will do things in quite a different way from the ordinary.

"I mean to enliven the lecture platform and broaden its scope by retaining some of the stage's features. My American tour will be my swan's song as far as stageland is concerned.

"After that I will endeavor to realize this dream of making the world acquainted with the great masterpieces of literature without detracting their attention by undue scenic effects and the awkwardness or stupidity of actors playing incidental parts.

"One or two ladies or gentlemen will be engaged as my assistants, merely to look their parts and give me the cue. As for myself, I couldn't think of assuming several roles as some do at dramatic recitals.

"I needn't repeat," she continued, "that I leave the stage without regret, yet at the same time I am almost forced to do something of the kind. I can't be for ever playing Dumas and Sardou, Ibsen and Sudermann. No one of account is writing new plays for me, and those that are written might as well remain unacted.

"I tell you la Duse is threatened by literary famine. Shall I wait until the public tires of my repertoire? Besides, I must rid myself of the slavery of stage life. That's no life at all. I assure you it is hell, downright hell."

Curious Whims.

Eccentricity is often nothing but the exaggeration of individuality, as with a scholar of some distinction who died towards the end of the last century. His peculiarity expressed itself in the way in which he tried to carry his scholarship, or the symbolism of it, into the grave. By the terms of his will he left six thousand guineas to his sister on condition that his funeral was carried out on curiously-prescribed lines. His coffin was painted green, and was followed by only six gentlemen—no relatives being invited—who were to receive ten guineas each provided they did not dress in black. The body was fully dressed. Under the head was placed a copy of Horace, and at the feet Bentley's Milton. In one hand was a pocket edition of Horace, and in the other a small Greek Testament; and another copy of Horace was laid underneath. The hired mourners sang over the closed grave the last stanza of the twentieth ode of the second book of Horace; and subsequently, after a generous supper, another ode was sung. "Which done," ran the final injunction of the will, "I would have them take a cheerful glass, and think no more of me." A French historian had a whimsical fancy for reading and writing by candlelight. At full noonday, in the brightest summer weather, he would have his candle by his side, and he would carry it in his hand when showing his visitors to the door.

Appearances Deceived Him.

Wit and Wisdom From New Books.

"When the lights are out," he said; "when forever and a night the actor bids the stage farewell; when stripped of mask and tinsel, he goes home to that Auditor who set him his part; then perhaps he will be told what manner of man he is. The glass that now he dresses before tells him not; but he thinks a truer glass would show a shrunken figure."—"Audrey."

The Up-to-Date Undertaker.

A Yankee undertaker advertises "Why live and be miserable, when you can be comfortably buried for twenty dollars?" We shall expect something of the kind over here soon. Don't be surprised when you take up your morning paper if you read this sort of thing: "Billy Morgan looked down the barrel of his daddy's gun to see where the bullet went to when it went off. The funeral was handsomely conducted by Smith & Co., who have always a large staff on hand, and are open to bury the whole neighborhood at twenty-four hours' notice. A pound of tea given away with every coffin. Order early and avoid disappointment."

IT'S AN ILL OMEN,

Thinks the wife, to have the wedding ring slip from the finger. "Something is going to happen."

Something is happening. That ring could hardly be pulled from the finger when it was put there a few years ago. Now it slips off by its own weight. How thin the fingers have grown! And the fingers don't grow thin alone. How thin the face is and how thin the once plump form. Almost unconsciously the wife has been fading and wasting away. The strength given to children has never been regained. Drains which should have been stopped have been neglected.

That is a common experience with women, unless some friend has shared with them the secret of the strengthening and healing power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the periods, dries the drains which undermine the strength, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It makes the baby's advent practically painless and gives vigor and vitality to nursing mothers.

"Words cannot tell how grateful I am for your kind advice and good medicines," writes Mrs. John Cooke, of Hastings, Northumberland Co., Ontario. "I have been in poor health for four years back and this spring got so bad I could not do my work. I went to the doctor and he said I had ulceration and falling of the internal organs, but thought I would try your 'Favorite Prescription.' I took five bottles and three of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of Dr. Pierce's Pellets, and I can safely say that I never felt better in my life."

A Dearth of "Hold-ups."

PREVIOUS to Mr. McKinley's first inauguration, his acquaintance with the members of his Cabinet was a very slight one, only Mr. Sherman being at all intimate with the Chief Executive. The getting acquainted was rather of slow progress, as all were engrossed in their new and intricate duties. One evening the conversation chanced to turn upon the youthful ambitions of the members. Each related his early plans for the future, and when Secretary Wilson's turn came, the Iowan said: "My ambition has not yet been realized. I wanted to be worth $1,000,000 and have two good pairs of suspenders at the same time. As yet, I have neither." The Cabinet unofficially laughed at this frank confession, and Secretary Gage, after a minute, confessed that he had never simultaneously possessed two pairs of dependable suspenders. Secretary Long remarked that when he graduated from Harvard he had two pairs of new trousers, each with good new galluses, but that the experience had never responded to an encore; while the now Justice McKenna said that, although he came from the Pacific Slope, two pairs of "hold-ups" were unknown to him. Others made similar confessions, and finally Secretary Bliss, the wealthiest man present, said with a laugh: "This seems to be a strange coincidence. Last Saturday evening Mrs. Bliss came in to my study and said: 'Papa, are you going out at all this evening?' I replied that I did not so intend, and asked the reason of her question. 'Oh, nothing,' she replied, 'only if you are not, Ed'—our son—'wants to use your only good suspenders.'"

As a sort of final course to this tale, Mr. McKinley tells that Secretary Wilson related this conversation at the breakfast table the morning following. Three of his children were present. It was in the early holiday season. Each of the children sat interested and observing. Christmas came, and in the stocking of the Secretary of Agriculture were found three dozen pairs of suspenders of a high degree of excellence. The children had remembered the story. All Secretary Wilson then needed to realize his youthful ambition was the $1,000,000.

And this is one of the very few humorous stories the late President told repeatedly with gusto.

Paine's Celery Compound

Used By The Wealthy as Well as by Those in Humbler Circumstances For the Banishment of Rheumatism.

The most devoted and earnest friends of Paine's Celery Compound, are the men and women who possess ample means for the employment of the best medical skill.

Paine's Celery Compound has been used and tested by our best people for the cure of rheumatism, and in every case it has been victorious over the disease. It has saved thousands of pain-racked, disabled and crippled rheumatics for whom physicians could do no more than order a change of climate or bid them bathe in some mineral spring. Mrs. F. McMann, Thorold, Ont., write's about her husband's cure as follows:

"I think it my duty to let me know what Paine's Celery Compound has done for my husband. For two years he suffered very much from rheumatism in the back, and became so bad that he could not bend, stoop, or sit in a chair at table, and I was obliged to take his meals to him while he lay in bed. He was treated by various physicians, but received no benefit until he used Paine's Celery Compound. The first bottle gave him relief, and after he had used six bottles he was quite free from the rheumatism. He says he feels like a new man now."

A Scientist's Grim Discovery.

Dr. Casagrandi, in reading a paper before a medical association in Rome stated that he had employed a number of women wearing long skirts to walk for one hour through the streets of the city, and, after the promenade was over, he had taken these skirts and had them submitted to a very careful bacteriologic examination. There were found on every skirt large colonies of noxious germs, including those of typhoid fever, consumption, influenza and tetanus (or lock-jaw). Numerous other bacilli were likewise well represented on each skirt. Dr. Casagrandi maintained that, in view of these facts, women, and especially mothers, should at once discontinue wearing trailing skirts, and other members of the Medical Congress unhesitatingly expressed the same opinion, and passed resolutions to that effect. That women should subject themselves to the filth, to say nothing of the possible dangers of trailing gowns, has long been a wonder to those acquainted with bacteriology. Nevertheless, so long as fashion calls for long skirts, no reform can be expected, for the great majority of women are bound to be in the fashion regardless of any ordinary considerations. There is some encouragement, however, in the fact that many of the younger women of the present wear their golf and bicycle skirts throughout the day, and merely dress for dinner and the evening.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

Lord Otway had been compelled to listen to this long speech, though each word struck deep into his wounded heart and gave him exquisite pain, with an air of outward composure. Commiseration was not possible to him, neither was indifference. Barbara was savagely delighted at sight of his white, wan face; though she was supposed to love him, and though she meant to be his wife, it was not in her nature not to rejoice at such a triumph for her jealous revenge.

She uttered many soft disappointments at losing him so soon. She was quite depressed; she had so hoped he was comfortable; that Brexley air would do him good; that they could have had long chats over parochial administrations in which she required advice like his so much, etcetera; and she would only let him go on the distinct understanding that he really and honestly would return if it were in the least degree possible. Oh! and if— if Lord Otway were to see or hear hear anything of that unfortunate girl, would he kindly let Miss Mostyn know at once!

"For," Barbara had finished, with a sigh; "I am not so prejudiced as most women are, dear Lord Otway, and I will ever go to her and again entreat her to leave her life of sin, and become penitent. Should she need any help, I will always give it to her — always, no matter what the world may be inclined to say. If we women do not put out a hand to our sinful sisters, it is a sorry thing, is it not Lord Otway?"

Ormande had shuddered and flinched, as he shuddered and flinched now whenever Barbara's shrill, clear voice rang in his ears.

And it was of Katharine she spoke, Katharine, his angel, his pure, lovely-faced saint! Katharine, the one and only being whom he had ever allowed to creep into his heart and be enthroned there. Katharine, whose image had been blended in those sweet, lost dreams of a future, when his saint and his angel should also be his wife. Was not the cup of sorrow too bitter?

No wonder a blight and a shadow had fallen on the handsome, frank young face. The prospect had been very hard to bear when she had told him his love was hopeless, but its weight was as nothing compared to now. Then, although hope was debarred him, he had the glorious, the ever sweet knowledge that he loved and was beloved.

A week had gone since that day— only a week, to Ormande it seemed one long, weary year. He had prayed so hard for comfort, for light in his darkness, for peace of mind and resignation. He had prayed for forgiveness, too, for in his humility he said, "I put her before Heaven, and I have sinned most terribly!" but though his prayers soothed they could not bring forgetfulness, and as he walked away from his aunt's carriage through the dusty, hot, August scorched streets, his heart was crying out for his love —not for the Katharine, as he knew her now, but for his pure, lovely-faced Katharine, who had seemed to him to be the earthly embodiment of one of those sweet, grave, good spirits sent sometimes by a beneficent Providence to strengthen and purify man for this earthly existence.

And then, suddenly, his thoughts changed, and with a shiver he remembered her in her lone estate, and a great flood of emotion broke loose in his heart. He had not permitted himself hitherto to dwell much on Katharine, where she was, what she was doing, or aught appertaining to her, and it seemed to him all at once as if he had been too selfish.

"I should have trodden down my own feelings, crushed my own pain. What is my broken heart to her soul's danger! Yes, yes, I have been wrong, I see it all plainly now. I must seek her out, I must find them, and by every means in my power I must try to awaken the dormant good that lies hidden in her heart. I have neglected my Master's duty; henceforth I will forget my own sorrow, forget myself to think of her and of her salvation! I will commence my task this very day, this very hour!"

And such is the strange destiny that hangs about we dwellers on this globe. While Ormande was determining this —having no clue to the whereabouts of the woman he meant to succor, imagining her to be, perhaps by now, miles away on the broad ocean —he was even then going toward her; in a few more moments they would meet!

CHAPTER XXIV.

Lord Otway was bound, as he had told his aunt, on a few hours' hard work in some of the dingiest slums in this rich, bustling, prosperous London. It was not, as he had said, exactly a neighborhood in which to take Lady Blanche, or, indeed, any refined, highly cultured woman, but he did not shrink from it. He knew every place so well, and the welcome he received, if expressed in blunt and somewhat uncouth language, was none the less pleasant to him for that.

Here, situated in the very heart of poverty and wretchedness, was a home for nursing sisters; a quiet, unpretentious place, with no pomp or outward fuss connected with it, but which, for all that, was one of the busiest and best conducted establishments it was possible to find. Lord Otway knew it well. He had had much help and sympathy from these good women in his work; he knew their value, and he set a high store upon it. Their charity was worth more than fifty such model villages and patronesses as Brexley and Barbara Mostyn any day, he said to himself.

On this afternoon, when he had conquered the excitement and emotion that followed on his sudden determination, Ormande plunged into his work. There was a great deal of sickness —fever and other ailments —and it was not long before he found he must have a coadjutor.

"If Sister Dora is not engaged she will do it," he said to himself, confidently, and he turned his footsteps to the home above mentioned.

The matron received him cordially.

"Please sit down, Lord Otway," she said, with a smile; "Sister Dora is just at this moment engaged with a lady. You look quite worn out with the heat. You must let me give you a cup of tea; yes, I insist."

The matron had observed the change in Lord Otway's face, and it had puzzled and distressed her very much.

"Sister Dora has been away for a week," she said. "She came home suddenly this morning. It seems that the gentleman she was nursing insulted her by swearing at her in a most shocking way; now you know how sweet Sister Dora is, and it must have been something very great to make her throw up any duty she had undertaken. She went to this case in a strange way. She was at Euston Station seeing a friend depart for the north when she happened to be quite close to this gentleman as he was knocked down by a cab and run over. Pitying his wife in her distress — for Sister Dora says the poor creature was like one stunned and in a dream—she offered to go home with the injured man, and there she has stayed until this morning, when she surprised me by coming back quite unexpectedly. She speaks in the highest terms of Mrs. Smythe, who ——"

Ormande sprang suddenly from his chair.

"Mrs. Smy— Smythe," he repeated, in a very quick way, and with a fierceness the matron had never seen in him before, he asked: "Tell —me, when did this happen? The date, give me the date!"

Amazed and a little alarmed, the matron obeyed, and a great sighing sob broke from his lips. If — and something seemed to tell him that this Mrs. Smythe was the one he sought —if it were so, then Katharine might yet be saved, for the date of the accident was the date of the evening of the Brexley fete, and of the day on which Katharine had eloped with Gordon Smythe.

He stood for one moment with his face grown white with agitation. If this were only so! He had no words deep enough to offer to Heaven in his gratitude for the mercy that had shadowed this girl; but he must be sure —he must be convinced.

"You say this —this lady is here now?" he said feverishly, ignoring the matron's eager offer of brandy or wine. "I should like to see her."

"Nothing easier," the matron answered soothingly. She felt a wave of pity steal over her at sight of his troubled face. "I will ask her to come in here. Shall I tell her you wish it, Lord Otway?"

He stretched out a hand.

"No; do not mention my name. Only let her come!"

The matron withdrew, and Ormande stood with one hand clenching the chair beside him. In that moment he had conquered himself and his own weakness; he had silenced the longing that filled his heart; he had nothing but his duty before him — was no longer an earthly man with earthly desires; nothing but the servant of his God.

His back was turned to the door, and as it opened, and a soft footstep sounded on the boarded floor, a slight, only a slight shiver went through him, then his face grew cold and stern once more.

"The matron tells me you wish to speak to me," Katharine said hurriedly; and then, with a low cry, she shrank back with outstretched arms against the wall, while an agonised murmur broke from her lips of "You! You——!"

There was a world of unconquerable misery in those two small words, misery that was greater than she could bear.

Ormande shivered again at what he thought was her attitude of shame and disgrace. He was silent a moment, and then he spoke:

"Yes, it is I. I thank Heaven that we have been permitted to meet in this strange way. I have been trying to find an easy method of bringing us face to face and here it comes, unsought, unasked." He lifted his cold hand from the chairback. "Will you not sit down?" he went on, in his grave, stern, measured tones, that struck so cruelly on her sensitive ear. "I wish to speak to you, if you can spare me a moment."

Katharine unloosened the lace around her throat; she was even paler and thinner than when he had seen her last. There were marks of deep anguish on her lovely face.

"Remorse has followed; she cannot be wholly lost while conscience still lives," was Ormande's hurried thought.

He came a step nearer, and brought a chair forward, but Katharine shook her head.

"I prefer to hear what you have to say to me standing," was her answer, in a voice that was weary and full of bitter pain.

Ormande paused a moment, then moistening his lips, he moved up to her, and came to a standstill just before her.

His heart was beating madly, wildly. The task he had set himself was greater than he had supposed, but his courage did not fail, nor his purpose falter.

"Katharine," he said, solemnly, but with his deep love dwelling in every tone; "what have you done! My poor girl!! My poor girl!!"

A sob rose to her lips, but she choked it back.

Now the fulness of Gordon's revenge rose to confront her in all its hideousness. She was dishonored in Ormande's eyes; she stood there seeming to him a shameful thing, who had wantonly and wilfully rushed into the path of sin. She, Katharine Brereton, the proud, pure spirit whose record was as white, as blameless, as an angel's! Two or three words would set all this right, only two or three words, and yet she must not— she dare not— utter them.

A shudder ran through her at the fiendish cruelty that had planned this torture. From Barbara Mostyn's insults she had never winced. She knew the girl to be her greatest enemy, and therefore she expected nothing kind and sympathetic, though even Gordon would have been startled could he have heard the avalanche of abuse hurled at his wife's head by his confederate. He had instructed Barbara to dismiss the girl, to hint at a flirtation with her guest, and to boldly tackle her on the question of any understanding between Katharine and himself, but he did not tell Miss Mostyn to permit her jealous hatred and anger so far as to behave like a thorough virago and a fish fag. Barbara's insults had fallen off Katharine's proud contemptuous mind, but Ormande's pity, his gravity, his sorrow, was another matter. It shattered the cold, icy indifference that she had wrapped round her heart on the night she found she was to leave Brexley and follow her husband to town; even the accident at Euston immediately on their arrival and his sufferings did not melt it, but Ormande's voice pierced through to her heart of hearts and rent the patched up wound asunder. Katharine felt her limbs tremble beneath beneath her as she leant against the wall.

The Famous Maelstrom

(Norwegian letter in the Chicago "Record-Herald.")

We sailed through the famous maelstrom, which the ancients believed guards the entrance to the sublimest beauty of the fjords of the Lofoden Islands, and has furnished so much material for the imagination of the authors of Norwegian legendry and modern novelists. It is a reality—not one, but several maelstroms actually exist, and any of them will answer the descriptions given by Victor Hugo, Jules Verne, Edgar A. Poe and writers of lesser fame. The chief and most dangerous is an extraordinary whirlpool between the islands of Moskene and Rosst, near the southern extremity of the Lofoden Archipelago. It is called Moskaesé-Strommen. Another, by the island of Vaero, called the Saeistrom, is almost as dangerous. There are many narrow channels between the mountains where great volumes of water, coming from opposite directions, meet as the tide flows in and out. They form temporary whirlpools twice a day, and during the spring tides, or when the natural currents are accelerated by heavy western gales, passage is impossible. No vessel could survive them. Even whales have been caught and whirled around until they were dead. Between times these channels look innocent enough. Even small boats can pass safely through them at the proper time each day, and the departure of the mail boats is regulated accordingly, but they have caused the loss of many lives. Boats have actually disappeared, being sucked into the vortex and carried to the bottom to whirl and whirl and whirl until the waters are tired and flow away, carrying the wrecks and the bodies of the dead with them on the undercurrent, to emerge miles and miles distant.

It is not strange that the ignorant and superstitious sailors of the Middle Ages attributed this mighty and mysterious action of the waters to supernatural power, and their imaginative minds, always creating monsters and miracles out of natural phenomena which they cannot understand, placed in them an octopus, whose awful arms were always extended to grasp unwary mariners who were so unfortunate as to come within his reach. Later writers and more intelligent represented the maelstrom as a vast caldron in which the waters revolve with terrific speed, their centrifugal force extending a long distance, and gradually drawing toward the center all who venture within their power. The mariners struggle and shriek in vain. The monster is inexorable, and when the crisis comes the vessel springs out of the water and then shoots suddenly down into the vortex, while the shrieks of terror and despair are drowned in the rushing of the hungry torrent and the howling of the winds.

The straits are very dangerous, and all vessels are warned to keep out of them. The notes upon the charts issued by the Norwegian hydrographic office say that "when the wind is steady at flood and ebb tide each day, the whirlpool is still for half an hour or more, when boats may then pass through, but half way between flood and ebb tide the passage becomes dangerous, although it can be used by steamers and large vessels, when there is no wind, for several hours a day. Toward the height of the tide, or when a gale is blowing, the water revolves with a speed of twenty-six miles an hour in mighty whirlpools, in which the largest steamers would be helpless."

Concerning King Solomon.

Several statesmen, a newspaper correspondent or two, and a deacon in one of Washington City's churches were discussing various subjects of more or less bearing on a game of poker which had been played earlier in the evening. It was merely a game for fun, out of deference to the deacon, or part of the evening would have been wasted in conversation, and the deacon surprised the assembly.

"Were any of you gentlemen aware," he said, "that King Solomon was a poker-player?"

"He couldn't have been the wisest man if he was," ventured a correspondent who is known for his bad luck.

"There is evidence that he was, just the same," insisted the deacon.

"Evidence or testimony?" queried a statesman, who is also a lawyer.

"What's the difference?" asked a correspondent.

"Testimony is a mere statement, and may be false or true; evidence is that by means of which a fact is established. See?"

"I'm—er," hesitated the deacon, "I guess all of you will admit Solomon's testimony as evidence."

"Put it," said the lawyer.

"Well," exclaimed the deacon, "if you will consult the fourth verse of the tenth chapter of Proverbs, written by King Solomon, as announced in the first verse, you will find this statement: 'He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.' Now, what have you got to offer in rebuttal?"

And every man there admitted that Solomon evidently knew what he was talking about.—William J. Lampton.

—Tudor Jenks in "Century."

The bronze statue of Washington and Lafayette, designed by Bartholdi, being a replica of the statue in the Place des Etats Unis in Paris, stands at the junction of Morningside and Manhattan avenues at One Hundred and Fourteenth street, New York. It is the gift to the city of Charles Broadway Rouss, the blind merchant.

General Joubert was not a bitter enemy of England. When contesting the presidency with Mr. Kruger in 1893 he said: "I fought against the English for our liberty, but I have now, as I had then, no ill feeling whatever against any other power."

A Story of Charles Frederic Goss.

Recently a Chicago newspaper man paused before a bookstore window which was heaped high with copies of The Redemption of David Corson, and he said to his companion:

"There is one instance, at least, in which lightning struck in the right place. If the size of an author's heart determined the measure of his success every book written by Charles Frederic Goss would sell a million copies.

"When I struck Chicago I had neither job nor prospect of one. There was not a man in the whole big city who knew me, and it didn't take many days of knocking about from one newspaper office to another to convince me that not a human being here cared to know me. But that was where I made my mistake. One night I happened to step inside Mr. Moody's Chicago Avenue Church. Mr. Charles Frederic Goss was in charge of the work, and at the close of the services I met him. He passed over the conventional revivalistic questions regarding my spiritual condition, but quickly found out where I was stopping, and that I was looking for work and had met with disappointment in my applications. From that hour I felt that I certainly had one friend in Chicago—and he a very cheerful one.

"Week after week passed, and finally a month and a half, before I secured my first position. In the latter part of that probationary period I was in constant terror of the day of reckoning that was to come with my landlady, to whom I had not paid a dollar. Strangely enough, however, she never mentioned the matter or suggested that I find some other place. My credit appeared to be as firm as that of the bank cashier at my right, who paid his board every Saturday night, before the whole company, handing out crisp bills as he took his seat at the table.

"Finally, when I was able to pay her I spoke of the unaccountable forbearance she had shown me as a stranger.

"'Oh, I knew you were all right,' she replied. 'Mr. Goss came here to the house and talked with me about you. Any boarder who has him for a friend can let his bills run with me as long as he needs.'

"All this time the author of David Corson had been keeping my courage up by assuring me there was a place for every honest man who had a desire to work; but he had never so much as hinted that he had personally established my credit at the boarding-house where I was in arrears.

"He always gave away a large share of his salary, and was never so happy as when helping some person in desperate circumstances. In his college course he had a great battle to retain his grasp on the faith which had been taught him in boyhood. This struggle can be traced very distinctly in the pages of his novel."

A Heated Discussion.

"At this point," said the narrator, "she broke down and wept scalding tears." "My goodness!" exclaimed the listener, "she must have been boiling over with rage."—Chicago "News."

Man's Self-Conceit.

If the wonders of the exhibition which Glasgow has made so successful, have begot any general sense of pride in the achievements of mankind, and particularly of those pushing and ingenious folk who dwell in the City by the Clyde, a perusal of Professor Rucker's speech at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in the Scottish metropolis, will prove a wholesome corrective, says the "Outlook." He wound up his remarks with the confession that, "with all our searchings, we have not torn the veil of mystery from the world around us." There is nothing so true, and nothing so salutary to remember. Mankind tends evermore to self-conceit; that tendency is encouraged by the daily newspaper. Perhaps some physicist in his researches blunders on some simple property of matter, or condition of the forces about us, and the Roentgen rays are the result. Immediately arises in the press a shriek of exultation. One would think at such times that Nature was about to open out her heart and reveal all her mysteries. But the only fact in the matter appears to be that the human intellect is not fit to comprehend the nature of things. The nature of things is all about us; it only remains mysterious to us because of our incapacity to grasp it. As Professor Rucker reminds us, the span of human life is a very short time in which to study the manifestations of Nature. If we lived longer the problems would appear different. Nor can we transmit our individual knowledge. Each person has to begin at the beginning; he is the slave of his faculties, which, very evidently, were not intended to grasp all at once the character of the universe. The most profound thinkers and investigators know best how ignorant man is. Professor Rucker follows a long line of presidents in reminding us that we know practically nothing.

The Arts of Childhood.

"We hear a good deal these days about the lost arts," said the man who, though old in years, is still young at heart. "I wonder if the world realizes that some of the most precious arts of childhood are in danger of becoming extinct? How many boys today can make a kite, properly hung and with a tail sufficient to balance, the ends nicely bent and worked down with a bit of broken glass? I interviewed my young nephew the other day, and was thunderstruck to discover that he knew nothing about it. Could he make a water-wheel, a windmill, an elder pop-gun, a jack-lantern, a buzz-wheel, an air-gun from a goose-quill, with a sliced potato for ammunition; a willow whistle, a squirt-gun? No; he knew nothing about them. 'But surely,' said I, almost pathetically, 'you can make a cornstalk fiddle?' 'Do you mean a violin, unk?' said he, yawning. Then I gave it up. I don't believe the youths of to-day know enough to stick a feather in a corncob and throw it into the air. I am going to write a book some day upon the arts of childhood to save them from utter annihilation."—Detroit "Free Press."

"He thinks he's popular, eh?" "Does he? Why, whenever his name appears in the paper, he fancies the public reads it this way: 'John (cheers), Henry (applause), Muggin (loud and continuous cheering).'" — Philadelphia "Press."

Professor Baboey—Ah, well, love is blind. Miss Penelope—Oh, no, Professor; love isn't blind—it is cross-eyed; it sees a lot of things it doesn't see, and it doesn't see a lot of things it ought to see.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"Cure are No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

The Difference

We take the following from the Lindsay Post:

"Ratepayers who notice any neglect of duty on the part of snowplow contractors should drop a postal card to Town Commissioner Chalmers or leave a statement in writing with Town Clerk Knowlson, when the matter will be attended to promptly."

In Peterborough things are different. A man may keep on complaining and no notice whatever is taken of his grievance. We know of cases where street watering was neglected for weeks, and the Town Engineer notified personally and by letter without the slightest notice being taken of it. This state of affairs cannot last forever.

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching. Foot Elm can give you a wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c, a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

That Dainty Widow

The presentation of the comedy, "That Dainty Widow," at Bradburn's opera house last night, was very good. There is a freshness and a go about it that is most pleasing, and every member of the company is a professional. If any one was more pleasing than another it was Miss Stanton in her splendid violin selections.

Drugging Will Not Cure Catarrh

This loathsome disease is caused by germs that invade the air passages of the head, throat and lungs, and can be cured only by inhalation of medicated air. Stomach medicines, atomizers, snuffs are ineffectual, because they fail to reach the cause of the trouble. Catarrhozone is successful because it is inhaled in every part of the breathing organs, and has power to kill the germs, heals the inflamed tissues and prevents droppings in the throat. Catarrhozone treats more than one thousand square feet of the mucous surface with every breath taken through the inhaler, and affords instant relief. It perfectly cures Catarrh, Asthma and Bronchitis. Sold by druggists. Two months' treatment, price $1.00 Small size 25c., or by mail from Polson & Co, Kingston, Ont.

THE POLICE COURT

At the Police Court yesterday morning Pat Collins was assessed $3, for drawing the snow from his yard and dumping it on the street. The town authorities have no objection to people removing the snow from their yards but certainly object to it being piled on the streets. It can be drawn to the river bank and dumped there.

A PRONOUNCED SUCCESS

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns are a pronounced success and are the most popular with the ladies. These patterns are colored beautifully on heavy Scotch Hessian or Burlap, all ready for working, and are made in the following standard sizes: 18 x 30 inches, 24 x 36 inches, 30 x 54 inches and 36 x 72 inches. The prices are so low that all homes can afford one or more of them. If your dealer cannot supply you, send your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, P.Q., and they will send post paid, newest designs to make selections from.

STRUCK BY FALLING TREE

Tree Fell on a Man and He is Now Lying in Nicholl's Hospital

A young man named Thain whose home is in Campbellford was the victim of a serious accident last Friday while working in the lumber camps of McCamus and McLeod, near Gooderham. Thain was sawing down a tree, and when it was about half cut the tree split and toppled over striking Thain before he could get out of the way. The heavy end of the tree struck him on the shoulder and left arm, dislocating the former and bruising his arm.

He was taken to Lindsay where his injuries were attended to by Dr. Gillespie and as he required further treatment he was brought to the Nicholl's Hospital. Mr. Thain had a narrow escape from being killed instantly.

Weary Brain Workers

Fagged out. Ideas come as slow as molasses. You think of things just a minute or two too late. Snap's gone! The buoyancy that made work a pleasure—that's gone too. The doctor would tell you that you are run down, not eating enough nor digesting enough. Your stomach needs air, and your digestion needs a bracer too. Your blood requires Phosphorus and Iron that it may be formed readily. Now Ferrozone is a wonderful nerve bracer and blood maker. It's food for the blood and nerves. It will make you strong quickly and permanently. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

THE POULTRY SHOW

Closed Last Night at Ten O'Clock - Very Unfavorable Weather

The Poultry Association's annual exhibition is now a thing of the past, and while it has been very successful in some respects there are others in which it has not. The townspeople have not patronized the show this year as they should have done. The past two days have been very unfavorable, the heavy snow storm has prevented the country people from coming into town, and this has helped to make the attendance much smaller.

The show this year has been the best yet in exhibits, and it is hoped that the next exhibition will be better attended.

Messrs. Learmouth & Walsh of Hastings, were among the largest exhibitors and succeeded in carrying off 18 prizes out of 24 entries, besides several special prizes.

Mr Knight, of Bowmanville, was to the front again and carried off a large number of prizes.

Messrs. Wilson & Sons, Hawkestone, were the largest exhibitors at the show. They had 45 entries, and carried off 41 prizes, including 5 specials. Mr. Geo. Mitchell, of Cobourg, also secured a large number of prizes in the bantam and pigeon classes.

AGENTS REPORT.

To the Officers and Members of the Children's Aid Society of the Town and and County of Peterborough.

In following up the plan that I adopted last year, I commenced a thorough canvass of the Town and with the advice received from Relief Officer Miller, I located eighteen families who were deserving of help and Christmas cheer in the way of clothing and baskets of provisions, the latter of which were very kindly supplied by the King's Daughters' Society of St. John's Church and by some of the ladies of the Murray Street Baptist Church all of whom were anxious to do all they could towards bringing Christmas comforts to as many as possible and for their self-sacrificing work they are deserving of the thanks of this Society. I also received assistance to the amount of seventeen Dollars ($17.00) in cash from friends of the Society, which was expended in clothing and extra baskets.

On the afternoon of December 24th, I went to the Shelter and assisted by Mrs. Henry and Mrs. McAndrews the clothes were parceled to suit the various needs, as I had prepared a list of the ages of the boys and girls in the families, nor did we forget some of the parents who were in need of warm clothing for the Winter. In this way we made up eighteen parcels of clothing and in each candies, oranges, picture books, dolls etc., were enclosed. That evening Mr. Henry and myself proceeded to distribute the clothing and some of the baskets and during the evening visited the eighteen families, and I must say that the joy and thankfulness shown by the children and parents amply rewarded us, and we could truly say, that it was more blessed to give than to receive.

The thanks of the Society are due to the ladies and merchants of the town who so kindly contributed the fruits and toys before mentioned.

By the Christmas Eve distribution over sixty persons were benefited.

GEORGE COCHRAN.

Agent.

Number of visits made and cases investigated in the Town, 93.

Number of visits made and cases investigated in County.—24.

Notices served for non-attendance of children at public school in the County—7

I must also say that the childrens' rooms have been repapered and floors painted making the Shelter much more comfortable, but the roof leaks very badly and will have to be re-shingled this Spring.

On motion the report of the Agent was adopted.

At this point, Mrs. Garvin inquired if the Society could not assist in some way in giving information to the Truant Officer regarding the non-attendance at school of many children of school age. There are a large number of children in town who should attend the schools but do not. Mr. Cochrane said that in the country there were a large number of children who did not go to school and he thought the Trustees should appoint a Truant Officer and compel the children to go to school. In town the Agent had on different occasions compelled people to send their children to school.

Mr. H. Burnham moved, seconded by Mr. Campbell, that a committee be appointed to look into the matter.—Carried.

Mr. Dennistoun, moved, seconded by Mr. Burnham, that this meeting desire to express to Mr. Geo. Cochrane their hearty appreciation for the good work he has done in assisting the Society to after neglected and ill-treated children. Mr. Cochrane has proved himself to be the right man in the right place.—Carried.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The election of officers for the year 1902 was proceeded with, and resulted as follows.

Hon. Pres.—Hon. J. R. Stratton.

Pres.—Mr. J. J. McBain.

Vice Pres.—Mrs. Kendry and Mr. A. C. Dunlop.

Secretary,—Mr. R. M. Dennistoun,

Treas,—Mr. Peter Campbell,

Solicitors,—Messrs. Edwards and Dennistoun.

Board of Management,—Mesdames, Birdsall, Peck, Garvin, Davis, Wards, Buck, O'Sullivan, Birnie, Gow and Dickson, Rev. Father McColl, Revs. Torrance, Langfeldt, Wilson, Messrs. Denne, Dr. Burnham.

Advisory Board,—Messrs. McBain, Dennistoun and Cochrane.

Rep. Charity Board,—Mr. McBain,

Mr. McBain in a neatly worded speech referred to the regret the Society felt in the departure of Rev. Father Casey from Peterborough and expressed the wish that he may be as successful in his new parish as he was in Peterborough. In the course of his address he said that in Mr. Dennistoun the Society had a most careful and enthusiastic officer who took a very deep interest in the working of the Society and in caring for the children in their care. In Mr. Campbell they had a man who was a good financier and one who kept their money safe. Mr. Campbell is a man who would encourage any wasteful expenditure and he was pleased to see him re-elected to the office of Treasurer. Mr. Cochrane then came in for a few words, he was undoubtedly the right man in the right place, he had a wonderful tact for finding out those in need and in knowing just what was needed. The Society had in Mr. Cochrane an officer of whom they should be proud.

Mr. Burnham moved, seconded by Mr. Dennistoun, that the Society desire to express their warmest thanks for the great assistance rendered by Rev. Father Casey and to express their regret at loosing one who had always taken the deepest interest in the work of the Society, and to extend to him their sincere wishes for success in his new parish.—Carried.

The meeting adjourned.

TO MATHEMATICAL EXPERTS

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—As I presume all the mathematical experts in town and Ashburnham read The Times, I propound the following conundrum:

At a contest here there was a sum of money placed in a glass jar, and the one guessing nearest to the amount was to receive the money, and the one the farthest away was to receive another prize. The guesses ranged from $1,000 to $100,000,000, and one person guessed "nothing." Now, I want to know which is the farthest away from the amount. The party who guessed "nothing" claims that you can get a percentage of the figures and not so of "nothing." Would you consider "nothing" a guess, as there was certainly something in the jar, if nothing more than air. Please answer through the columns of The Times.

"Heaven Bless The Originator of

MALT BREAKFAST FOOD."

A prominent Montreal Grocer said the other day: "Our lady customers are as capricious about the use of cereal foods in their homes as they are in the selection of a new hat or bonnet. However, since we have introduced Malt Breakfast Food to them, they seem to like it and stick to it."

A lady in Halifax, N.S., writing to the manufacturers of Malt Breakfast Food, says; "I have given your famous food a trial, and pleased to say it is the only cereal food that I have been able to use regularly from day to day. It agrees with my rather weak stomach, it has strengthened my digestion, and is giving a steady increase in weight. Heaven bless the originator of Malt Breakfast Food; it is a boon to my family." Grocers every where.

—We will cheerfully refund the money on a trial order if the goods are not entirely satisfactory. H. F. Kidd, 353 George street.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are Not Too Far Away to do Business in.

CABLE COMMUNICATION brings the Canadian investor into almost as close touch with the South African market as the British or Continental investor, and it is a well known fact (among intelligent people) that the London, England, market is the MINING MARKET OF THE WORLD. As we receive cables daily, the Canadian investor is placed by this means on an almost equal footing with the English investor.

We give the names of half a dozen of different companies in which we have done an extensive business during the past two months, showing low prices at which we handled these shares and the present prices:

	Low Price.	Present Price.	Advance.
Heidelburgs …. ….	12s 6d	19s od	$1 62
Klerksdorp…………	11s od	16s od	1 25
Witkopje…………	10s 6d	16s od	1 37
Salisbury…………	26s od	28s 6d	2 12
Chartereds…………	£3 6s od	£4 9s od	5 75
Oceanas…. …………	£2 2s od	£2 7s 6d	1 37

These are only a few instances, but numbers of others could be mentioned showing equally large or larger advances, and all our advices indicate that the upward movement in Kaffir (South African) stocks has hardly commenced. Of the above companies it is predicted that Heidleburgs and Salisburys will touch £5, and Witkopje, Klerksdorps and Oceanas are expected to show a profit of from 200 to 400 per cent on present prices. In addition to securing the best representatives possible in London, England, and receiving advices from such source regarding the condition of the market, we have also our SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.

South African shares bought on 20 per cent. margin or for cash as desired. Direct communication with London by cable.

THE Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and so riveted to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 5,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 25 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 2 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 2 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

BOER RESISTENCE REMAINS UNBROKEN

As Boer Prisoners are Shipped to Confinement Royalist Ranks Grow.

PROCESS OF WEARING DOWN THE BOERS.

De Wet is Once More at Large with a Force of 1,400 — Five Distinct Commandoes Moving About London, Jan. 27.—A correspondent of The Standard, writing under date of Pretoria, Dec. 6, says that the campaign of 1901 has shown that the Boer made no idle boast when he said, a year ago, that the war was then only beginning. "We have now reason to hope, however, that the end has begun," the writer continues. "During the year the commandoes have been greatly diminished in numbers, and therefore, its aggressive force. Yet we have hardly broken the back of the real resistance. In the Transvaal the commandoes are still more or less intact. Five distinct commandoes—Botha's in the east, Viljoen's in the north, Delarey's in the west, and Beyer's and Badenhurst's in the northwest—move where they will in comparative freedom. In the Orange River Colony De Wet is once more at large with a force of 1,400 men. The story of the various operations during the year is a curiously even one. Every engagement of note has been provoked by the enemy, and with one or two exceptions, he has failed in his object. In the general operations our troops have invariably succeeded in doing well, and many of the smaller laagers have been successfully rounded up by those column commanders who are not afraid to ride hard, and make long night marches.

WEARING DOWN THE BOERS.

"The ascertained facts in connection with nearly every surprise attack made by the Boers in force appear, indeed, to have reversed the popular idea that the assailants must necessarily get the worst of it. Where we have scored, and where we shall continue to score, is in the fact that our losses are easily, while those of the enemy cannot but be indifferently, replaced. As to how long hostilities are to last, there is nothing clear to guide opinion. We are sensibly wearing down the Boers; but as we cannot (or will not) adopt the principle of fighting them as they fight us, the process of attrition will necessarily continue to be slow.

"As the number of Boers who are being shipped to distant confinement increases, the ranks of loyalist residents are growing and with the repeal of the oppressive grondwet, the freedom of the judiciary, and other relics of a decadent past, a new era has already set in.

"With the New Year will at least come the firmer promise of a continent delivered from that greater Tammany which menaced all that was sound and pure in modern Government. The destinies of a coming Federation, only second to that of Australasia now lie in the hands of capable men of a progressive race, and when the noise of war has altogether passed away it will be the privilege of Briton and Boer to work amicably together in building up a homogeneous colonial nation, whose duty it will be to make of South Africa what its resources justify—the home of great national industries, and one of the brightest jewels of the Empire."

ANTI-PROHIBITIONISTS WAIT ON PREMIER ROSS.

Brewers and Others Advance Reason Why the Government Should Not Take Action in the Matter.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—The much-heralded anti-prohibition deputation took possession of the steps, side seats and landings of the grand stairway in the Parliament Buildings at 1.3 o'clock this afternoon, but it was 1.45 before the spokesman of the delegation began to make their representation to the members of the Government, all of whom were present, and occupied seats on the first landing. The deputation must have numbered full 600, as they filled the three flights of steps and the corridors leading from the main entrance to the foot of the centre stairway. Among the visitors were many representatives of every branch of the liquor business and many other industrial enterprises.

THE FIRST SPEAKER.

Mr. Eugene O'Keefe, the wellknown brewer, was the first speaker. He said that the delegation had come before the Government to show by argument a prohibitory liquor law should not be enacted. Then without further words he introduced Mr. Geo. Slemin, another prominent brewer, who advanced the argument that they were not asking for any wrongs to be remedied, but rather that their rights should be protected. The Government to which they paid licenses should see that their business as could be properly carried on. The wrongs which prohibitionists affirmed were existing in the province were in many cases imaginary. The Government had given prohibition legislation in the Dunkin and Scott Acts, both of which had proven miserable failures. It would be impossible, the speaker asserted, to make men sober by legislation. He did not believe one man in five hundred drank to excess. The very men he had been fighting twenty-five years ago were fighting him to-day.

Ald. Spence was one of these. Many of the petitions that had been presented were filled with names gathered in churches where men signed them under peculiar circumstances, and not according to their opinion in many cases. They did so because people were looking at them. The speaker believed that the Provincial Government would not like to see outside brewers sending their products into the country, when the manufacturers who have been working here for many years could not do so. There was no use for a brewer to manufacture goods if he had no opportunity for disposing of them in the local market. Mr Slemin felt that it was not the intention of the Provincial Government to discourage industrial effort in the Province and to build up work across the line.

In conclusion Mr. Slemin said if a prohibition law were enacted ample compensation should be made to aid those engaged in the liquor business. He was followed by Mr. Smith of St. Thomas, who blamed the Methodist Church for trying to run the country or at least those engaged in the liquor traffic. He felt like the previous speaker, if the Government did prohibit the liquor traffic that it should give the losers by their legislation full compensation and do so by a Commission. If a law were placed on the Statutes it could not go further than the Scott Act, which had been repudiated.

Mr. Harry Line of London spoke in the interest of the cigar manufacturers, and declared that to enact a prohibitory law would not only disturb the conditions obtaining in the hotel business, but would also vitally affect kindred enterprises.

He was followed by Mr. Robinson, representing the coopers of the province. He argued that any legislation affecting the liquor dealers would throw thousands of people out of work and greatly disturb the labor conditions in the province.

LASHED BY JOHN L. SULLIVAN

Actor in Role of Uncle Tom Mercilessly Castigated by Aid in Play.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 23.—The Academy of music in the famous license city of Chelsea was crowded last night with an audience that saw the most remarkable performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on record. The excitement was due to the fact that John L. Sullivan, the former pugilist, made his initial appearance in this section of the country as Simon Legree.

Spurred on by the plaudits of the spectators Sullivan acted as none ever did before. At least, that is what the unfortunate man who played Uncle Tom declared after he had purchased a quantity of arnica and retired to a sequestered nook for the purpose of repairing personal damages.

With countless delicate touches, many of them unperceived by the audience, Sullivan worked up to a climax where Legree whips Uncle Tom to within an inch of his life.

Sullivan believes in holding the mirror partly up to nature, and he did it. He wound his ten-foot whip around the writhing form of Uncle Tom to such good purpose that the actor playing the part screamed in agony and finally fell fainting to the stage.

SAYS CARDINAL IS CONVERT

Dowie Claims a High Dignitary in the Roman Catholic Church.

Chicago, Jan. 25.—In his talk at the Auditorium yesterday John Alexander Dowie said he might soon be able to make an announcement that a cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church had decided to join "Zion."

"People were somewhat surprised," he said, "when they heard of the Booth-Clibborns joining Zion. They may be even more greatly surprised at no distant date to hear that a cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church has joined us. One of the cardinals is now wavering on the verge. He has almost made up his mind that Zion is the only true religion and at any hour abandon the faith of the earliest Christian Church.

"This cardinal is one equal in power in the pope's church to Cardinal Newman, who wrote 'Lead, Kindly Light,' and equal intellectually to Cardinal Manning. His name I cannot now divulge. Zion is the coming church of this world and the only right path to the next one."

Dowie devoted most of his talk to condemning all who disagreed with his statements that he was "Elijah the restorer," and predicted that he would win the suit his brother-in-law, Samuel Stevenson, had filed against him charging him with fraud and asking for a receiver for the Zion City lace industries.

THE COLONIAL FORCE AND AFRICAN WAR

How English Officers Have Played Into The Hands of the Boers

STRONG PLEA FOR THE COLONIES

How the Strathconas Were Deprived of the Horses — War Should Have Been Over Long Ago.

Capetown, Jan. 6—The African Review says that the Cape Colony Ministry holds the view that the Colonial forces could have expelled the Boer invaders unaided if permitted to go their own way about it, and it quotes the remarks of the premiers of Australia and New Zealand on the treatment of the Colonists by Englishmen. Mr. Barton said that his government was unable to offer troops to the War Office without a "substantial suggestion that they were wanted." and Mr. Seddon declared that New Zealanders must not be snubbed. "Colonial troops object to being separated into small units and robbed of the leading of their own officers; they object to being made stop-gaps and emergency corps; and who shall blame them? They hold that if they had been allowed to act independently of the imperial troops they would have finished the war before now. In this conviction we believe that they are fully justified."

The Review goes on to say that "as to Canada, after the monstrous scandal connected with Strathcona's Horse, it is wonderful that the Dominion should have been amiable and forgiving enough to do anything farther for us. Lord Strathcona's Horse was composed of the flower of Canada. Many of the troopers were the sons or grandsons of distinguished army men from the old country who settled in Canada a couple of generations ago. Others were the scions of some of the first families evolved in the process of making a nation yonder. All were men to whom being snubbed or treated as second-bests was quite a new experience. The Canadians — in common with the Australians, New Zealanders, Cape Colonists, and Natalians—were past masters in the art of rough-riding and in the science of how to keep their horses in health and condition on the veldt. What happened? Some buffle headed Jack-in-office, noticing the condition of the Canadian troopers' horses approvingly, actually ordered the troopers to 'swap them' with the worn out, ill used and ill cared for nags of some crack cavalry regiment of the imperial army! We have this tale on excellent authority, and we give it as a sample of a score or more similar tales which have come to our ears and caused our cheeks to tingle. Colonists have told us over and over again that, if we want to bring about imperial federation for defence, to say nothing of any larger schemes of imperial unity, we must adopt quite a different course of action and conduct in our dealings with the citizen soldiers who come to our aid in the hour of our need."

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Brussels, Jan. 24.—About the middle of October, the continental pro-Boer press circulated a sensational story about the fighting at Graspan, near Reitz, when British soldiers were said to have fired at Boers from behind women and children. Lord Kitchener some time ago denied this report.

The following is an authenticated account written by a British officer who took part in the fight, and reproduced here by the "European Express":—

About twenty minutes past twelve p.m., parties of Boers, who were at first taken for our own men, appeared. When it was realized who they were, the men formed up outside the circle of waggons and began firing. It was thought the Boers would not have fired on the wagons containing their own women and children, but they showed no hesitation in doing so. The long-range firing only lasted a short time, but while it was going on one woman and one child were wounded, and one child was killed. All these were shot by the Boers themselves.

Then they galloped the position from three sides, and seeing it was our only chance everyone was ordered to fall back on some Kaffir kraals. As we were in the act of doing so, one party of Boers was within 100 yards of us, some had dismounted, and some were still on their horses, but they were all firing indiscriminately among the packed wagons. I saw the women getting out of the wagons and running towards the Boers.

After we got back to the kraals it was impossible to see in detail everything that went on, but the Boers occupied the wagons, from behind which they kept up a continual fire. Most of the women were removed by them down the hill under cover, and a good number of wagons were also removed. Kaffirs were also employed to collect horses and cattle and to get the wagons away.

Lieutenant Mair, and three men who had stopped to help Captain Finlay, who was dangerously wounded while getting back on the kraals, were deliberately shot in cold blood with their hands up. Sworn evidence as to this has since been taken up by order of the Commander-in-Chief.

During the fight, the Boers also abused the white flag. Under cover of this they sent in a summons to surrender and when we ceased fire to let the bearer come in, they rushed men up to closer range and to more advantageous positions. They tried it a second time but we refused to receive it.

Of course the account in the cutting is an absolute invention, even down to the death of our guide. He is very much alive, though during the fight, he was sitting under a wall with a cartridge ready to shoot himself if we surrendered.

PECULIAR STATE OF A PRINCESS.

Vienna, Jan. 24.—From the Sanatorium of Oeswig, near Dresden, comes the report of the aggravation of the condition of Princess Louise of Coburg. The physicians say that she is suffering from partial brain paralysis, and that her condition is hopeless. The Princess' former craving for costly dresses has now changed to a passion for flowers. She talks to them as though they were human beings, giving each flower a special name.

AN ECCENTRIC BANKER.

Berlin, Jan. 24.—At a fancy dress ball at the Metropole Theatre, Herr von Bleichroeder a young member of the well known banking family having become rather excited, lighted a cigarette with a bank-note for 1,000 marks—$250. Count von Schonborn Buchheim, an Attache of the Austrian Embassy, made some remark about the young man's foolishness. High words were exchanged, and the two men came to blows. The police had to interfere, and separated them after some difficulty. Herr von Bleichroeder was found to be badly hurt on the eye. A duel will probably take place. Herr von Bleichroeder was formerly an officer of the reserve in the guards.

JOCKEY COMMITS SUICIDE.

Newmarket, Eng., Jan. 24.—Lew Warner, an American horseman, dies to-day, as the result of a self-inflicted shot wound. His suicide was due to his sufferings from pleurisy. William Duke brought Warner to England, and the latter subsequently joined Edward Corrigan's stable here.

AN UNCONFIRMED STORY.

Vienna, Jan. 24.—The Neue Freie Press to-day prints an unconfirmed story of an attempt to assassinate King George of Greece. According to the story, his Majesty was walking in the Park at Phaleron, when a man brandishing a knife, rushed upon him. A Park inspector jumped between was arrested. the and received a stab, intended for the King. The would-be assassin

BAD YEAR FOR SHIPPING.

London, Jan. 24.—A review of the British shipping for 1901, says:—The year in shipping was bad. Freights across the Atlantic were forced down to almost vanishing point. Small vessels and tramp steamers have been forced to stop running, and are now lying up in the harbors on both sides of the ocean. Large houses are doing their freight trade at a loss. How far this lowering of rates is the result of diminished trade, and how far it is promoted by the group of trans-Atlantic railway kings seeking to secure control of the ocean trade, yet remains to be seen. The purchase of the Leyland Line by the group of Americans working through Mr. Pierpont Morgan was the first step in a determined effort to conquer one trade. Many shares were bought up in the German-American lines, and offers were made for them. Attempts were also made to buy up one great English line. It is too early yet to say that these efforts have failed.

FRENCH CRUISER TO VENEZUELA

M. Secrestat Denied a Landing by The President.

OUTCOME MAY PROVE SERIOUS

France Sends Warships and Will Awe or Coerce the Naughty South American Republic.

Paris, Jan. 24.—There was the Fashoda incident in Africa; France was interested in that. Now the French are talking about the Secrestat incident in Venezuela. President Castro of that daring, but troublesome, hot-headed South American state known as Venezuela, has absolutely refused to allow M. Secrestat to land and take over his father's plantation, despite the repeated and vigorous protest of the French consul. This is an insult and a defiance to France. As a consequence, the French cruiser d'Estrees is now at Carupano, and, will probably awe Venezuela into making an apology, while other French warships will also be ordered to go to the coast of the South American republic.

In spite of the protests made by the French consul, President Castro has sustained the action of the Venezuelan authorities at La Guaira, who refused to permit M. Secrestat, jr., of Bordeaux to land, although the Government had previously assured the consul that the traveler might debark. It is held by the authorities that while the French line steamer, St. Laurent, on which M. Secrestat, Jr., was a passenger, was at Fort De France Island of Martinique, or at the Island of Trinidad, he conferred with General Matos, the revolutionary leader. The Consul made enquiries on the subject which established the fact that Gen. Matos was not at Martinique or at Trinidad when the St. Laurent touched at those islands, but was off the Venezuelan coast, on board the steamer Libertador.

It is claimed that this incident makes it necessary for the French Government to take the steps necessary to cause French citizens to be respected, and it is believed that the French cruisers Tage and Suchet, now at Fort De France, will receive orders to go to La Guaira.

Harrowing the Boers

The casual reader of war news should not missinterpret the events of the past fortnight. Three weeks ago the Ottawa Citizen pointed out that Gen. Kitchener had hemmed in the hot-bed of Boer resistances with blockhouses and had gone out from Pretoria to Belfast to inaugurate a general bucketing of the commandoes in the parallelogram of territory enclosed by the Delagoa Bay railway on the north, the Natal railway from Johannesburg to Laing's Neck on the south, the Portugese border on the east and a line of blockhouses from Brugspruit on the Delagoa Bay line to a point on the Natal railway on the west. That territory includes Ermelo, Bethel and Standerton, where the best fighting men among the Transvaalers hail from. Our contemporary said that important events might be anticipated, and they have, though the results to date have not been of a decisively successful character. Some wise armchair correspondence in London attribute this to renewed activity of the Boers. This is correct in a sense, but the renewed activity consists in the commandoes being chivied around that parallelogram by Kitchener's columns like rodents in a rat pit, and quite naturally they are putting up a nasty fight. Our old friend, De Wet, has been poked up out of his seclusion and first made a rush towards Helibron where he encountered Wilson's column and was beaten off; then he moved in the direction of Lindley and was met by three converging columns and roughly handled by Gen. Dartnell; next he turned northward and the same night jumped onto those Yeomanry and cleaned up the outfit. It was three failures to one success. In the same manner a number of commandoes have been harried with varying results, and unless they succeed in breaking through the blockhouse cordon they will be unable to maintain their strenuous activity long. If Kitchener can continue forcing them as he has been doing, even though he Boers score isolated successes, the attrition will be rapid. It is a big section of country, about 10,000 square miles, but if the British columns continue to stimulate the Boer "activity" they will soon tire them out in spite of occasional reverses.

MADE A CHINESE VICEROY

Sir Robert Hart Rewarded for Efforts in Behalf of Peace.

Tacoma, Wash, Jan. 23.—The Empress Dowager and the Chinese government have at last given evidence that they appreciate the efforts of Sir Robert Hart, Inspector-General of the Chinese imperial maritime customs, toward peace during the "boxer" outbreak of 1900. A Chinese decree, dated Dec. 11, appoints him to the brevet rank of the junior guardian of the heir apparent, specifying that this honor is conferred in recognition of valuable assistance and advice given by him during the peace negotiations.

This appointment gives Sir Robert the rank of Viceroy and will greatly increase his power and influence among natives throughout China. For the first time in years all newspapers published in treaty ports unite in commending the Empress and the government for their action.

THE TRENT WATER CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION

A Large Number of Power Users Attended the Meeting Yesterday Afternoon

OFFICERS ELECTED FOR THE ENSUING YEAR

Constitution and By-Laws of the the Association Adopted—Government to be Asked to Control Dams

A meeting of those interested in the water power on the Trent Valley waterways were held in the Town Council Chamber yesterday afternoon. Mr. Kilbourn of Young's Point, occupied the chair. Mr. A. Stevenson preformed the duties of Secretary. Among those present were,—Messrs D. Gilmour, Trenton; Fowlds, Hastings; Sadler, Fenelon Falls Walters, Lindsay; and Messrs. Hall, Shook, Scott, McDonald, Deane, Ferguson, Hilliard, R.R. Hall Henderson, Carnagie, Curran and R. B. Rogers.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

Mr. Kilbourn stated that since the last meeting he had written to Hon. Latchford, Provincial Minister of Public Works stating that a movement had been inaugurated relating to the damming back of the waters in the Lakes north of us and that the association was anxious for the Government to take action concerning the storage of water for water-power. He had received no reply but expected in a few days that he would hear from the department. Mr. Gilmour presented a largely signed petition to be forwarded to Hon. A. G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals asking the Department to take over the dams on the Trent Valley Water System and to control them so that a better and more regular flow of water could be obtained.

The first business taken up was to consider the by-laws of the association as drafted by Mr. R. R. Hall. After some discussion and by-laws of the association were decided on.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF THE TRENT WATER CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION.

Whereas it is deemed expedient to form an Association of parties interested in the waters of the Trent Canal System for the purpose of preserving a more regular and higher minimum flow in the Rivers and Lakes forming a part of the Trent Canal System.

Now therefore be it resolved and it is hereby resolved that the following constitution and By-laws be adopted.

NAME

This Association shall be known as The Trent Water Conservation Association.

OBJECTS.

The Object of this Association shall be to preserve a higher level of water in the various Lakes and Rivers forming a part of the Trent Canal System and Lakes and Rivers flowing into the same and to preserve a higher and more regular uniform flow of water in the several Rivers forming a part of the Trent Canal System and for such purpose to petition the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario and to send deputations to interview them or either of them from time to time as the Association sees fit, and to promote the objects of the Association by such further and other means from time as they may deem expedient.

MEMBERS.

Any person interested in Navigation, Lumbering, Manufacturing, Waterpower, Transportation and trade and commerce shall be eligible to be a member of this Association.

Any person who is eligible to become a member of this Association may become one by paying an annual fee of $2.00 and upon receiving a majority of the votes present at any General Meeting of the Association,

OFFICERS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

The Officers of the Association shall consist of an honorary President a President, two Vice-Presidents and Secretary to be nominated and appointed yearly by the Association and shall hold office until their successors are appointed.

EXECUTIVE.

The affairs of the Association shall be managed by an Executive of three in number of whom the officers of the Association shall be ex officio members and such Executive shall be nominated or appointed yearly and shall hold office until their successors are appointed. In case of the death or resignation of any officer or member of the members of the Association the vacancy thereby created may be filled for the unexpired portion of the term by the Executive from among the members of the Association.

FUNDS OF ASSOCIATION.

The funds of the Association shall be kept in the name of the Association in a Chartered Bank to be selected by the Executive and all cheques, drafts or orders for the payment of money shall be signed by the Secretary and counter signed by either the President or one of the Vice-Presidents.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held on the third Wednesday of January in each year hereafter at Peterborough.

A general meeting of the Association may be called at any time by the President by a Circular letter upon giving one week's notice or a general meeting of the Association may, be called by any three members of the Association in case the President refuses to call such meeting by giving like notice.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The constitution and By-laws having been approved the election of officers was proceed with and resulted as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Hon. Geo. A. Cox.
Pres.—D. Gilmour, Trenton.
1st. Vice. Pres.—Mr. Kilbourn.
2nd. Vice Pres.—T. Sadler, Lindsay.
Sec. Treas.—A. Stevenson.
Executive Committee.—Messrs. Kendry Shook and R. R. Hall.

Mr. Gilmour, in a neatly worded address thanked them for the honor they had bestowed on him in electing him to the office of President of this Association. He said he had come to town to-day and had visited the works of the Cereal Company and thought the town should be proud of having such an establishment here.

Trenton was followed in the same track as Peterborough and was getting in some large industries. The question of water power was one which was most important to all manufacturers and in his capacity as President of the Trent Valley Water Conservation Association he would do all in his power to assist the other members of the Association to induce the Government to take over the control of our six dams and to have new ones built so that the large reservoirs afforded by lakes in the northern part of the Trent Valley Water route could be utilized at a time of the year when water was low. He pointed out on a map where the height of land lay that divided the water courses to the Georgian Bay and to the Trent Valley Water System. He said if these waters were properly regulated that spruce and other woods which are shipped to the United States to be manufactured could be brought this way and manufactured in Canada.

Mr. Carnagie said that the information given by Mr. Gilmour was most beneficial and interesting. He thought it should be a source of pleasure to all to know that our chain of water ways extended so far to the north and west and was of the opinion that the Dominion and Provincial Governments should be urged to take up the matter and build dams where needed.

Mr. Deane moved, seconded by Mr. Carnagie, that this Association would recommend the appointment of one commissioner, satisfactory to both Governments to take charge of the entire stretch of water in this system.—Carried.

Mr. Walters, who has charge of the slides etc., in the northern part of this water system, said that in the lakes and rivers in his section there were altogether 8 dams and that three men were engaged the entire year to regulate the waters in that section.

A new reserve dam will be built on Nogeys creek this year and repairs made to others. These dams were all controlled by the Ontario Government.

Mr. Carnagie moved, seconded by Mayor Deane, that whereas this Association have heard read the petition of the Trenton Electric Works Co., and others to be presented to the Hon. A. G. Blair praying that the dams at the outlet of Hollow Lake, Raven Lake and Wren Lake may be acquired by the Dominion Government and operated by the department of Railways and Canals and whereas it is in the interests of a large number of people interested in navigation, lumbering, manufacturing, and farming from Hollow Lake to Trenton that the prayer of such petition be granted, now therefore it is resolved that this Association unanimously and heartily approve of the objects to be attained by the granting of this petition and that this Association send a deputation to Ottawa to urge upon the Government the importance of assuming control of these several dams.—Carried.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Town and the Farm

This great family journal was taken to task the other day by a subscriber who lives in the country. He objected to a paragraph which appeared in the paper in which the writer eulogized the city youth. The item did not reflect the opinion of the paper. So far as this g.i.j. is concerned we believe that the home grown, hand spanked, barefooted hard-fisted country boy makes a much better fight in the battle of life than the pampered, high collared, creased trousers youth of our cities, whose clothes have always been dusted with a whisk broom instead of a shingle. Let the town man out of a job try a year on the farm. Plowing behind a mule will take the kink out of his topnot, the frog out of his throat, the gas off his stomach, the weakness out of his legs, the corns off his toes, and will give him an appetite, an honest living and a sight of heaven. These, now, in the language of Artemus Ward, them's our sentiments.

INDIAN WOMAN'S WALK

Mrs. Muskrat Set Out for Hiawatha on Foot on Wednesday Night

Mrs. Muskrat, an Indian woman from Hiawatha came to town on the evening train from Lindsay, on Wednesday evening. She started to walk to her home in Hiawatha through the snow after the heavy storm. She got to the Crowley settlement in Otonabee, about four miles from town, where she was in for the night. Next afternoon she resumed her journey on foot.

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 25, 1902

"Shadowed" in Paris.

WHEN a literary fish of any importance is taken nowadays one may be sure that a good many editors and publishers have been dangling their well-baited books before its nose. For two years or more Captain Dreyfus has had offers for what he might ultimately choose to publish. The business of offering advances and royalties to authors is not usually attended with a great amount of personal danger. But there is an American woman, a journalist, living in Paris, who could tell a different tale, says the "Saturday Evening Post." Two summers ago, just as the great trial was drawing to its close, she was in London, and there met an enterprising "American" publisher. Conversation turned, as did all conversation that summer, in either England or France, upon Dreyfus, and the publisher confided to the lady his desire to publish something veritably from the pen of Dreyfus. The lady, it happened, was on terms of some intimacy with the inner circle of Dreyfus' friends, and when she left England for Paris she was commissioned to do what she could to get something for the publisher, either from Captain or Madame Dreyfus.

Two days after she left London a man approached the publisher with the positive assurance that he could arrange the whole affair within a fortnight. (In parenthesis it may be said that such men were not uncommon that summer.) The publisher, remembering the proverb concerning a bird in the hand, rushed to the nearest telegraph office and sent a message to the lady in Paris as follows:

"Suspend Dreyfus negotiations for the present. Will write."

The telegram was delivered, but almost simultaneously the lady was waited upon by a polite representative of the police department, with a demand for an explanation. What negotiations was she carrying on and with whom? She told her story and felt that it was received with the blandest incredulity. She promised to show the police the letter from London when it came, and reminded her visitor of her "American" citizenship. The official departed. Unfortunately, the press of business sent the publisher scurrying toward Scotland, and he, not realizing how important it was, neglected to write to the lady in Paris.

She soon discovered that she was being "shadowed," and that her every movement was being watched by mysterious people. At first she laughed, and merely sent a little note of enquiry to London. No answer came, and the watching continued. Her nerves began to give way, and finally she went to the United States ambassador with the whole story. The shadowing ceased. It would be interesting to know by just what diplomatic processes this incident was arranged.

JUST WHAT WE WANT.

We ask the privilege of having one trial in the way of supplying your needs in goods that first-class druggists handle, or the filling of your doctors' prescriptions. Our endeavors to please you and the satisfactory way in which you will be served will make you a permanent customer.

WE CALL YOUR ATTENTION to our large stock of Paine's Celery Compound, the most popular family medicine of the day. Thousands of testimonials from the best people of Canada are sufficient proofs of its virtues for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, blood diseases, liver complaint, kidney diseases and all nervous troubles. Every bottle sold is warranted. [illegible], druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

OUR CONSTANT AIM IS TO SERVE OUR PATRONS THORUGHLY AND WELL.

Kindly favor us with a visit at your earliest convenience, so as to assure yourself that we serve the public thoroughly and well. Our dispensing department is under the most competent management, insuring perfect safety in the preparation of prescriptions. Our drugs, medicines and tinctures are the purest and our general stock suited to the wants of the most critical.

YOU NEED THE BEST.

If you are rheumatic, neuralgic, dyspeptic, nervous, weak or run down, you need the best medicine that medical science can suggest. We strongly recommend Paine's Celery Compound for your troubles. It has cured others afflicted as you are; it cannot fail in your case. We sell the kind that makes sick people well. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

Curious Bits of News.

Scotland for many years held the record for the highest mill chimney in the world, but now the Silver Works Company, at Antwerp, has beaten that record with a shaft 410 feet high, surmounted by a lightning conductor 60 feet high.

An examination of the ravages due to tuberculosis shows that England, with a damp and foggy climate, only loses 50,000 consumptives per annum, while in France, with a much healthier climate, the victims, on an equal population, are annually 150,000.

The flags to be hoisted at one time in signaling at sea never exceed four. It is an interesting arithmetical fact that with eighteen various colored flags, and never more than four at a time, no fewer than seventy-eight thousand six hundred and forty-two signals can be given.

In the recent heat wave in Rome four swimmers made up a party at eleven o'clock in the morning and proceeded to take their breakfast in the Tiber. They appeared on the river bank carrying a table loaded with dainties, pushed off, and had their meal without returning to the bank, and, what is more surprising, without touching the bottom.

A singular deed has been filed in Northumberland County, Pa. It is dated October 9, 1792. In a series of whereases it traces the ownership of the land conveyed from the Creator of the earth, who, "by parole and livery of seizin did enfeoff the parents of mankind, to wit, Adam and Eve, of all that certain tract of land called and known in the planetary system as the earth."

Berlin is in possession of a shorthand writer with a unique specialty. He attends all funerals of prominent persons and takes down verbatim the addresses of the officiating clergymen. Then he prepares highly ornamented copies of the addresses and sells them to the friends of the eulogized dead. His business is so good that he has found it necessary to engage a staff of assistants.

of our people are now using Paine's Celery Compound the great health restorer. No other medicine in the world has such a record of cures to its credit. It makes new, flesh blood, corrects digestion, gives energy to body, nerves and brain. If you feel unwell, give Paine's Celery Compound a trial.

John Nugent, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

The "Mexican Herald" tells of an exciting scene witnessed in the Romita ring during a bull fight on bicycles. Two of the chulos placed the banderillos, or short stabbing sticks, into the neck of the bulls. When the second bull entered the ring, Jose Basurto, manoeuvring his bicycle cleverly, placed the sticks with great daring, while his comrade coolly sat on his wheel, which was propped to stand upright in the center of the ring. Luckily, the bull paid no attention to him.

In Lower California there is a colony of outlaws, including some of the most noted escaped criminals who operated during the latter half of the nineteenth century. They live in a strange, rugged stretch of country, with the Gulf of California on one side and a range of foothills which spread down toward the Mexican border on the other. There are no ports at this point on the coast of California, and no railroads reaching in from the other direction, so the men are pretty well isolated. They are practically prisoners, but as they do no harm nobody has troubled to interfere with them.

Arrangements are being made by a Mr. Robinson of New York for a round-the-world trip on a motor car. It is proposed that the tour shall start from Calais about May, 1902. Moscow will be taken in via Paris and Berlin. Thence the route will follow the great Siberian Railway to Vladivostock, when ship will be taken to Japan. This interesting country will be traversed and the party will re-ship to America. No difficulty is anticipated in crossing the American Continent, though up to the present no one has accomplished the feat. At New York passage will be taken for Liverpool; from there the run will be to Dover, when the tour will conclude.

"Fifty casks of a special design and the strongest possible construction," says the "Youth's Companion," will soon be sent to Behring Sea by the United States Revenue Marine Service, and placed upon the highest hummocks of the floe ice. It is hoped by tracing their future course to test the direction of the currents that cross the polar regions. The casks are twenty-eight inches long and sixteen inches in diameter, pointed at the ends and painted black, so as to be seen easily. Inside of each are directions printed in several different languages, asking the finder to write to the nearest United States consul, giving the latitude and longitude in which the cask was found, and the date."

Training

is indispensable to athletic success. In training, much stress is laid upon diet; careful attention to the quantity and quality of the food eaten, with regularity of meals. That is the secret of strength for every man. No man can be stronger than his stomach. The careless and irregular eating, of business men, causes disease of the stomach and its allied organs of digestion and nutrition. There can be no sound health until these diseases are cured.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, and enables the body to be built up into vigorous health by the assimilation of the nutrition extracted from food.

"I was taken with the grippe, which resulted in heart and stomach trouble," writes Mr. T. R. Caudill, of Montland, Alleghany Co., N. C. "I was unable to do anything a good part of the time. I wrote to Dr. Pierce about my condition, having full confidence in his medicine. He advised me to take his 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which I did. Before I had finished the second bottle I began to feel better. I have used nearly six bottles. I feel thankful to God for the benefit I have received from Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I can highly recommend it to all persons as a good and safe medicine."

WATER COMMISSIONERS

Names of Several Prominent Citizens Mentioned for the Position

On Monday next the ratepayers will be called upon to nominate two candidates for the position of water commissioner. There are a number of names mentioned in this connection, amongst whom are Mr. W. H. Moore, Dr. Boucher, Ald. Mash, Harry Winch, T. E. Bradburn, T. F. Matthews, R. B. McKee and others. These are all good men, and it would be difficult to choose two from amongst them. However, The Times is to the first choice. He is an old and to the first choice. He is an old and esteemed citizen, has a large stake in the town, and would be sure to safely guard well the interests of the ratepayers. It is just such gentlemen as he who ought to be selected.

Mr. Harry Winch is another whose claims are strong. He is well qualified in every way, and we think the ratepayers would make no mistake in selecting him. Dr. Boucher is equally acceptable and has had experience on the board of directors of the Water Company. The Doctor is in favor of proceeding slowly in extending the mains—that is, he would not extend unless a revenue sufficient to pay was assured.

Mr. Bradburn, Mr. Matthews and the others are also well qualified, and, it seems to us, there will be no fear of the future with such splendid material to choose from.

A Common Sort of Bore.

"If no better reason can be found, a decent consideration for the comfort of others should prevent one's talking of ailments," says Dr. John K. Mitchell in "Harper's Bazar." "Besides being bad manners, the subject is wholly without interest for any but the speaker; the hearer only listens more or less perfunctorily in hopes presently to seize the chance of telling her own melancholy condition. Besides, to talk of ills, mental or bodily, helps to fix them in the mind, to intensify them—and is all too apt to suggest the exaggeration of them in order to make a good round tale. Moreover, if you talk about them too much or too often, even the long-suffering physician may grow tired of being battered with symptoms whose catalogue he has heard recited a hundred times over, and thus the very means taken to impress them will bring about its own defeat. Still more determined, if you are nervous yourself, should be your stand against letting others talk of their ills to you. Even the healthy cannot stand the continual presentation of disease to them without liability to imaginary invalidism thereafter."

"Thought it meant death sure."—Mrs. James McKim, of Dunnville, Ont., says of her almost miraculous cure from heart disease by Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart: "Until I began taking this remedy I despaired of my life. I had heart failure and extreme prostration. One dose gave me quick relief and one bottle cured me. The sufferings of years were dispelled like magic."—9

"Do not— oh, do not pity me!" she cried in husky, choked accents; "it—it is more than I can bear!"

"Can you ask me to stand before you as you are now, and not pity you?" Ormande asked almost fiercely. "Katharine, it is impossible! When I think of what you were to me only a few days ago— what I deemed you to be— my heart fails me with sorrow and dismay!" He passed his hand over his brow. "Katharine," he went on after a slight pause, "I speak to you now, not as your friend or your lover, but as your clergyman. You are living a sinful life, you are wronging Heaven and yourself, and I cannot stand by and suffer you to do this without protesting, urging, pleading to you to renounce your sin, to repent and return to the place you once held. I do not ask your reasons for this strange, incomprehensibly strange, conduct. Doubtless you are satisfied yourself; but I do entreat you to listen to my warning voice, and to save your soul ere it be too late!"

Katharine neither spoke nor moved for a moment; in that time she seemed to pass through the bitterness of death itself. Oh, for freedom to cry aloud the truth, to say: "Cease, you wrong me; I am his wife!" to justify herself in his eyes, but she could not do this. Gordon's threat was before her, staring at her which ever way she might turn, and though he was still ill though he had gone almost to the last gasp during the past week, he was now himself again as far as brain power went, and Katharine, nervous and unstrung, feared to turn at every sound lest some secret emissary had gone forth to harm or maim her dear love. Had any other creature in this matter-of-fact nineteenth century sworn such a vow of murderous revenge, she would not have regarded it as otherwise than absurd; but Gordon was so different, to her it seemed as though he were in league with the evil one himself, he was so horribly, indescribably steeped in wickedness.

Ormande read the conflicting emotion on her face, and his heart leaped at the sight.

Bending forward eagerly he continued his pleading, so lost himself in his task, the light flashed in his eye, the color rose to his cheeks, his intensity of anxiety moved her almost to tears, but she remained motionless through it all. At the end she was silent, not a sound passed her lips save a deep broken sigh.

Ormande watched her breathlessly. Had he won the day? He was almost too excited to breathe.

Katharine aroused herself. She must answer him, and without delay.

"I thank you, Lord Otway," she began, steeling her voice till it was as cold as ice; "I thank you for the undoubted interest that you have always shown in my welfare. Believe me, I—I should be only too glad to respond to your urgings now, but"—her voice broke only for a moment—"but it is— is impossible. Mr. Smythe is ill, and needs me. Please let me pass. It is growing late."

"Katharine!"— there was a wildness in the cry— "Katharine! hear me, only hear me! I—I love you so much that I cannot, I dare not let this sin rest on your soul. Will—will you not show me a gleam of that better, nobler nature you possess? Leave this man; your place is not by his side, his wife comes first. No matter what affection you may have for him, there is always duty. Send for his wife, dear Katharine, and then you will have proved yourself to be the sweet-hearted woman I have always thought you. Come from out the shadow of sin. Katharine, only promise me this, and I shall be content!"

He paused breathlessly; but one glance at her face told him he had failed.

"I regret," the poor girl said, with all the firmness she could muster, "I regret that I cannot agree to your demand. This— this interview is very painful to me, Lord Otway; you will forgive me for not prolonging it," she gathered herself together and moved to the door; once there she turned her face, quivering with emotion. "Do not judge me too harshly," she said, in an agony of sorrow; "perhaps, some day, you will see my actions in a different light, and—and know me as I really am; but should that never be, I must be content, remembering that you cared sufficiently for my future life as to speak so openly as you have just done. I—I thank you; from my heart I thank you, I——"

She faltered, and then her voice broke altogether, and with a sob she moved to the door, and passed slowly out.

"Katharine!" Ormande stretched his hands toward her retreating form. "Katharine!"

Love, deep anguish stricken love, welled up in his heart again and mingled in his cry of entreaty, but if the girl heard it she took no heed, and the next moment he caught the sound of her voice speaking to the matron as calmly as though nothing had happened to distress or upset her. With a groan his arms fell to his side heavily, and his head sank on his breast.

"She has rejected my aid," he said, sorrowfully, to himself, as he sat by the table and buried his face in his hands. "She will not listen to my words. What can I do? What can I do? Sooner, far sooner would I see you dead and in your grave, than have listened to you as you spoke to-day. Oh, Katharine, Katharine! my dear, my only love! lost to me forever and ever! Our paths must lie far apart in this world, my darling —there is a gulf between us that can never be bridged over—alas, that it should be so, but you have chosen your path and will tread it to its sorrowful, miserable end, while I—I, who would lay down my life for you —must learn from now to drag your memory from my heart, and to forget you altogether —yes, altogether!"

When Lord Otway reached his quiet home that night he found a letter awaiting him. It was from Mr. Montrose, and was written in haste.

"Old Dalrymple died last night," it said, "and I find that he has left every farthing of his money to the children of his sister, Robert Brereton's wife; so my good offices [illegible] she declared. "Alas! the pain no better at all?"

Katharine rested quietly for a moment or two, then she smiled at the girl, her own, sweet smile.

"Yes, it is better," she said slowly; "it is better now, Patty." Then, as if to herself, she said: "The—the worst is over—I will struggle no more."

"There's a note, miss, for you on the tray; it was given me by one of the strange gentleman's valets as I come along."

Once alone, Katharine tore open the note.

"Meet me in the coppice at twelve sharp; do not fail to come. You must make any excuse you think fit, but I shall expect you. If you don't come you will not be surprised at anything that may happen. G. S."

Katharine tore the note into atoms, paused only a moment, then ate some breakfast in a set mechanical fashion, and then rose and performed her toilet in the same way. Her face was very pale, but she looked what she really was, much stronger, and there was a strange air of determination about her that almost savored of dogged sullenness.

"For his sake! his sake!" she murmured every now and then to herself, as she coiled up the masses of her hair, and robed herself in one of her simple, pretty morning frocks. "Come what may, I must be brave; I must forget myself for his sake!"

Her very desperation gave her new strength; she would not, dared not, let herself think of the future; it was the present that filled all her thoughts. Gordon's fierce, evil face haunted her, his threats bore double weight while he was under the same roof as Lord Otway.

"What use in moaning and wailing," she said bitterly to herself, as she sat down for one moment to rest from the fatigue of dressing. "I am face to face with the most hideous problem that ever came to mortal woman. He is sure of me; he knows his power. For myself I have no fear, no apprehension; it is through Ormande he strikes me." She shivered slightly. "His words are no idle boast. Have I not witnessed myself how horrible he can be in his wickedness and cruelty? Were I disposed to cavil and set him at defiance, a hundredfold, I have but to remember Craven Adair's fate, and I should be brought to my senses."

Barbara was chatting with a number of people in the hall as the girl came down.

"Ah, Miss Brereton, you are better; that is good. I don't want any one to be ill on my birthday. You are looking very pale, why not go into the air? It will be much better for than sitting in the house. I see you have your hat."

Barbara had gone back to the frank, semi-affectionate tone she had adopted to win her way with Katharine. She threw an extra little warmth into it now, as she wished to patronize the girl before the assembled guests.

"That girl is simply too beautiful for words," was Lady Clara Lennox's remark as Katharine vanished.

And Barbara, hearing this, gazed after the tall, graceful figure with venomous jealousy rankling in her breast; but her frown soon changed into a smile as she noted which way Katharine had gone.

"Patience," she murmured to herself. "Patience; my time is coming!"

Katharine walked through the August sunshine as pale as a statue, and almost as cold in her heart as though she had indeed been made of stone. Her feet moved mechanically away from the lawns, where all was bustle and confusion preparing for the arrival of the villagers in the afternoon, and all their festivities.

She neither asked nor puzzled herself as to what Gordon required of her now. The fact remained that he did want her, and she was obeying him for Ormande's sake. What was there on earth she would not have done for him?

The coppice reached, Katharine stood and looked about for Gordon. There were no signs of him at first, but after a time she felt the scent of his cigar steal on the summer air, and in a moment he had sauntered around a corner and was beside her.

"Punctual, to the minute, Kattie," he said, with his most approved sneer. "See what it is to be so attractive; you fly to obey my smallest word."

"You have sent for me! What do you want?"

Katharine's voice was as hard and as cold as her face had grown.

Gordon smoked on in silence for a moment.

"I leave here to-morrow morning early! You must accompany me!" was his abrupt reply.

Katharine shuddered, and her two hands met together convulsively. She was utterly unable to speak for an instant.

"I hope that plan will not inconvenience you, Kattie!"

She resisted the sudden inclination to strike him across his smooth, smiling face; her nerves were strung up to their highest pitch.

"Your hour?" she said, in low, husky tones, still clasping her hands.

Gordon gave himself up for a moment to the enjoyment of his cigar, the sneering smile lingering on his lips.

"Really, this is quite pleasant. Ah! I can foresee a most delightful existence with you, my dear Kattie; the dearest and most obedient wife in the world."

"Your hour?" she broke in, fiercely. "Tell me——"

She had leaned against a tree; there was not a particle of color in her cheeks.

Gordon laughed softly, and was about to make some remark when suddenly he threw away his half-smoked cigar, and, with one stride, was close beside her.

PROGRESS AND SUCCESS.

Progress and success have been our business record up to the present time. No need to enlarge on our dispensing facilities; this department is run on the most approved system; promptness and accuracy mark all our work.

We are daily renewing and assorting our stock of Perfumes, Atomizers, Sponges, Brushes, Combs and Toilet goods.

THE PUBLIC VERDICT.

The public verdict is immensely in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great family medicine of the present day and never fails to do what it promises. Paine's Celery Compound will permanently cure kidney disease, liver complaint, ills resulting from impure blood, dyspepsia and stomach derangements. We sell the kind that cures. R. S. MACDONALD, Peterborough, Ont.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"Cure or No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

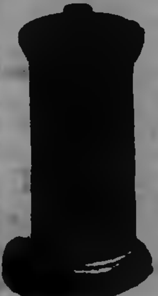
THE Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau,
Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat! The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion— why! The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 40 by 30 feet, with 18 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Our New Book on Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

A Pathetic Letter

The following note, slightly soiled and bearing quite conspicuously the tear stains, was picked up near one of the Central school buildings the other day, and tells its own tale of stern devotion to duty on one hand and unmitigated anguish on the other: "Friend Ray,—I will write you a little note this evening to tell you that I have decided not to keep regular company with any boy while I am in school, for I must make use of my school time while I can; and besides, I have no desire to go with one boy all the time, anyway. So you needn't come any more at present, but we can still be friends, and I expect you can find someone you like better anyway, and so can I. You needn't answer this. Your everlasting friend."

—What do you want for 30 cents? Go to Kidd's and get it, 353 George st.

Garlick, Water street, will be pleased to learn that the operation which she underwent yesterday afternoon at St. Joseph's Hospital, was successfully performed, and she is doing as well as can be expected. The operation was performed by Dr. Halliday, assisted by Dr. Grey.

A STRAIGHT SHOT

Brought About By Accident

A lady who accidentally began eating Grape-Nuts and quickly discovered the strength that she gained, feels disposed to write regarding the food.

She says: "Grape-Nuts has done so much for me. When I came out of school I was broken down in health from overwork and nervousness. Every summer, during the hot weather I have been practically exhausted and generally have lost five pounds or over. Quite by accident I began using Grape-Nuts and though I liked it very much at first but the taste grew on me so much that I am extravagantly fond of it. I ate it all last summer and was surprised to find that I kept up with plenty of strength, my nerve force increased, and I lost no flesh.

I know exactly what has sustained me for I have made no change in my way of living except to take on Grape-Nuts. I never tire of it. I always use it with cold cream in summer and warm cream in winter. This is a straightforward, honest letter, and I trust it will be of service to you." Lucy J. Rowen, Cedar Falls, Ia.

OPENING POSTPONED

The New Chemong Public Hall to be Opened February 3rd.

The new Council Chamber and Public school, erected by the Dominion Government at Chemong, was to have been formally opened on Thursday last by Mr. J. H. McClellan. On account of the snow storm the opening has been postponed until Monday, Feb. 3.

A large number of Indians from all parts of the Province arrived here on Thursday, intending to drive out to Chemong, but found it impossible to do so, and returned home.

Pill Sense.—It stands to reason that Dr. Agnew's Little Liver Pills will crowd out of the market many of the nauseous old-timers. A better medicine at less than half the price is all the argument needed to keep the demand what it has been—phenomenal. 40 doses 10 cents. They cure Sick Headache, Biliousness, and allay all stomach irritations.—5

POLICE COURT NEWS

The Chief is evidently determined to enforce the snow by-law and yesterday Wm. McColl, a blacksmith on George street was up before the Magistrate for not shovelling the snow from in front of his premises. He was not fined, the Magistrate held that Mr McColl did not intend to violate the law.

An employee of the Canadian General Electric Co. was fined $2 and costs for assaulting his foreman.

A few days ago two aged inmates in the Peterborough Protestant Home had a difference of opinion and their tempers getting up the old men came to blows and as a result Robert Redman charged George Weddon with assault. The case was heard by the Magistrate yesterday and after listening to part of the evidence he endeavored to effect a settlement between the two, but Redman declared he could not live in the same house with Weddon. The Magistrate pointed out to them that they were causing considerable trouble to those caring for them and advised them to return to the home and live quietly. Redman is still dissatisfied and declares he will leave the institution. He may after giving the matter careful consideration, decide to stay where he is.

Paine's Celery Compound

PROVES ITS VALUE BY CURES EFFECTED IN CANADA

NO FOREIGN OR DOUBTFUL TESTIMONIALS ARE USED TO INFLUENCE THE SICK

The cures effected by Paine's Celery Compound are wonderful and startling and of such a nature as to attract the most widespread attention. The straightforward, honest facts, published from time to time come direct from our own Canadian men and women, who can easily be interviewed about their restoration to health. No doubtful, foreign or manufactured letters are used to catch the sick and suffering. Mr. R. Morris, Brockville, Ont., tells of his blessed experience with Paine's Celery Compound as follows:

"Having suffered with neuralgia in the head for two years, I tested the skill of doctors and made use of many kinds of medicines, as well as the electric battery, but got no relief from any of these sources. I decided to give Paine's Celery Compound a trial, as I noticed by the press it was highly recommended for my troubles. I used several bottles and it cured the neuralgia as well as the dyspepsia from which I suffered. I recommend Paine's Celery Compound to anyone suffering as I did with terrible neuralgia and dyspepsia. I trust you may insert this letter in the press so that others may be benefited."

A GENEROUS GIFT

Messrs Richard Hall and C. McGill Give $7,000 to the Nicholls Hospital

The annual meeting of the Nicholls Hospital board was held in the Town Clerk's office on Thursday. The reports of the past year were presented and adopted. A special feature of the meeting was the announcement that Mr. Richard Hall and Mr. Chas. McGill had presented the sum of $7000 to the Hospital fund.

The expenditure of the past year has been very heavy owing to the large number of patients in the Hospital. The donation assumes the character of a public benefit as the Town is not asked to pay anything toward the maintenance of the institution. The year 1902 is entered upon with $462 to the good.

The motion met with approval.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The election of officers resulted as follows,—

Chairman—Mr. Richard Hall.
Hon. Sec.—Mr. W. H. Hill.
Sec.-Treasurer—Mr. J. Crane.
Finance Committee—Messrs. W. H. Hill, A. P. Poussette, W. Madill, C. McGill and Mayor Denne.
Property Committee—Messrs. W. Aldridge, John McClelland, W. Madill, Thomas Morrow and Mayor Denne.
Supply Committee—Messrs. John McClelland, Wm. Madill, W. Aldridge, Hugh Waddell and W. H. Hill.
Visiting Committee—January and July—Messrs. W. H. Hill and Mayor Denne.
February and August—Messrs. A. P. Poussette and John McClelland.
March and September—Messrs. W. Aldridge and H. Waddell.
April and October—Messrs. Richard Hall and Thomas Morrow.
May and November—Messrs. C. McGill and W. Hill.
June and December—Mr. Jas. Stevenson.

The business concluded, the meeting adjourned.

Sabbath School Entertainment

The Sabbath School of St Paul's Church gave a most enjoyable entertainment in the school room last night. A varied programme of music, dialogues, etc., in which the boys and girls acquitted themselves creditably was given to a fairly large and thoroughly appreciative audience. Aside from the social enjoyment these gatherings afford, they are a direct benefit to the school, acting as an incitement to new and energetic effort on the part of the pupils, collectively and individually.

PETERBOROUGH WON

From Port Hope Last Night by a Score of 5 to 2—Exciting Game

The Charlotte street rink was the scene of one of the fastest and most closely contested matches ever played in town. The Intermediate team played the Ontarios of Port Hope in the O.H.A. championships series and defeated them by a score of 5 goals to 2. At half-time the score stood 2—1 in favour of the Ontarios, and at that time it looked as though they were winners. The second half of the game was the fastest and the Intermediates were determined to win. The puck was taken into close range of the Ontario's goal a number of times but they could not score. The checking was splendid. Both teams were well up in the art of stick handling and being fast skaters kept the puck going all the time. The teams lined up as follows:

INTERMEDIATES

Goal,—Wasson.
Point,—Glover.
Cover Point,—Armstrong.
Forwards,—Wittcroft, Morgan, Armstrong, Graham.

ONTARIO'S.

Goal,—Mercer.
Point,—Bourne.
Cover Point,—Brown.
Forwards—McMillan, Bunny, Colman (Capt.), Lawrenson.

The Intermediates goal was guarded by Wasson, the veteran goalkeeper of the Peterborough's whose work has always been admired.

Rolly Glover at Cover Point played a star game. The fact that the score was kept down so well is largely due to his excellent playing.

In the players on the forward line and the cover point we cannot decide who played the best game. The work of these players was excellent and it would be difficult to find other men to take their place.

The Port Hope team were well supported by their defence. Their forward line was very aggressive and made many determined rushes on the Intermediates goal but they did not always count on the defence at that point.

The Port Hope players indulged in considerable rough play and in a number of occasions one would be sent to the fence.

The referee did his work very well and gave very good satisfaction.

The attendance at the rink was about the largest that ever witnessed a match. It is estimated that there were about 1500 people present. The Port Hope team brought about 150 from Port Hope, Cobourg and Millbrook.

The return match will be played in Cobourg next week and it is hoped the Intermediates will be winners again.

The gate receipts last night amounted to $270.00.

The Lakeviews played at Norwood last night and were defeated. The score was 12—4 in favour of Norwood.

The Cause of Dyspeptic Pains

They arise from the formation of gas owing to improper digestion. A very prompt and efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. It relieves the distension instantly, and by its stimulating action on the stomach, aids digestion. Nerviline cures dyspeptic pains by removing the cause. Nerviline is also highly recommended for cramps, colic, summer complaint and inflammation. Sold in large 25c bottles everywhere.

A New Exchange

The Times has just received the first number of a paper issued in the interests of the pork men. It is called "The Hog," and it fairly bristles with good things and is plentifully interlarded with humor—a regular rib-tickler, in fact. In addition to the usual supply of solid meat, there is a corner for tenderlines, and there is a short "tail." It is an offal nice paper. We never sausage a one before. Like the Times it has no motto, but a good one would be: "Hold the pork, fry ham coming," or "In hog signo vinces."

Nervous Dyspepsia

How it shakes one up, invades sleep, destroys strength, adds a real misery to life. Not the stomach, but the nerves are affected. Starved nerves make the whole trouble. You need Ferrozone because it is a nerve food. It supplies the elements that are needed to make rich, red blood. This is the savings bank of health. The richer the blood in red cells, the richer you're sure to be in health. Ferrozone quickly makes blood, strengthens the nervous system, strengthens the digestive organs, and, presto! the nervous disturbance disappears. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

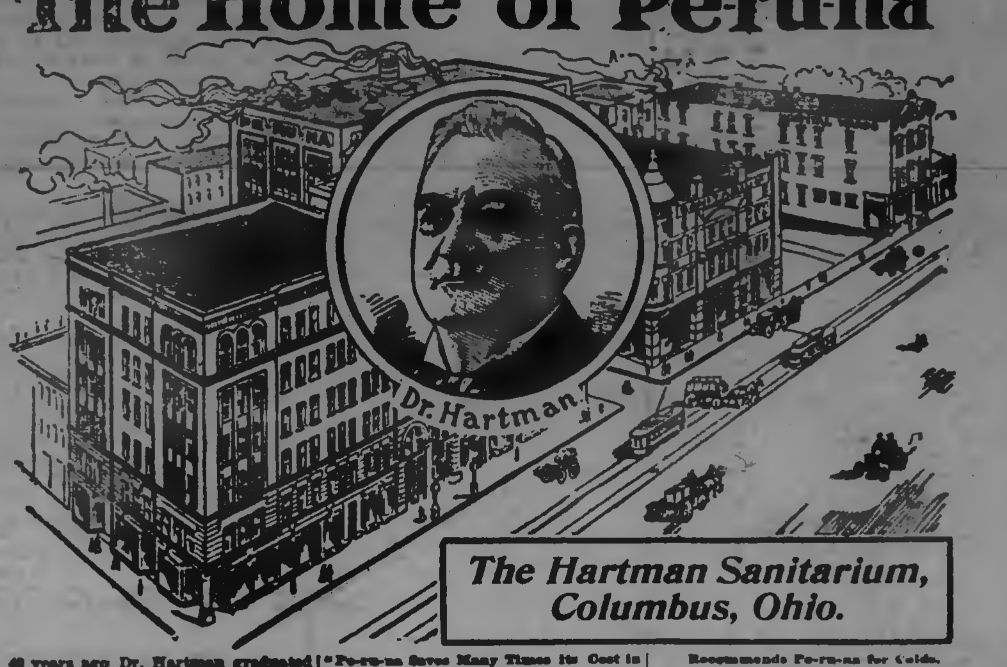
AN OLD PHYSICIAN'S

Prescription for Chronic Catarrh-- In Use Over Forty Years.

The Home of Pe-ru-na



The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

40 years ago Dr. Hartman graduated at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and immediately commenced the practice of medicine in Millersville, Lancaster Co., Pa. Subsequently he practiced in Lancaster City until twenty years ago. He then lectured on the subject of medicine and chronic diseases in all the principal cities in the United States.

During all this time the doctor has been a specialist in the treatment of chronic catarrh. He has probably treated more cases of catarrh than any other physician in the world. Several thousand people (suffering from this stubborn disease) are constantly under his treatment which he carries on by correspondence.

The remedy upon which the doctor relies for the cure of this vast multitude of people is Peruna. Peruna is without doubt the only reliable internal specific for catarrh yet devised by the medical profession. It cures catarrh wherever located—catarrh of the head, catarrh of the throat, of the stomach, lungs, liver, bowels, kidneys, or catarrh of the pelvic organs. Catarrh of these various organs includes a host of diseases known by different names.

Peruna is not a patent medicine, but the regular prescription of a regular physician in the regular practice of medicine. The remedy Peruna is manufactured only by The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, O., where it is supplied to druggists all over the United States and Canada.

Anyone suffering from catarrh, severe or mild, acute or chronic, in any organ or part of the human body, should begin the use of Peruna at once. If at any time during the treatment the patient wishes to ask any question of Dr. Hartman concerning any detail of the disease or treatment he should write the doctor who will promptly answer, free of charge.

Catarrh of Bronchial Tubes Cured.

Mr. W. B. Walby, Hotel Windsor, Ottawa, Ont., writes:

"I have been taking Peruna for catarrh of the bronchial tubes for three weeks, and was truly surprised to find that it affected a complete cure."

W. B. WALBY.

"Pe-ru-na Saves Many Times its Cost in Doctor Bills."

Mr. Geo. A. Gauvin, No. 18 Spring Garden, Halifax, N. S., is Vice-President of the Halifax Camera Club, Lieutenant of Ramblers' Cycle Club, Halifax, writes:

"I feel it a duty as well as a pleasure to speak in high praise of Peruna, especially valuable in cases of catarrh so frequent during the winter season in this country. I have used it myself with fine results, also in my family and found that it has saved me many times its cost in doctor bills.

"Peruna is not only a cure for cold, but a splendid preventive. I know of no medicine, patent or otherwise, which is so powerful to remove disease from the system.—GEO. A. GAUVIN.

"Have Enjoyed Perfect Health Since Using Pe-ru-na."

Miss Florence E. Kenah, 424 Maria St., Ottawa, Ont., writes:

"A few months ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs and remained there so persistently that I became alarmed. I took medicine without benefit, until my digestive organs became upset, and my head and back began to ache severely and frequently.

"I was advised to try Peruna, and although I had little faith I felt so sick that I was ready to try anything. It brought me blessed relief at once, and I felt that I had the right medicine at last. Within three weeks I was completely restored and have enjoyed perfect health since.

"I now have the greatest faith in Peruna."—F. E. KENAH.

"Pe-ru-na Keeps me in Fine Health."

Miss Ella Pittaway, No. 85 Primrose Ave., Ottawa, Ont., writes:

"I cannot speak too highly of Peruna as a medicine of special value during the inclement weather. I was subject to catarrh of the head and throat until I tried Peruna, and I now find that a few doses taken in time invariably cures me, and also that it acts as a special preventative of throat difficulties.

"It keeps me in fine health, and I value its qualities very much."

MISS ELLA PITTAWAY.

Recommends Pe-ru-na for Colds.

Mr. E. H. Cunningham, Mgr. Cable Co., Halifax, N. S., writes:

"During the past winter I contracted a severe cold which I found difficult to throw off. After using several remedies without success, I purchased a bottle of Peruna, and was so pleased with the result, that I now wish to recommend it to all persons suffering as I did."

E. H. CUNNINGHAM.

"Feel Better and Stronger Than for Years."

Miss M. Jean Sargent, Frankford, Ont., writes:

"A few months ago I caught a severe cold coming home from an evening party, being too thinly dressed. It developed into catarrh of the throat, and I soon found that it was more serious than I had anticipated.

"Having read of Peruna and its claims of quick cure, I determined to try it, and sent for a bottle. I am very much pleased to state that the results were far better than I had anticipated or expected. The third day after using it my cough had nearly disappeared, and my appetite had returned, within another week I felt better and stronger than I had done for years.

"I therefore gladly indorse it."

M. JEAN SARGENT.

Everybody should have a copy of one of Dr. Hartman's free books on chronic catarrh. The doctor has lately written a book on pelvic catarrh, to which women are especially liable. Sent free to women only. "The Ills of Life" which can be secured at most up-to-date drug stores," and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Peruna can be purchased for $1.00 per bottle at all first class drug stores.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are Not Too Far Away to do Business in.

CABLE COMMUNICATION brings the Canadian investor into almost as close touch with the South African market as the British or Continental investor, and it is a well known fact (among intelligent people) that the London, England, market is the MINING MARKET OF THE WORLD. As we receive cables daily, the Canadian investor is placed by this means on an almost equal footing with the English investor.

We give the names of half a dozen of different companies in which we have done an extensive business during the past two months, showing low prices at which we handled these shares and the present prices;

	Low Price.	Present Price.	Advance.
Heidelburgs	12s 6d	19s 0d	$1 62
Klerksdorp............	11s 0d	16s 0d	1 25
Witkopje..............	10s 6d	16s 0d	1 37
Salisbury	20s 0d	28s 6d	2 12
Chartereds	£3 6s 0d	£4 9s 0d	5 75
Oceanas....	£2 2s 0d	£2 7s 6d	1 37

These are only a few instances, but numbers of others could be mentioned showing equally large or larger advances, and all our advices indicate that the upward movement in Kaffir (South African) stocks has hardly commenced. Of the above companies it is predicted that Heidleburgs and Salisburys will touch £5, and Witkopje, Klerksdorps and Oceanas are expected to show a profit of from 200 to 400 per cent on present prices. In addition to securing the best representatives possible in London, England, and receiving advices from such source regarding the condition of the market, we have also our SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.

South African shares bought on 20 per cent. margin or for cash as desired. Direct communication with London by cable.

THE DANISH WEST INDIA ISLANDS SOLD TO THE UNITED STATES.

Minister Brun Authorized to Conclude Treaty Without Delay

Prompt Ratification by United States Congress is Anticipated

Review of Previous Efforts for Acquisition of Group

Little Archipelago Strong in Historic and Romantic Interest

Copenhagen, Jan. 27—Authority to sign the Danish West Indies treaty was cabled to the Danish Minister at Washington, on Saturday afternoon. It is expected that the treaty will be signed to-day and that it will be immediately transmitted to the senate. Its prompt ratification is expected.

Washington, Jan. 27—The treaty for the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States was presented to Secretary Hay on Saturday by the Danish minister, Mr. Brun. Both the secretary and Mr. Brun declined to discuss the matter in any way, and would not give any intimation of what the terms of the treaty provide.

It is learned, however, that one clause provides that the treaty shall be submitted to a vote of the people of Denmark before it becomes operative. This will be done simultaneously with its presentation to the senate for ratification, provided it is signed by Secretary Hay. There is an intimation that the signatures will not be affixed to the treaty for some days because of this qualifying provision.

The Danish West Indies are three little islands lying immediately east of Porto Rico at the gateway of the Caribbean sea. Santa Cruz is the largest of the three and contains seventy four square miles of territory, more than five-sixth of it being cultivated. Its total population is 20,000, most of which is of negro descent. St. Thomas is the second in size and is the first in importance because of its situation and fine harbor.

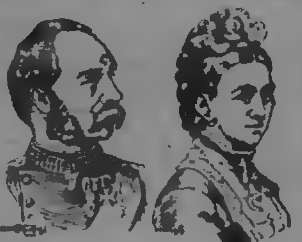
St. Thomas contains the commercial metropolis of the islands, the town of Charlotte Amelia, which is better known as St. Thomas. Charlotte Amelia has 12,000 inhabitants, and the total population of the island is only a few hundreds larger. It contains but thirty-three square miles of territory, most of it too rocky for cultivation.

The third island in the bunch is St. John, a little rocky islet on which less than 1,000 people live. Altogether the purchase adds but 34,000 people and less than 110 square miles of territory to the United States.

In 1867 Secretary of State Seward made an attempt to buy three islands for $7,500,000. The Danish Government agreed to make the sale, provided the people of the islands were agreeable. Rev. Dr. Hawley, pastor of the church which the secretary attended at Auburn, N.Y., was sent to St. Thomas to supervise an election held to give the people a chance to express their views. On all three islands but twenty-two votes were cast against the proposed union with the United States, several thousand being recorded in its favor.

The sentiment of the people was almost unanimous. But the plan had many opponents in congress. Among these was Senator Sumner, then at the head of the committee on foreign relations. Many years later another attempt was made to buy out Denmark's possessions in the Caribbean. This time the price was fixed at less than $5,000,000, but in spite of the reduction it came to nothing. Meanwhile King Christian and the Danish Government have been growing increasingly anxious to sell.

Whatever the islands may lack in any other direction they are strong in historic and romantic interest. They were discovered by Columbus on his second voyage to America in 1493. But Columbus was not looking for a few little scattered islands, and when he found how small they were he hoisted sail and went away after naming them the Virgin Islands. Then for more than 150 years they lay unvisited by white men. In 1657 some adventurous Dutchmen sailed into the splendid harbor of St. Thomas and started a little settlement there. That lasted for ten years. Then the Dutch gave up the attempt, and a few years later the Danes took their place. Since then the English, French and Spanish have alternated in the control of one or more of the islands, which finally passed under the permanent control of Denmark in 1815.



KING AND QUEEN OF DENMARK.

But the chief romantic interest which attaches to St. Thomas lies in the fact that it was for years one of the headquarters of the famous pirates and buccaneers who so long infested and ravaged the Spanish main.

All three of the islands are thought to be the tops of what were once volcanic mountains. In appearance they are typically tropical. The temperature of the island of Santa Cruz ranges from 66 to 82 degrees. It has many splendid driveways, leading through avenues of palms, tamarinds and bananas. There are two towns on the island, Frederiksted and Christiansted. Neither is of any importance from a commercial standpoint. Practically all of the 20,000 inhabitants of the island speak English, and the only sign of their allegiance to Denmark is the flag and a little garrison of about 100 Danish soldiers. Frederiksted is a small town of stucco-covered, two storied buildings, the fissures in the walls and the tumbling walls being a result of the sack of the city in 1878, when the negroes on the island revolted against the Danish government.

THE BOERS SHOT DOWN A COUPLE OF NURSES

Shot Them Down in Cold Blood—Swift Vengeance by Canadians—Boer Leader Paid Penalty

Here is another instance of the ruthless cruelty of the Boers.

A train was proceeding from Pretoria to Nylstroom, when it was attacked by the Boers. A major was killed and two nurses shot dead in cold blood. One of these nurses had been known to show a leaning towards the British wounded, and she was deliberately aimed at. The Canadian scouts and a portion of the regular infantry pursued the Boers, and captured the leader and thirteen men. The leader was instantly shot.

Mr. Davis states that while the Boers hate the British, they hate with a special hatred the colonials, because they recognize that the colonials have rendered the most effective service in the war.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—Lieut. Jeff. Davis, has just returned from South Africa, where he spent two years at the front—first as a trooper in the second contingent, then as sergeant-major in the Canadian Scouts, and subsequently as lieutenant, which promotion was accorded him for a daring ride of seventy-two miles between the Boer lines carrying despatches from General French to General Smith-Dorrien—a ride fraught with great danger in the Eastern Transvaal, and which had to be accomplished at night—a ride which, successfully performed, received hearty commendation from his superiors.

Lieut. Davis is on his way to his home in Calgary, but he thinks he will go once more to South Africa, and accept a position on the Constabulary under Colonel Steele.

MURDER OF GAT. HOWARD.

Mr. Davis gives an authentic account of the death of "Gatling" Gun Howard, as he arrived at the spot ten minutes after the murder—for it was a murder—took place, and learned the details from a Kaffir servant, who had escaped, as well as from Captain Beattie, who, though wounded in the affair, was able to join the column of which Mr. Davis was a member.

Colonel Howard, accompanied by Captain Beattie, an orderly named Northerly, and a Kaffir servant, rode in advance of the column of scouters, whose business it was to find the Boers, to a place called Nooriplatts, on the border of Swaziland. In a natural declivity a number of Boer wagons had been collected, although the Boers themselves, having seen the column approaching from a distance, removed behind some hills. Colonel Howard and his staff moved forward and entered the depression or hollow in which the wagons were huddled together. Seeing that he was almost alone the Boers from the hills began firing. Captain Beattie was hit, so was the orderly, but Colonel Howard remained unhurt. A Boer field cornet descended the hill and ordered the Colonel to throw up his hands. This he did. His arms were taken from him, and he was brought behind a cart, where he was deliberately shot by the field cornet—once in the mouth and once in the shoulder. The orderly was riddled with bullets. Captain Beattie made his escape and rushed for the advancing column. The Kaffir servant, though column. The Kaffir servant, though struck, managed to crawl away. When the column came up the scouts began to fire, and got their guns in position. The Boers retreated. Howard and the orderly were then quite dead. They were buried side by side.

BRITISH WAR TACTICS CRITICISED BY U. S.

A Lively Discussion in the United States Senate Over the War

HOW ABOUT PHILLIPINE WAR?

The Question Knocked the Wind Out of the Garrulous Senator, Who Was a Pro-Boer.

Washington, Jan. 25—The Senate on Saturday was the scene of another incident over the South African war. It will be remembered that the Senator from Colorado asked for the intervention of the United States Government on behalf of the Boers. The Senator again moved in the matter, referring to the execution of Commandant Scheepers, whom he said was assassinated in cold blood.

"It is said," continued Mr. Teller, "that the resolution might be offensive to the government of Great Britain, but if the Geneva convention, to which the United States and Great Britain were parties, means anything it means that we should intervene in such a case as this. If this man was captured as stated while lying in a hospital Great Britain in putting him to death is guilty of a vile assassination."

Mr. Teller read the articles of the Geneva convention applying to the case and said:

"These are rules of warfare which the czar of Russia would respect, which half civilized Turkey and semibarbarous Persia would respect. Under these rules this was a case in which the United States or any other nation party to the Geneva convention had ample right to intervene. It was the business of this government to have ascertained the facts regarding this case and to have protested against this execution. Are we so pusillanimous, so afraid of offending the susceptibilities of Great Britain as to have refrained from doing our duty in a case where humanity was about to be violated?"

Mr. Teller referred to what he said was Great Britain's efforts to destroy two struggling republics and asserted that if the truth had been told by British official reports more Boers had been "slaughtered" during the past year than had been admitted by Great Britain to have been in arms in the whole of South Africa.

Without further comment Mr. Teller, in view of the execution of Commandant Scheepers, asked that the resolution be postponed indefinitely. It was so ordered.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Paris, Jan. 25.—The Scientific Committee of the Aero Club is preparing an important series of surgical experiments to be made at various heights. Special balloon cars are to be fitted with all the essentials of an operating room.

Various problems of heart action under anaesthesia and subsequent recuperation are to be worked out. The first subjects will be guinea pigs and a dog.

A new balloon for the exploration of the Sahara desert is about to be made by Colonel Debureau, an officer of engineers, who has devised an ingenious scheme for the automatic discharge of water ballast. The same arrangement will open a safety valve automatically when the balloon descends and keeps the balloon up.

M. Debureau expects to travel a long way close to the ground, so as to reach the French stations in succession.

London, Jan. 25.—An army order has been issued by Lord Roberts relating to the conditions of efficiency for volunteers. In part it is as follows:

"Volunteers of all ranks should understand that, in view of recent developments in the conditions and requirements of modern warfare, the training of troops, regular or auxiliary, must be conducted on a systematic and progressive principle, in which practice in the essential duties of war is an imperative feature. The force must adapt itself to such a system of training as will admit of its members, from the highest to the lowest, being exercised and inspected in actual actual operations over suitable country or in actual works of defence. An annual camp, with which the year's training should in this manner culminate, is therefore indispensable. To facilitate such training in the case of those corps which, in the opinion of the general officer commanding, are unable to train in complete units, provisional regiments or battalions under officers of the regular forces, and consisting of batteries or companies detailed from volunteer corps, will be formed at suitable stations during certain months of the camping season. Further instructions regarding these arrangements will be issued in due course.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 25.—The Hotel Cecil was burned to the ground this morning. The loss is $60,000, and the insurance small. Some of the inmates had narrow escapes, but all got away uninjured.

The hotel was undergoing repairs, and only a few guests were in the house. The fire broke out at 4.45 a.m., and ran up the elevator shaft to the sixth storey, and filled all the intervening floors. The guests could not use the elevator, and had to take to the windows and fire-escapes. Chas. Lamb, a traveller from Hamilton, escaped without a stitch of clothing. His night-shirt caught fire, and he tore it off, and then his undershirt was burned, and he had to tear that off also. When he got out into the wintry air he was in nature's garb. Another guest hung from one of the hotel windows for ten minutes until he was taken down by a fireman.

Dr. and Mrs. Brownlees, of Ottawa, were in the sixth story when the fire began. The doctor ran to the elevator, but his escape was cut off, and then he went to a window where the fire-escape was. Breaking the inner and outer windows the doctor lifted his wife out, and held her on his arm while he slid down the fire-escape to the first storey, where they landed on a shed. Both were in their night attire.

The insurance is said to have been only about $10,000. The hotel was of stone, six stories high, and was being refitted for the approaching session of Parliament. All the domestics and others in the house lost everything they had.

ANOTHER VERSION.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 25.—Nothing but the walls remain of the Hotel Cecil on Wellington street, near Parliament Hill, a house much used by Senators and members of Parliament during the session. Fire broke out there about five o'clock this morning, though an over heated flue and before it was over the hotel was completely gutted.

New York, Jan. 25.—Five-year-old Martha Manges is looked upon by the police of the Butler street station as a genuine heroine. Fatherless, with her mother unconscious in Seney Hospital, the little girl took care of her two brothers and six-months old baby sister, for three days. When the police found the little family of four Martha was rocking the baby in her arms, and the other two youngsters, James, three years old, and Alphonso, two years old, were wrapped in an old quilt trying to keep warm. In the three rooms that the Manges family had, not a scrap of food could be found, nor was there a fire in the old cooking stove.

MOTHER'S STRUGGLE.

Henry Manges, the father of the family, died six months ago. In his lifetime the family was always well cared for and well fed. After his death the mother was compelled to keep Martha in the house to attend the younger children, while she went to work, and the "little mother" became proficient in her task.

Mrs. Manges left her home to go to work last week. In the house at the time was a small loaf of bread and a little meat. While walking along Fifth avenue the woman suddenly sank unconscious to the pavement. An ambulance from the Seney Hospital was summoned, and the surgeons tried in vain to revive her. There was no clue to her identity, and for three days the woman lay unconscious.

When the mother did not return, little Martha put the other children to bed and sat up the greater part of the night to await her return. The next day what little was left of the bread was eaten up, and the children lay huddled together the better part of the day.

Finally, the next day, the crying of the baby attracted the attention of the neighbors, and the children were given a little food. Detective Lynch, of the Butler St. station, heard of the case and investigated, and had the family taken care of.

Goshen, N. Y., Jan. 25. — The Rev. Clarence Blakely, of the Dutch Hollow Reformed Church, has brought down upon his head a torrent of indignant denial from the young members of his congregation, whom he accuses of kissing in the sanctuary.

At the weekly prayer meeting, last night, the clergyman announced that there must be no more love-making in the church, and said that time after time the services had been interrupted by smacks of kisses. He said that for the last six months he has known that it was the habit of young men and women to attend the church, which is lighted by kerosene lamps, simply that they might sit altogether in the semi-darkness and make love. During the week of prayer, he declared, he was annoyed nightly by loud smacks heard at frequent intervals from various parts of the church. He asked the trustees to furnish more lamps, but the request was ignored, and he has determined to check the practice or resign.

"The house of prayer shall not be desecrated in this manner," he said. "The woman who accepts the kisses of a dozen men is brazen and unwomanly, but when she attempts to indulge in promiscuous kissing and hugging at services held for the purpose of Divine worship she is guilty of a grievous sin."

Mr. Blakely, who is a widower, criticized the young men even more severely. The young men and women of the church assert there is no foundation for the clergyman's charges.

London, Jan. 25.—Of the report of the isthmain Canal Commission at Washington, favoring the acceptance of the offer of the Panama Company to sell its property and rights to the United States for $40,000,000, the Saturday Review says:

"The Americans can do one thing to perfection. They can drive a hard bargain. The sufferer on this occasion is France, which was completely hoodwinked by the American bluff anent the Nicaragua Canal. The Panama directors have agreed to sell their rights for $40,000,000, and the United States will jump at the proposal. The Americans have made a very good bargain—better, perhaps, than is seemly in international dealings."

The Outlook somewhat in the same vein says: "With extreme cleverness the Americans, under cover of establishing a great national principal, made the French owners of the Panama route eager to sell their property. The Americans were perfectly persuaded all along that the Panama route was the better one in nearly every particularly. The thrifty Frenchman, out of whose pocket the money was originally wheedled, must grin and bear this finial shame as he may. Completed by American capital and energy the canal will be a boom to international commerce, and will probably give an impetus to the construction of the American merchant marine, with a navy to match it."

THE MANCHURIAN TREATY.

Pekin, Jan. 26. — The Manchurian treaty is expected to be signed within a week. The diplomats here do not manifest much interest in it, as they do not believe any written treaties will in the slightest degree affect the policy of Russia in Manchuria.

A separate contract with the Russo-China Bank assures to the bank complete control of the railroads and mines.

PREFERS BRITAIN TO GERMANY

Russian Writer Would Not Like to See Germany Control Egypt

HAVE NO DESIGNS ON INDIA

He Thinks India in English Hands is Less Dangerous than in German—Situation at Corea

St. Petersburg, Jan. 25.—The well known publicist M. Syromiatnikov has communicated to The Novoye Vremya two articles dealing at length with the proposals, recently set forth in the National Review, in favor of an Anglo Russian understanding in Eastern Europe, in Persia, and the Far East. In general, the writer concurs to a large extent in the views put forward in the English review, while treating each question from the purely Russian standpoint. For instance, he would prefer to see France in Egypt, but Great Britain far rather than Germany, whose influence, if established on the Mediterranean, would be most dangerous to Russia and the Slav world. In regard to Persia, the article recommends a railway between Baku and Karachi, connecting with one of the bays on the Persian Gulf. Such a line, which might be constructed by the British and Russians in common, would place the Caucasus in direct communication with India, and would undoubtedly constitute the best means of effecting a reapprochement between Russia and England. As to Russian designs on India, the writer dismissed them as non-existent, and he says that in any case India in English hands is less dangerous than it would be in German.

INTERNATIONAL CLAIMS.

After remarking on the somewhat indefinite condition of international claims on the Persian Gulf, where Great Britain possesses no pre-eminent right, M. Syromiatnikov proceeds to discuss the Far Eastern question. He says that it would be a veritable act of treason to Korea if Russia were to sacrifice that country to Japan and England, but she cannot prevent the Japanese from working in their own interest in Korea, while Japan, in return, ought not to object to Russia doing the same in Manchuria. Moreover, in Manchuria, Russia has diplomatic deeds of ownership by her expenditure of money on fortifications and railways, and the sacrifice of thousands of Russian lives.

In concluding his review, the writer expresses hearty satisfaction at seeing British publicists taking the initiative in opening a discussion with Russia direct, instead of, as usual, through Berlin, and he thinks that the Russians ought to respond by a straightforward examination of the sincere and serious proposals laid before them. "In any case," he says, "the abasement of England could only be of advantage to us up to a certain point."

REGULAR HORNET'S NEST

Stirred Up at Harvard by a Pro-Boer Professor

Boston, Jan. 27—Professor Andrews, of Harvard University, has stirred up a regular hornet's nest with his appeal for a pro-Boer mass meeting to be held by the students. Already numerous graduates have sent letters to the faculty protesting against such a meeting. One prominent graduate wrote as follows:

"It seems to me that before this meeting could condemn or even consider British conduct in the Boer war it should, first review American behavior in the Philippine war, and discuss the necessary brutal nature of warfare in general. The phrase 'civilized warfare' is one of the most preposterous of self-contradictions."

COLNTY COUNCIL REFORM

Blenheim Township Wants to Go Back to the Old Reeve System Again.

The Blenheim Township Council are taking the lead in an agitation against the present system of representation in the County Council. They have prepared a petition to the Ontario government to be presented at the present session asking that the system be changed and that the reeves of the various townships form the County Council. The Blenheim Council will before presenting the petition ask the approval of every township and town and village council in the province.

It is said that there is a unanimous feeling against the present system. The Peterborough municipalites are strongly in favor of a return to the old system.

30,000 PRISONERS

This is Said to be the Number of Boers in Our Hands.

London, Jan. 27—The number of Boer prisoners now in the hands of the Imperial authorities is estimated to be over 30,000, and the number of Boers killed, wounded or captured for the past year is 18,320. Mr. Brodrick last February stated that the number of Boers in the field was about 20,000, and the inference is that not more than 2,000 are still in the field. But it is probably certain that either Mr. Brodrick's figure was too small, or that the enemy have had large accessions to their ranks from the Cape rebels, or in the shape of foreign mercenaries.

Twenty Years of Bronchitis

Captain Dunlop, of Kingston, commander of the steamer "Bohemian," of the R & O fleet, suffered unceasingly for twenty years, and although he took treatment all that time permanent relief was not obtained until he used Catarrhozone, which cured him quickly and permanently. The Captain says, "Catarrhozone is the best cure for Bronchitis in the face of the globe, pleasant to use, quick to relieve, and sure to cure." Catarrhozone is a wonderful cure for all diseases of the throat, lungs and bronchial tubes. Two months' treatment, price $1, small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

PANIC-STRICKEN DONS DESERTED BRITISH CREW

Crew of the Hullera Espanola Left the Crew Of the Alfonso to Their Fate

THE VESSEL SANK IN ABOUT SIXTY SECONDS

The Captain of the Alfonso Clung to the Anchor Chain of the Spanish Vessel—Collision Occured in a Fog

Oporto, Jan. 25.—Details have been received of the disastrous collision off the Portugese coast between the Liverpool steamer Alfonso, and the steam collier Hullera Espanola, which sailed under the Spanish flag. It will be recollected that the whole of the crew of the Alfonso, nineteen in number, were drowned, except Captain Burnett. There was an intermittent fog at the time, and a sharp lookout was being kept on the English vessel.

The mate was on the bridge. Seeing a strange vessel looming up in the darkness he hurriedly warned Captain Burnett, who rushed on deck. He was however, unable to reach the bridge in time. There was a terrible crash as the Hullera drove right on to the Alfonso. The Captain saved himself by clinging to the anchor-chain of the Spanish vessel. A moment's glance showed that the English vessel was hopelessly damaged.

The men had but a poor chance for saving their lives, for within the space of about sixty seconds the vessel went to the bottom. It might, however, have been possible to have saved the lives of most of the English crew, but the sailors on board the Spanish ship were, it is asserted, seized with panic.

HULLERA BACKED AWAY

Instead of standing by the Alfonso, the Hullera backed into the fog, and the moment the vessels separated, the Alfonso went down. The Spaniards rushed to their boats, but these had three oars and no rowlocks. The Spaniards further refused Captain Burnett's urgent request to look out for any of the unfortunate members of his crew who might be struggling in the water. Soon all sight of the Hullera was lost in the fog, and although the boats in which the survivors escaped, were somewhat damaged, they only sank a little forward. Luckily, however, the Portugese schooner Rodolfo came in sight about twelve hours later, and picked up and landed the Spanish crew and Captain Burnett.

Considerable bitterness is felt here among the English community at the reports of the way in which the British sailors were deserted.

The Captain of the Hullera says his vessel was registered 978, and carried 2,103 tons of coal. About eleven at night off Averio, he sighted the lights of a vessel bearing down on him and signalled her to bear away. The other replied that it would not. He (the Spanish captain) then ordered full speed astern; but it was too late, the Hullera's bow crashed into the side of the English ship, whose captain leaped on the Spanish ship. The Alfonso for such it proved to be, foundered three minutes later. He ordered his boats to immediately look out for survivors, but it was in vain. The Hullera lost one of her crew of twenty-four, drowned. She sank at half-past one, two and one-half hours after the collision.

SMALLPOX VANFUL ASTRAY.

Drunken Driver and Four Stricken Children Found Stranded in the Street.

New York, Jan. 27—William Shepard of 79 Hutton street, Jersey City, found a smallpox van containing four children ill with the disease, and two mothers, at Cambridge avenue and Hutton street, at 7.30 o'clock last night. Michael Kelly, the driver, was so drunk that he could not hold the reins. Shepard drove the van to the Sixth precinct police station and told the sergeant to look up the driver. The police wouldn't touch him.

Health officers were notified and they hustled for a man to take the van to Snake Hill. In the meantime the mothers and their children were crying bitterly with the cold. A volunteer driver was finally found and the van was started across the meadow after Kelly had been dumped in with the patients. The mothers were Mrs. Schaefer and Mrs. Nolan of 616 John street, West Hoboken. Each had two children, ill with smallpox, and had volunteered to go to the pesthouse to nurse them. They left West Hoboken at 3.30 in the afternoon.

The police think Kelly spent most of the intervening four hours in saloons. It is feared that many people, may have been brought in contact with the patients, and health officers were trying, late last night, to trace the course taken by the drunken driver.

POLICE COURT NEWS

Volunteers Must Produce Certificate of Enlistment—Snow By-Law

Members of the local regiment who have not yet paid their poll tax are reminded of the fact they they are required to bring to the tax collector a certificate of their enlistment in lieu of the tax. Unless this is done they will appear in the Police Court to answer for themselves. One of such cases was up before the Magistrate on Saturday, but the defendant produced a certificate from his Commanding Officer and was accordingly off. Under ordinary circumstances he would have had to pay the costs in connection with the case. All volunteers are requested to make a note of this and attend to the matter at once.

A couple of citizens were up before the Magistrate for not shovelling the snow from the sidewalk in front of their places. No convictions were made.

For removing the snow from their yards and dumping it on the street two citizens were assessed $2.00 each.

BALFOUR DENIES PEACE STORIES

No Proposals Made to Britain on Authority of Boer Leaders

THE LANDLORDISM IS DOOMED

Says T. P. O'Connor in a Fighting Speech—Amendment Badly Defeated—Laurier said to be in Sympathy with Irish Cause

London, Jan. 25.— In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. A. J. Balfour made a comprehensive denial of the peace stories. He declared that since the negotiations between Lord Kitchener and Gen. Botha no proposals having in view the termination of the war in South Africa, had been received from anyone professing to have the authority of the Boer leaders to make proposals, and that no discussions looking to peace were now proceeding.

T. P. O'Connor, Irish Nationalist, made a strong fighting speech in support of John Redmond's amendment to the address. He was frequently cheered. Mr. O'Connor made a special point of the recent reception of the Irish delegates in the United States by President Roosevelt, who, he said, was in thorough sympathy with the Irish movement, and by the Canadian Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, he added, held the same views.

The speaker further asserted that the greatest of all obstacles to a good understanding between the United States and Great Britain was the Irish question, which haunted, and which would continue to haunt, Great Britain in all parts of the world. The Irish members before now had made Ministeries, and they would make and unmake more Ministeries. Landlordism in Ireland was doomed. The Government knew it was beaten all over Ireland on the question of compulsory land purchase, and the present debate marked the commencement of a new epoch in the progress of Ireland.

Mr. Redmond's amendment was rejected by a vote of 237 to 134.

NOMINATIONS TO-DAY.

For the Position of Water Commissioners for the Town

Nominations will be held to-day at 10 a.m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the positions of Water Commissioners, two are to be elected by the people, the Mayor making the third. As the position of Water Commissioner is a very important one it is necessary that only the men best qualified for the position should be elected. In passing the by-law to acquire the Water Works System, the town made a very wise move, and now that we have the Water Works we want some one with good business abilities to be Commissioners. These commissioners must be men who do not entertain very extravagant ideas, they must conduct the work so that out of the revenue we will have a surplus over and above the expenditure or then we will be obliged to put our hand into our pockets and pay the deficit in taxes.

The duty of the electors to-day is to choose only men who have proven themselves good business men, men who have made a success of their business. This is the only class of men who are worthy of the position, and we hope that this will be the class of men who will be nominated.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The Boers are said to be willing to abandon their demand for full independence. Before Kitchener is done with them they'll be willing to do a great deal more than that.

* * *

A vessel arrived at New York the other day, bringing 2,000 tons of Scotch potatoes to feed the Gothamites. Who are talking about cutting off Britain's food supply!

Germany is face to face with one of the worst periods of depression it has ever experienced. Not less than 25,000 workingmen are without employment or means of support in the city of Berlin alone, and systems of public relief at all the industrial centres are being rapidly established, to alleviate the distress of the unemployed.—Leslie's Weekly.

A rigid protective system, reinforced by huge bounties did not save Germany. It but added to the distress of the industrial classes.

In approving the sentence of death on Scheepers, the Boer commander convicted of many crimes, Kitchener will be supported by enlightened public opinion generally. There has been too much leniency shown to the Boers in previous instances.

There are two Emile Zolas in France. One of them is an inventor and does not lack ability in the art of advertising himself and his inventions. In a Paris newspaper this notice has appeared: "M. Emile Zola, of Paimboeuf, inventor of the spring nippers, notifies the public that he has nothing to do with his namesake, Emile Zola, the writer."

* * *

The Earl of Portsmouth owes his baptismal name of Newton to the fact that his great-great-grandfather, Viscount Lymington, married the niece and coheiress of the famous Sir Isaac. There has been a pretty constant succession of "Isaac Newtons" in the family since, but they have not notably inherited the tastes of their distinguished ancestor.

THE LATE CENSUS.

Population of Towns and Villages Given

Ottawa, Jan. 24—The following is the returns of populations of towns and villages in this locality:

Peterborough	11,239
Belleville	9,117
Port Hope	4,188
Deseronto	3,527
Madoc	1,157
Trenton	4,215
Perth	3,588
Campbellford	2,485
Hastings	815
Beaverton	856
Uxbridge	1,487
Havelock	934
Norwood	845
Midland	3,174
Fenelon Falls	1,139
Bobcaygeon	914
Omemee	574
Brockville	8,940
Millbrook	917
Bowmanville	2,731
Tweed	1,168
Stirling	845
Carleton Place	4,059
Smith's Falls	5,154
Cobourg	4,239
Oshawa	4,394
Whitby	2,110
Ashburnham	1,647
Lakefield	1,344
Orillia	4,906
Lindsay	7,003

It will thus be seen that Peterborough and Ashburnham combined had a population, when the census was taken, of 12,886. This has been increased several hundred since then, so that our population stands to-day at about 14,000 or 14,500.

Crowning English Queens.

"In looking forward to the coronation of King Edward," writes Eleanor Cobby in The London Queen, "we all feel how much of grace and beauty and interest the presence of Queen Alexandra will lend to the splendors of the scene, and, as a rule, most English Queens have been solemnly crowned, whether they reigned in their own right or as wives of royal husbands. To this rule, however, there are seven exceptions. The first was Margaret of France, the young, plain, amiable second wife of Edward I. He had spent so much money in conquering Wales and in trying to conquer Scotland that he could not afford the expense of a coronation for his girl bride, and she had to do without the splendors of the pageant.

King Henry VIII. took care that Anne Boleyn should be crowned with extreme magnificence. He desired to show the world how much he loved her and how very much he defied the Bishop of Rome. The four wives who succeeded her were never crowned at all. For one thing, money ran short, and for another, there may have lurked, even in his masterful mind, a sense of the 'fitness of things' which may have caused him to shrink from publicly crowning so many ladies in such rapid succession. At any rate, the beloved Jane Seymour, the despised Anne of Cleves, the girlish Catherine Howard and the wary Catherine Parr were never consecrated in public as Queen-consorts of England.

"Henrietta Maria, wife of Charles I., refused to be crowned. She was young, she was pretty, she was a French Princess and a bigoted Roman Catholic, and she declined to take part in a State function which would compel her to partake of the Sacrament according to Church of England rites.

"Sophia Dorothea of Zell cannot be reckoned amongst the seven, because she was never called Queen of England at all. While George I. was being crowned, and anointed and—bored, the Lady of Ahlden was pining in her long monotonous captivity.

"Caroline of Brunswick is the last and most remarkable instance of the uncrowned English Queens. Though George IV. had been forced from popular indignation to give up the bill of pains and penalties against her, nothing would induce him to let her share his coronation. She was not permitted to be present in Westminster Abbey at all. Repulsed from all the entrances, she returned to her house, to die within three weeks of a violent fever, brought on by months of fearful excitement. The strained cord snapped. The brave heart was broken at last."

A Colored Mayor.

There is one colored Mayor in the United States—Isiak T. Montgomery the wealthiest man in Mound Bayou, Miss. Leslie's Weekly discovered him recently and has furnished a sketch of his very interesting career:—

"Mr. Montgomery came into prominence several months ago at the convention of colored men held in Chicago, where his views upon the negro question elicited much admiration. His career has been one of unusual interest, as he was born a slave on the plantation of Jefferson Davis in Mississippi. Noticing the boy's brightness, the late President of the Confederacy made him a sort of body servant, and he was taught to read and write. With this start he practically educated himself, and when the slaves on the Davis plantation were liberated Montgomery started north to earn his living. He accumulated a few thousand dollars and, returning to Mississippi, conceived the idea of founding a town for the industrious members of his own race who could obtain work from the whites, and who were unsuccessful in working for themselves. He leased plots of ground which he had purchased at a low rental, with the result that negro families flocked to this portion of Mississippi from all portions of the Gulf States. To-day the town has a population of nearly 1,000, contains several important industries, as well as churches and schools. It is what might be called a one-man town, for the Mayor has planned and carried out about everything of importance in it. It is the market for a section of the country fifty to seventy-five miles around it, and one of the most important railway stations on the Illinois Central."

Jerusalem's Water Supply.

To a Greek engineer, Mr. Franghia, is due the long-delayed inauguration of a new water supply for Jerusalem. Time was when the Holy City was well supplied with water, as, indeed, all ancient cities were. Solomon's Pool was one of the ancient sources, or rather reservoirs, for into it were discharged four fountains and aqueducts from two more distant sources. From the Pool two aqueducts ran into the city, known as the high-level and low-level aqueducts. The former of these long ago ceased to be available, but the latter has done duty in a perfunctory sort of way from Bethlehem. From that place a new four-inch iron pipe has now been laid in as direct a line as possible, over hill and valley, and it was the turning on of the water thus delivered in the city that was celebrated in November. All Jerusalem assisted at the glad event. The pipe delivers the water at two points—the Haram or Temple area, were it will be available to Moslems only, and at the fountain erected in the Valley of Hamoon by Sultan Suleiman Ibn Selim in the sixteenth century. Here the water will be free to all, Christian, Moslem and Jew. The ceremony of the inauguration in the Temple area—the Great Mosque of Omar—was quite simple. The Pasha and the authorities assembled early in the morning, and after a short religious service the nine brass taps inserted in the last section of the piping were turned on. The water will eventually be let into the great fountain called El Kas. The officials tasted the water, the band played, and the people cheered after their fashion. At the other outlet, which was inaugurated in the afternoon, the public attended in large numbers, and the place was made gay with garlands and flags. The Pasha having declared the supply open, the taps were turned on, and there was a general rush for the water which had been brought so wonderfully and incomprehensively up the steep Valley of Haunan. The siphon action in hydraulics is not a thing which enters into the calculations of even the most learned of Syrians and Turks. Henceforth, then, the Holy City will be in no danger of the water famine which has often afflicted it. The Pasha and the municipality had done their best, and at the beginning of the year arranged for water being brought up by train in large tanks. An iron pipe and a little science have now done what the Turks and their tanks could not do, and Jerusalem is rejoicing over the boon of living water.

Down on the Modern Theater.

EVERYONE is familiar with General Sherman's famous definition of war. The great Italian actress, Eleanora Duse, now applies the same harsh epithet to stage life. She says it is "hell—downright hell."

Duse has confessed to an interviewer that she is "tired of the theater, but not of art, tired of the theatrical part of stage life, tired of the necessary cooperation of artists, managers, sceneshifters and lamp-lighters."

"Yes," she continued, "I am tired of all and everything liable to obstruct my artistic endeavors and to interfere with my plans, executed or intended. I am dreaming of entering the lecture platform, but will do things in quite a different way from the ordinary.

"I mean to enliven the lecture platform and broaden its scope by retaining some of the stage's features. My American tour will be my swan's song as far as stageland is concerned.

"After that I will endeavor to realize this dream of making the world acquainted with the great masterpieces of literature without detracting their attention by undue scenic effects and the awkwardness or stupidity of actors playing incidental parts.

"One or two ladies or gentlemen will be engaged as my assistants, merely to look their parts and give me the cue. As for myself, I couldn't think of assuming several roles as some do at dramatic recitals.

"I needn't repeat," she continued, "that I leave the stage without regret, yet at the same time I am almost forced to do something of the kind. I can't be for ever playing Dumas and Sardou, Ibsen and Sudermann. No one of account is writing new plays for me, and those that are written might as well remain unacted.

"I tell you la Duse is threatened by literary famine. Shall I wait until the public tires of my repertoire? Besides, I must rid myself of the slavery of stage life. That's no life at all. I assure you it is hell, downright hell."

Curious Whims.

Eccentricity is often nothing but the exaggeration of individuality, as with a scholar of some distinction who died towards the end of the last century. His peculiarity expressed itself in the way in which he tried to carry his scholarship, or the symbolism of it, into the grave. By the terms of his will he left six thousand guineas to his sister on condition that his funeral was carried out on curiously-prescribed lines. His coffin was painted green, and was followed by only six gentlemen—no relatives being invited—who were to receive ten guineas each provided they did not dress in black. The body was fully dressed. Under the head was placed a copy of Horace, and at the feet Bentley's Milton. In one hand was a pocket edition of Horace, and in the other a small Greek Testament; and another copy of Horace was laid underneath. The hired mourners sang over the closed grave the last stanza of the twentieth ode of the second book of Horace; and subsequently, after a generous supper, another ode was sung. "Which done," ran the final injunction of the will, "I would have them take a cheerful glass, and think no more of me." A French historian had a whimsical fancy for reading and writing by candlelight. At full noonday, in the brightest summer weather, he would have his candle by his side, and he would carry it in his hand when showing his visitors to the door.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

"Fling your arms about me quickly," he muttered, almost fiercely; then as she shrank back, "do you hear me? At once! Cling to me! Obey me. You know our compact."

Katharine hesitated, but he seized her two hands, and dragging them up to his neck, clasped them there; then he let his own arms hang down by his side, and the effect on any stranger would be that Katharine was clinging to him, pleading with all the abandon of a lover.

Such, at least, was the translation that came to Ormande's mind as, in company with Barbara Mostyn, he turned a corner and beheld these two together.

The blood flamed to his face, and then receded, leaving it as white as a sheet.

Katharine's head was turned away; she did not know what or who was near her; she had turned faint and cold at this contact with a man who was more horrible to her than the vilest animal.

As Gordon loosened her arms and she staggered back, she heard a shrill voice say very sharply:—

"I am afraid we intrude here, Lord Otway!" and raising her shamed, miserable eyes, she saw Ormande's well-loved form just moving away. With a groan she buried her face in her hands, and Gordon leaned comfortably against a tree and surveyed her through his half-closed eyes.

"You really need not hide your face, Kattie," he said, in that mocking manner that lashed her proud heart to fury; "there is nothing so very strange in the fact of a wife lavishing caresses on her husband, though I grant you it is very flattering to my vanity. Since you are so disconcerted, however, I will take my leave for a time, and I shall find a moment in which to communicate to you my arrangements for going from here. I need scarcely add, dear Kattie, that I shall expect you to be quite ready to fall in with those arrangements— it might be as well if you were to pack your box at once, one is always better prepared in advance. Ta, ta, my dear."

And, with another soft laugh, he sauntered away as leisurely as he had come.

A sob broke from Katharine's lips as she was alone. She was beginning to see the system of refined torture this man would submit her to. The meeting in the coppice had been a pre-arranged thing in his mind; he wished to let Ormande see her in a position that would rouse his doubt and jealousy, and he had succeeded only too well. A rebellious feeling rushed into the poor girl's mind; she had prayed so often of late for deliverance from this man, for peace and forgetfulness, and her prayers seemed left unanswered.

"There is none to care," she said to herself; "let the end come. I am weary of fighting."

But the next instant she was herself again, and was more firmly resolved than ever that she would be true to her love, true to her vow. Come what might, she must, she would stand between Ormande and danger.

"I will go away, as he commands," she determined; "but once in London, I will find some plan to outwit him and escape him. The path is full of difficulties now, but a way will be open to me. It shall! it shall!"

And then Katharine had to call up all her courage and strength as she perceived Mrs. Trevanion and another lady sauntering toward her.

"What are you doing here, Miss Brereton?" inquired Barbara's aunt with much austerity as the girl would have hurried past her; "there is work for you in the library. Stay!" as Katharine would have hurried away, "you have some scissors at your chatelaine, I see; kindly cut off this braid that is torn on my skirt."

Katharine knelt obediently on the ground, and Mrs. Trevanion pursued her conversation with the other lady.

"I assure you it is true; he told Barbara so himself, so there can be no doubt whatever, can there?" she said.

"Of course not," the lady replied; "but I confess I am astonished nevertheless. He is a most delightful man, and deserves a good wife. Do you know where the mysterious Mrs. Gordon Smythe is?"

"Oh, I fancy she is some disreputable—— Pray, what is the matter, Miss Brereton? I wish you would not start in that manner, it makes me so nervous." This to Katharine, who had indeed given a great start as these words came to her ears. The girl bent her face still lower over the refractory braid, but the scissors trembled in her hand so much that she could do nothing for the moment. Mrs. Trevanion, after that rebuke, continued her conversation again. "Yes, I am quite sure she must be a person he is ashamed of! Barbara says he spoke as if his marriage were a great trial to him! Such a nice man, too; I had no idea he had a wife! It seems so sad that he should have got such a bad one, does it not?"

The lady assented most warmly. Gordon's handsome face had made a great impression on her, and then Mrs. Trevanion, perceiving that her skirt was all right again, moved on without as much as giving Katharine a word of thanks.

The girl stood with dazed, white face, as she was once more alone. She could not see what all this was leading to; that Gordon had some distinct and definite plan in her mind was more than evident to her. One thing followed so quickly on another, she had no chance of battling against them; she must simply submit to circumstances, and to Gordon's evil, yet undoubted power.

The brief look that had flashed a moment ago from Ormande's blue eyes would have riven her heart in twain at any other time, but now she was plunged in such a seething sea of grief, misery and dread, that the full bitterness of the sting was gone.

All she knew, all she thought of now was to get away from this place, to get Gordon Smythe away from the man she loved. She lived in one long agony while they were together. She cared not what sacrifice she made, so that Ormande was safe.

The fete progressed bravely; bands played in Brexley Hall grounds all the long day, there were speeches, and much shouting in Barbara's honor, and everything wore a smiling and festive air. Barbara walked about among her people very splendidly arrayed, with a set smile on her face, and a decided thrill of satisfaction in her heart. She dearly loved this ostentation, and the unlimited tribute to her sovereignty.

She stood under a canopy and gave away prizes to the successful scholars in her model schools; she presented gifts to the old folks from her almshouses; she stopped to sympathize with a group of invalids who were brought out from their beds in the hospital, and she was altogether the most important person in the county that day. Yet, pleasant as Barbara found it, there was a crumpled rose-leaf to be discovered.

Lord Otway, at her express solicitation, stayed by her side all day; she wished to make him share in her ministration, to draw him into this rush and whirl of parochial festivity, but though the young man obeyed her, and stood by her while she distributed her gifts and smiles, he moved and looked like an automaton. Not a muscle of his face relaxed from the strange, sad gravity that had fallen on it after they had left the coppice that morning and seen Katharine's two arms linked round Gordon Smythe's neck. He was very pale, and there was a sombre fire in his eyes that added to the beauty of the blue orbs, but which somehow impressed the beholder with undoubted distress. Both Barbara and Gordon noticed it— the first with a frown the other with a smile of triumph; and so the long-expected day wore away.

In the evening there was to be the ball to which the whole of the neighboring houses for miles around had received invitations.

Ormande, Lord Otway, would have given all his worldly possessions to have rushed away madly from Brexley Hall before the whirl and rush of the dance commenced. His aching heart longed to be buried in some far distant spot where even the name of the woman he loved so dear could never be breathed.

"She does not love me! She has deceived me!" he had said bitterly to himself all through the long weary day. "She loves another, and that other a man whom my instinct warns me is bad to the core. To tell me she was not free, to look at me as she looked and yet to cling to him, to put her arms round his neck, and——"

He was thinking this madly as he stood at one of the open windows of the drawing room after dinner was over. The lower part of the house was deserted, while upstairs all was bustle and confusion as the fair occupants arrayed themselves for conquest.

Ormande had no excuse ready to leave that night, but he determined, with a sigh, that on the morrow he would go quite early.

"I must," he said to himself. "I have been blinded for a time, now I must tear away the illusion and be myself again."

He stood on for awhile, and presently Mr. Montrose came up to him. The good-natured politician's face wore a puzzled and anxious look.

"All alone, Otway?" he said, with a glance around. "I am glad of it. I rather wanted to speak to you. Do you know anything of this fellow Smythe who is down here?"

Ormande hesitated; his blood seemed to boil at the sound of his rival's name.

"No, nothing," he answered at last. "What—what of him?"

Mr. Montrose put his hands behind his back and pursed up his lips. It was an old trick of his. He replied to Ormande hurriedly:

"This— that I think he is an awful scoundrel; you know he has a wife? Miss Mostyn told me that he had informed her of the fact only last night, and yet I very much fear he is playing the deuce with that lovely girl of poor Robert Brereton's."

Ormande's right hand went out to grasp a chair.

"You— you speak as if you knew something, Mr. Montrose. Let me know the worst at once. Aye, you may look, you have guessed my secret. I am not ashamed of it. I love Katharine Brereton with all my heart!"

"Then may Heaven help you!" was the elder man's reply given solemnly, "for there is unfortunately no room for doubt. Gordon Smythe and the poor girl have left the Hall, and gone away together as man and wife."

CHAPTER XXIII.

Lady Blanche Bellairs was once again in the very highest of spirits. Her anxiety about poor Craven Adair had been soothed, her distress mitigated, and she had nodded her head many times with delight at the news that Ormande was actually a guest of Barbara Mostyn's at Brexley Hall.

"At last he begins to see the wisdom of the plans I have made for him," she communed with herself. "In a few days I expect I shall have to write my letter of congratulation. Thanecourt ought to be exceedingly obliged to me for the amount of trouble I have taken over Ormande's future, and over the welfare of Thane, but he won't care a rap —not he! As long as he lives the life he likes best, it matters not what becomes of his son, his property or any of his belongings in the days that are to follow."

But Lady Blanche was much too delighted at the prospect her imagination conjured up to allow the old grievance against her brother to linger as long as it generally did. In her eagerness to see the family of Thanecourt upheld, with all the pomp and glory of former days, Lady Blanche did not give much consideration to the question of her favorite nephew's happiness. Ambition overshadowed affection; though, to do her justice, she would have modified her wishes exceedingly had she had the very least idea of Barbara's true character. The girl was always on her best behavior with Lady Blanche, and her manners and ways were irreproachable.

"Yes," she mused, on the day following the one that was celebrated with so much eclat in Brexley village, "yes; I shall have a visit from Ormande soon, asking my advice and my blessing. He shall have both; advice that the marriage shall be as speedy as possible, and a blessing that Heaven's protection shall rest on himself and his wife. Dear Ormande! God grant him every earthly blessing! If ever a man deserved it he is that man!"

The really kind-hearted lady was suddenly awakened from her pleasant dreams of the future by the fact that Martin Adair was ordered by the Northminster doctor to go to London to have further advice; and Lady Blanche, as though to atone for past neglect, resolved to take the girl up to town and stay there for a week or so, in order to try the new treatment recommended.

What Has 1902 in Store.

What surprises has the new year 1902 in store for us? The Daily Mail of London withdraws the veil a little with a pleasing fillip to the following effect:—

"So far as extensive inquiry indicates, no epoch-making change in any one field of human endeavor is to be anticipated in England; rather will it be a year of universal steady progress on lines already laid down—a year of perfecting many improvements of whose value the public has already had a foretaste.

"In one department, at any rate, important, perhaps astonishing, strides may be expected—viz., the conquering of the air. M. Santos Dumont has demonstrated the practicability of driving and guiding an airship even against adverse currents. By patient and heroic effort he has dragged the 'flying machine'—if the metaphor be permissible—from the realm of remote possibility to that of actual tried fact; and when London makes its first acquaintance with his airship, as it sails around the dome of St. Paul's—a feat M. Santos Dumont has promised to perform— the present remaining difficulties will be found to have greatly diminished.

"Safer methods of travelling by sea and land will also be a feature of the year. The Midland Railway Company is to adopt a new type of locomotive. Moreover, automatic signalling, whereby the train itself lowers and releases the signals as it travels, is to come into operation on one section of a great system, while another company is seriously contemplating running its trains by motor instead of the ordinary locomotive. One such automobile locomotive has actually been built by the French firm of Panhard & Levassor for a light railway.

"During 1902 the motor is also to be applied to canal traffic. The slow, if sure, horse appears to be doomed. The first motor-drawn barges will be seen on the River Lea, near Luton. The motor will travel over a mono rail laid along the towpath, and will haul a 70-ton barge at the rate of three and a half to four miles an hour. The canal horse seldom exceeds one mile an hour.

"Before the end of 1902 it is probable that turbine passenger steamers will be flying between an English port and the French coast. A railway company interested in the cross-Channel traffic has such a scheme in hand, but the publication of precise details is undesired at the present juncture. By the application of the turbine system to Channel steamers the journey from London to Paris will be shortened by over an hour. Another shipbuilding record will be the construction of the mammoth liners for the new Canadian mail service. The vessels will be 825 feet in length, and by far the longest ships afloat. Some idea of the immensity of these floating towns may be gained from the fact that they will be 120 feet longer than the Oceanic or the Celtic, the two largest steamships now in existence, or 124 feet longer than the Great Eastern, which was regarded for nearly 50 years beyond all practical size.

"The business man in journeying to and from America experiences some inconvenience as a result of being cut off from the world for the six or seven days which the voyage occupies. He misses his daily newspaper. The recent progress made in wireless telegraphy, however, justifies the hope that during 1902 newspapers may be printed on board Atlantic liners during the voyage, giving the passengers in a concise form the most important items of intelligence from different parts of the world. The messages would be transmitted by means of the Marconi system, and immediately on receipt would be printed as usual and sold by the deck newsboys as 'extra specials.'

"Admirable though the Metropolitan Fire Brigade is, it is not unlikely that an entirely new kind of engine will be tried. The adoption of the horseless engine in use in America has been considered, and 1902 is likely to see it tested. Messrs. Merryweather & Sons already construct such engines. A steam fire engine is capable of travelling at a speed of 30 miles an hour, compared with the maximum sixteen or seventeen miles achieved by a couple of horses.

"An invention which will see the light in 1902 is not without its humorous aspect. Englishmen have long and deservedly had the reputation of being very backward in the acquirement of foreign languages. An enterprising Frenchman, M. Bisoray, is coming to their rescue. He proposes to establish in London depots supplied with gramophones which, on a penny being put in the slot, will give the listener a lesson in French. Ladies will attend to the machine, and all the pupil will have to do will be to say whether he is a 'beginner' or 'advanced.' Thereupon he will be conducted to the required machine. The spirit of change will even spread to that most conservative of British institutions—men's dress. The peculiar compromise between a frock and lounge coat illustrated on this page is a promised innovation.

"It is claimed to be conducive to both comfort and elegance; but it will apparently take some time for the eye to get used to it. Nearly all kinds of men's clothing will be braided in 1902, a fashion which will certainly give a distinctly 'dressy' appearance. For 'motor' wear tanned and dressed goat skin will be 'the thing.' In either brown or black it will look well, and the high metallic-looking glaze the skin takes is not unpleasing."

Looking for an Heir.

The Empress Regent of China is a figure with all the perennial interest of an inscrutable mystery. From Pekin, to which she has returned, and where, after all the trouble, things are pretty much as they were before the rebellion of the Boxers, and the besieging of the Ambassadors, the same old stories of intrigue are coming in on every wind. Her primary difficulty just at the moment is over the question of a new heir to the present Emperor. The old one has been dismissed in disgrace. He, it is said, insulted the Empress-Regent. In all probability the insult took the form of some slight show of independence. The matter is a pressing one, for the death of the present tractable head of affairs, who makes a splendid base of legal authority, would leave the Empress in a most insecure and unsatisfactory position. At the same time the choice is limited to the dynasty, but the possibilities of evil to a tenure of power like that of her Majesty are terribly great in the presence of unknown forces. Simultaneously come reports of a thorough reorganization of the Chinese army under Japanese officers and of arsenals everywhere working overtime to turn out Mauser rifles.

Lost in the Desert.

THE helplessness that a man feels when he is lost is one of the most terrible parts of his experience. Perhaps this is at its worst when it is not he but the guide who is at fault. The late G. W. Steevens, the war correspondent, had a terrible experience of the kind in the Egyptian desert.

"We had been journeying all day, hoping to reach the monastery at night. I began to feel sleepy and to droop in the back. I swung my leg over the pommel, and settled myself to ride astraddle. Then I decided to sit side-saddle on the off-side for an hour, then change and ease the strain again. So I rode, looking steadily at the great yellow blotch ahead of me.

"But now the sun was dipping down again under our hat-brims. It was past four. It would be dark at half-past five; if we had not sighted our monastery then, we were helpless.

"The eagerness with which the guide raced up each new eminence, the strained hopefulness of his stare, the slow disappointment you could read in the relaxed limbs, the fresh hope renewed, but each time fainter, with which he dashed for the next prospect —he was at fault. To my eye one ridge, one dip, one hill was exactly like every other. We had been riding ten hours and must have come fifty miles; our monastery was only forty-five. We had missed it and it was all but dark.

"A night in the cutting wind of the desert, a night without tent, water, fire or fodder was the very best we had to look forward to. The worst—but just then up panted Said.

"'Have you seen, Said?'

"'Effendim, I have seen; I saw from the hill back yonder. Come and see for yourselves.'

"And he led us back to the brow of the bluff, and there, surely, yes, there gleamed something white. The monastery, hurrah! It can't be four miles off. We will walk; the camels can follow. So up got the patient camels and off we strode, five miles an hour, over sand as hard and crisp as the early morning snow.

The blazing crimson and orange of the sunset blinded our eyes to the white blob of the monastery. But faster and faster we walked. Now crimson and orange blazed no more; it was really dark now; we had come five miles and had not arrived.

"'Are you sure you saw, Said? Quite sure?'

"'Effendim,' replied Said, 'I thought I saw something white.'

"Nothing in sight white now. The guide was thrown out utterly; and there we were, fifty-five miles from home, camels done up, and foodless; camel boys, starving; thirsty and waterless ourselves; with possibly two days' food and certainly not two days' water; lost, clean lost in the Libyan Desert."

That night their sleep was broken by fears. At early dawn they were up and searching. Mr. Steevens continues:

"Then the sun comes up, and the desert is yellow again; and now what sound is that? Yes, a yell from Said. Surely he has seen. On to the camels and briskly westward.

"'Have you seen, Said?'

"'No, but behold—a camel track, and I know this place.'"

The Inventor.

A SMALL man with blear eyes and shaking hands took the seat opposite me. I was not surprised to hear him call for absinthe.

"You are sitting at the table with an unrecognized genius," he said, without looking at me.

"So are you," I retorted. I was then a struggling art student in Paris.

"You laugh," he said, "but it is true. Your voice is sympathetic, and I will tell you."

"Thanks," I said.

"You are an artist, and have, undoubtedly, remarked the natural affinity of colors. White, for instance, is supposed to contain all colors."

He had hit on my favorite subject for discussion, and I leaned back prepared to listen.

"Have you observed," he asked earnestly, "that people with blue eyes have yellow hair?"

"The Irish," I answered, "have black hair and blue eyes. It's a beautiful combination."

"Yes; that's my point. I can change the color of the eyes."

"What!"

"You mix paints! You get green from yellow and blue! You make a color darker or lighter! You make black with red and purple! I do the same with eyes! A year ago I discovered an injection for the retina of the eye that would change its color. Suppose you have light gray eyes. I inject such a colored fluid as will make them black, blue—any color!"

I looked at his eyes. They were a rottish green.

"My own eyes," he continued, "I tried to change to green as an advertisement. It was before I had perfected my invention, and—I lost my sight. Tell me, are my eyes green?"

I became conscious that he had been gazing directly past me and had not looked at me once.

"You are blind?" I said.

"Entirely," he answered indifferently. "But what matters it? I have perfected my invention. Had I a paltry five-franc piece I could make all the women in the world beautiful. Women are the power of the world. Ah, France, ma chere patrie, then shouldst thou rule the nations of the earth again!"

I handed him a five-franc piece.

"Your story is worth it," I remarked, "whether it be true or not."

He slipped the money into his pocket and turned to go.

"It's a loan," he said, over his shoulder; "you shall hear from me."

That evening I lounged in the Art Students' Club in a haze of smoke. I had found friends. Tobacco makes man confidential, and I told them my story while they puffed on their pipes in silence. Then each spoke in turn.

"I gave him five francs when I first arrived," said Rand.

"Sacre! I gave him ten," said Montjoie.

"Donnerwetter! and I gave him fifty," cried Becker.

"But is he really blind?" I asked.

"No," said Rand; "you were the blind one."

R. M. M. in the "Metropolitan."

"What is worse than a giraffe with a sore throat?" "A centipede with chilblains."—Boston "Christian Herald."

First Boy—It's six o'clock. Let's go home. Second Boy—Nit! If we go home now we'll git licked for stayin' so late. If we stay till eight we'll git hugged and kissed for not bein' drowned.—"Puck."

His Ideal.

First Cat—If you had your choice of all the world, where had you rather live? Second Cat—China! They say there is a wall there 1,250 miles long! Just think of moonlight nights—and a wall like that!

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

THE

Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau,
Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat! The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion— why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and is riveted to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.50
1	28 in.	9 in.	13.00
2	31 in.	10½ in.	14.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	[illegible]
4	41 in.	15 in.	[illegible]

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 30 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 2 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

—Some of the street crossings have been left in bad shape.

—Central Charity Board will meet this evening at 7.30.

—Ring up phone 370 and get some decent coffee. H. F. Kidd, 353 George st.

—The nominations for candidates for Water Commissioners will be held today at 10 o'clock.

—The county council will meet tomorrow, when the first duty will be the election of a warden.

—The Board of Health will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Town Clerk's office.

—Why not try H. F. Kidd's choice Breakfast Cereals? 353 George st.

—A ladies' gold ring, which was found on the market on Saturday, awaits an owner at the police station.

—Subscribe for The Times, Peterborough's brightest and best daily. Only 25 cents per month, delivered.

—Mr. Harry Lindley, the veteran comedian, has left on a trip to the Pacific Coast with a new company.

—Our prices right; our goods the best; Send in your coin, we'll do the rest.—H. F. Kidd, 353 George street.

—The first meeting of the Board of Directors of the Y.W.C.A., for the year 1902 will be held this afternoon at 3.30.

—Ald. Morrison's move against outside peddlers has been copied into the Lindsay papers, which urge a similar move in Lindsay.

—It is the careful manner in which he covers his field, that often makes the successful advertiser. This is always done by using the columns of Times.

—Orillia Board of Trade has invited General Manager Hays, of the G.T.R., to visit that town to discuss summer resort business. A public banquet will be arranged for.

—We were in error in stating in Saturday's issue that Dr. Gray assisted at the surgical operation which was performed on Friday on Mrs. Alfred Garlick. It should have been Dr. McGrath.

—In these active days the question "To advertise, or not to advertise?" is simply another form of that older question which perplexed Hamlet—"To be, or not to be?" Always use The Times.

—We want your trade. Let us fill your order once, and we've got it. H. F. Kidd, 353 George street.

—The cause of the continued shortage in eggs and their consequent high price, has been discovered. In some parts of the country, owing to the increased cost of feed, many plump and promising pullets have been slaughtered for the market. Alongside of wiseacres like these the man who killed the goose which had been laying the golden eggs for him looks like a successful financier.

—Whiten keeps the latest designs in photo mounts. At Whiten's you get a guarantee that all his photos are finished in the best Platino finish, and positively no common photos are made in his studio.

A Presentation

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Frank Ward, of the C.G.E. Co., was presented with a medal by a number of his admiring friends as a token of the esteem in which he is held by them, after which a very pleasant social event took place.

The Times Again

Once more The Times has scored. A few days ago a lady who boards at the Morgan House, lost a gold watch. An advertisement was inserted in The Times, and the watch was promptly restored to its owner. The finder was Miss Armine Laplante who picked it up on Charlotte Street. It always pays to advertise in The Times.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Miss Nina Sherin, of Lakefield, is visiting in town.

—Rev. R. A. Langfeldt is spending a few days in Orillia.

—Mrs. B. Mallory and Miss Mallory, of Toronto, are the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Bradd.

—Mr. Geo. Gowlands, of Toronto, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McClelland, town.

—Mrs. Eastwood, of Nebraska, U.S.A., is visiting friends in town after an absence of thirty-three years.

—Mr. C. H. Rogers, of Cobourg, returned home on Saturday, after spending a few days in town, the guest of Col. H. C. Rogers.

—Rev. Canon Greene, L. Th., Rector of St. James' church, Orillia, preached in St. Luke's, Ashburnham, yesterday.

—Mr. J. M. Kilbourn, President of the Lakefield Cement Company, leaves in a few days for an extended trip to the Holy Land. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Kilbourn and by Mr. and Butchart, of Owen Sound.

—Mr. W. C. Hartnett, late of Harper & Hartnett, and who was about to enter into partnership with Mr. Jas. Butler, in the grocery business, has accepted a position in Kent county, and leaves this week to take up his new duties.

A Cowardly Deed

As the result of a mean and altogether unwarranted act, Miss Barlee, of town lost her beautiful Irish terier "Mike" on Friday night or Saturday morning from the effects of a dose of poison. That any person should take revenge on the animal is very strange as the dog would not injure any person, in fact was a sort of favorite. For some time past considerable poisoning of dogs has been going on in town and if the guilty parties can be identified they will certainly be dealt with most severely.

Local Legal

The following appears in Saturday's Globe:

Smith v. Smith,—D. O. Cameron, for plaintiff, moved for order for interim alimony and disbursements. W. H. Blake, for defendant, contra. Order against defendant, formerly of Peterborough, made for $10 weekly interim alimony and for costs and interim disbursements. And motion having been turned, by consent, into a motion for judgment, order made allowing plaintiff to sign judgment for permanent alimony at the rate of $10 a week, payable monthly, and for costs as between solicitor and client.

Advice to Mothers

If your little boy or girl comes home with a sore throat, the first thing to do is to rub the throat and chest with Polson's Nerviline. Use Nerviline freely — a whole bottle full wouldn't burn or blister the tenderest skin. Rub in until all taken up by the pores, and just before the child goes to sleep give him a glass of hot water into which 20 drops of Nerviline has previously been stirred. This is a sure, pleasant and speedy cure. Large bottles 25c.

A New Code of Manners

The C.P.R., it is said, has established a new code of chair car manners which ought to add to the popularity of that line. A drover, who had just been west with a car of stock and was on his way west on the fast train, removed his shoes to give his weary feet a chance to rest. The porter demurred to the introduction of this time-honored practice of passengers who object to taking a sleeping car, and politely suggested that the atmosphere of the smoking car was better suited to the performance. The indignant stockman took the hint and went forward, but he swears he will never ship another pound of freight over the line or travel on one of its stock passes again. Now is the time for all lovers of good manners and common decency on railroad trains to really to the support of the C.P.R.

BANQUET TO MR. KILBOURN

The President of the Lakefield Cement Works to be Honored

The citizens of Lakefield have decided to banquet Mr. J. M. Kilbourn, the President of the Lakefield Cement Company, previous to his departure on an extended trip to the holy land. The banquet will take place in the Craig House on Friday evening next.

This is a well deserved tribute to a man who has done much for the village. Mr. Kilbourn has created an industry in Lakefield that will prove a lasting benefit to the people of the village and surrounding district. Already upwards of $75,000 has been spent in wages alone.

Many of our leading citizens have been invited. Peterborough will join heartily in honoring such a man.

A GOOD CHANGED

A Change of Food Works Wonders.

The wrong food and drink causes a lot of trouble in this world. To change the food is the first duty of every person that is ill, particularly from stomach and nervous troubles. As an illustration: A lady in Hickmon Mills, Mo., has, with her husband, been brought around to health again by leaving off coffee and some articles of food that did not agree with them. They began using Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.

She says, "For a number of years I suffered with stomach and bowel trouble which kept getting worse until I was ill most of the time. About four years ago I left off coffee and began taking Postum. My stomach and bowels improved right along, but I was so reduced in flesh and so nervous that the least thing would overcome me.

Then I changed my food and began using Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food in addition to my Postum Coffee. I lived on these two principally for about four months. Day by day I gained in flesh and strength until now the nervous trouble has entirely disappeared and I feel that I owe my life and health to Postum and Grape-Nuts.

Husband is 73 years old and he was troubled, for a long time, with occasional cramps, and slept badly. Finally I prevailed upon him to leave off coffee and take Postum. He stood out for a long time, but after he tried Postum for a few days he found that he could sleep and that his cramps disappeared. He was satisfied and has never had coffee since.

I have a brother in California who has been using Postum for several years; his whole family use it also because they have had such good results from it.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

About Santa Claus.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—1. What has Santa Claus (or St. Nic) to do with Christmas? 2. When and where did the custom of hanging up stockings originate? 3. Whence came the custom of Christmas tree and candles? 4. When did the Christmas tree reach England and America, and how?

F. J. S.

Ans.—1. Nothing really; his feast day is Dec. 6, and the saint seems to have been carried along to the Nativity because St. Nicholas is the patron saint of childhood and Christ was a child at Christmas. 2. It originated in Germany, but no date can be ascribed for its beginning. 3. It came from Germany and is like Christmas festivities the world over, a relic of the old pagan Teutonic customs. 4. Prince Albert brought it into England from Germany, about 1842. It came to America with the Pennsylvania "Dutch." and probably became common here after the Germans began to make their numbers apparent.

Municipal Ownership.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We should never condemn a proposition because someone else or some other party approves it.

Equal rights to all and special privileges to none, is, I think sound doctrine. Taking this postulate for our guide, if we find that municipal ownership of public utilities conforms to it we should approve it; if not, then—and then only—should we condemn it.

What are equal rights but opportunities that all should have an equal chance of enjoying? What are special privileges but opportunities granted to a few, to the exclusion of the many?

Government control will not secure equal rights, for we have that, now in many instances. City governments have control of street railways under its police power and under the law of eminent domain, but what good does it do? Just as soon as something beneficial is proposed influence is brought to bear to nullify it. And so it will always be as long as these public utilities are owned, controlled and operated by the government, for as long as the private corporation public utility camel has its head in the municipal tent there is always danger of its getting its whole body in.

This is not socialism, but democracy. Socialists seldom or never propose public ownership of public utilities or anything else for the purpose of securing or establishing equal rights, but because they think things will be better done, which I deny, for by making an employee of a private company an employee of the Government will not give him a greater intellect or greater skill.

This being so, no other reason exists for the public ownership of public utilities but to establish equal rights. The true line of division between socialism and democracy does not lie at the end of governmental officialdom and where public utility corporations begin, but at the end of public utility corporations and where strictly private business begins.

Wherever two or more companies would interfere with one another or combine to the detriment of the public when granted a franchise in public business, and when any number of men can be in the same business without a franchise that is private business, with which the government has nothing more to do than to leave strictly alone and not interfere with it even to the extent of taxing or subsidising it.

CHAS. H. CILISKE

SAMPLES OF CHOICE GRAIN FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF SEED

Editor Morning Times.

Dear Sir,—By instructions of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture another distribution will be made this season of samples of the most productive sorts of grain to Canadian farmers for the improvement of seed. The stock for distribution is of the very best and has been secured by the Director of the Experimental Farms from the record breaking crops recently had in the Canadian North-West. It will be worth while for farmers generally to renew their seed of oats when varieties which have produced more than 100 bushels per acre can be had. The distribution this spring will consist of samples of oats, spring wheat, barley, field peas, Indian corn and potatoes. Every farmer may apply, but only one sample can be sent to each applicant, hence if an individual receives a sample of oats he cannot also receive one of wheat, barley or potatoes, and applications for more than one sample for one household cannot be entertained. These samples will be sent free of charge through the mail.

Applications should be addressed to the Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, and may be sent in any time before the 15th of March, after which the lists will be closed, so that all the samples asked for may be sent out in good time for sowing. Parties writing should mention the sort or variety they would prefer, and should the available stock of the kind asked for be exhausted, some other good sort will be sent in its place.

WM SAUNDERS
Director Experimental Farms

Ottawa, Jan. 22, 1902.

OH, FOR A CROMWELL

Editor Morning Times.

Sir—It should swell an Englishman's heart with satisfaction to know that he sprang from a race that produces such superb examples of mankind as Secretary Chamberlain, who, in answering the swash-buckler abuse of members of the German Reichstag, egged on by Chancellor Von Buelow, (and who would if they dared shake their fists under an Englishman's nose) in a speech at Birmingham, in a gentlemanly manner, thus exclaimed: "What I have said I have said. I withdraw nothing; I qualify nothing; I defend nothing. I will not follow the example that has been set me." On the other hand, how largely did Chancellor Von Buelow draw in his horns and bleat as feebly as a sucking calf, as follows: "But if this repudiation (of Chamberlain's sharp thrust) is to be an excuse for leading us into a different attitude regarding the South African war, or a pretext for creating unfriendly relations between ourselves and a people with whom we were never in hostility, and to whom we are also bound by weighty interests, I will have nothing to do with anything of the kind."

Well might the Chancellor call them "weighty interests," seeing that the whole "caboodle" of German princes and princesses, in the remotest manner related to the English royal family, are receiving pensions from the people of England, being deprived of which would leave many of them to labor with their hands for a living. Sorry am I that a majority of the English people have apparently lost the grand spirit of Cromwell and his ironsides, who would quickly send back to Hanover the whole Guelph tribe, and thus rid themselves of an intolerable burden.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are Not Too Far Away to do Business in.

CABLE COMMUNICATION brings the Canadian investor into almost as close touch with the South African market as the British or Continental investor, and it is a well known fact (among intelligent people) that the London, England, market is the MINING MARKET OF THE WORLD. As we receive cables daily, the Canadian investor is placed by this means on an almost equal footing with the English investor.

We give the names of half a dozen of different companies in which we have done an extensive business during the past two months, showing low prices at which we handled these shares and the present prices:

	Low Price.	Present Price.	Advance.
Heidelburgs........	12s 6d	19s od	$1 62
Klerksdorp........	11s od	16s od	1 25
Witkopje........	10s 6d	16s od	1 37
Salisbury........	20s od	28s 6d	2 12
Chartereds........	£3 6s od	£4 9s od	5 75
Oceanas........	£2 2s od	£2 7s 6d	1 37

These are only a few instances, but numbers of others could be mentioned showing equally large or larger advances, and all our advices indicate that the upward movement in Kaffir (South African) stocks has hardly commenced. Of the above companies it is predicted that Heidleburgs and Salisburys will touch £5, and Witkopje, Klerksdorps and Oceanas are expected to show a profit of from 200 to 400 per cent on present prices. In addition to securing the best representatives possible in London, England, and receiving advices from such source regarding the condition of the market, we have also our SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.

South African shares bought on 20 per cent. margin or for cash as desired. Direct communication with London by cable.

Write or call for our booklet or any further information desired.

A NEW YORK NEWSPAPER ON THE BOER WAR

The Brooklyn Eagle Speaks on Britains Behalf

The Great Journal Finds Britain in the Right

The Boers Should Yield Now and Save Further Loss of Life

New York, Jan. 28—Not all of the United States papers see only one side of the British-Boer controversy, and that the Boer side. The Brooklyn Eagle, for one, does not hesitate to declare that the Boers are debarred from asking the intervention of other nations by reason of having themselves chosen to abide by the arbitrament of war. It says:

"The question of responsibility runs clear back to the beginning of the war. The Boers took up arms and invaded British territory when they thought they had caught the English unprepared, and at a propitious season for their own soldiers. The immediate results proved the shrewdness of their move. They swept down into Natal almost unhindered and inflicted serious losses. But at the same time they put out of the question any settlement except the gage of battle. The Authority to which the Boers are most fond of appealing declares that he who takes the sword shall perish by the sword, but their preachers always skip that verse."

The Eagle goes on to say that by all the rules of civilized warfare, and by all the dictates of humanity, the party fairly beaten in an appeal to battle should yield. This is a view that is certainly not given the weight it is entitled to by the anti-British press of the States and the continent. The Boers precipitated the war. They were beaten months ago; to-day their cause is represented only by bands of guerillas. The concentration camps are one of the results of this persistent struggle by roving bodies, and if the camps are not all they might be the whole responsibility certainly does not rest on the British, whose conduct of the war has been marked by humanity and consideration unheard of in any other war of which civilization has record. Our Brooklyn contemporary, on this feature of the discussion, drives home the fact that the Boers, in surrendering, have nothing to be afraid of: "One war and three years' time does not change the instincts and traditional policy of a great people. The English have a long record of good government for their colonies, of giving liberty, comfort and content to the alien peoples whom they govern. The Boers went to war to prove that they were not British subjects. That was the whole controversy. They have been whipped down to a point where organized resistance is hopeless. They keep up a guerilla warfare on that one question of allegiance. If their flying parties of raiders would come in organised government, organised industry would begin in their country with the new year and organised local self-government would follow just as soon as it was clear that such government was not a cloak under which future insurrections could be built up."

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA

The Feeling in the United States in its favor Growing

Chicago, Jan. 28 — The Times-Herald says: "Our largest exports to Canada consist of manufactures of iron and steel. Canada seeks a reduction of our tariff on fish, lumber and coal, all of which we need. Unless we make some reciprocal deal with Canada we are likely to see her free list curtailed at our expense, while the preferential tariff in favor of British goods may be changed so as to put American goods at a prohibitive disadvantage in the Canadian market. If Congress is wise it will make provision for the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty with Canada before anything intervenes to give our profitable mutual trade a serious setback."

BRITISH TAX PAYER IN GOOD POSITION

More Lightly Taxed Than any Other Nation in the World

POSITION OF THE TAXPAYER

Sir Robert Giffen Published an Article that Shows How Lightly the Nations is Taxed Compared to Other Nations

London, Jan. 28—Sir Robert Giffen has published a series of recommendations on the subject of taxation, which fairly represent the general opinion of the tax-paying classes. Everybody knows that the population of Great Britain is more lightly taxed for imperial purposes than any other country in the world. The income tax payer naturally grumbles while paying 14d. in the pound for a badly conducted war. The legatees and heirs of testators leaving property also grumble, but when these classes are deducted nobody feels taxation. There is a trifling impost on tea and sugar, but if a man avoids spirits, expensive wines or tobacco he contributes little or nothing to the revenue. A non-smoking teetotaller, is as nearly exempt from taxation in England as it is possible to be. The income tax-payers, who were willing to pay 1 shilling and 2 pence in an emergency, are not willing to do so now that the war has become chronic. This deficit in the budget will involve the readjustment of the whole incidence of taxation. This readjustment gives to the government of the day the opportunity of paying Germany back in the currency she best understands. "Do ut des" was Bismark's principle. England has now received from Germany a series of slights, insults and attacks, which, though slowly appreciated, have, nevertheless, sunk deeply into the popular mind. A 10 per cent. duty on some of the manufactures imported from Germany will enable the German public to ascertain the price of the policy adopted by their statesmen. A German friend of mine, writing from Berlin this week, says, "And now I must ask you a riddle: How on earth has this country got the reputation of commercially conquering the world? The very worst descriptions of the distress you read in the papers cannot be so bad as reality is. I am in a position to judge this, as our works employ about 300 men. And trade is in exactly the same position. Hundreds of fellows are without jobs. In short, everybody has reason to complain. Even our ministers and statesmen begin to do so, and they are, as you know, the very last men in the world to bother themselves about such problems."

POLICY OF CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED STATES

Lord Salisbury's Policy Shown in Recent Disclosures—Comments on Germany—Suggestion as to Pressure on Americans.

London, Jan. 27.—The general feeling evoked here by Lord Cranborne's disclosure of the British attitude in the Spanish war is one of quiet satisfaction. There were far more influences favorable to Spain at work here before the war began than the newspapers knew of. The fact that the British Ministry not alone resisted them for itself, but emphatically stood in the way of their success with other powers, illustrates afresh how firm Lord Salisbury's conviction is that the friendliest possible co-operation with America is Great Britain's true policy in foreign affairs. As regards the time chosen for the disclosure, on the eve of Prince Henry's visit to America, official circles smile at the idea that the Foreign Office intended to make a counter stroke, intended, that is, to follow up Mr. Chamberlain's thrust at Chancellor von Bulow by spoiling any possible political effect of Germany's present bid for American friendship.

OFFICIAL POSITION.

The official position may be summed up thus: "We should have been quite content to leave the matter where President McKinley left it at Buffalo, but for repeated, even semi-official, continental innuendos, calculated to misrepresent the facts. The continental journals are now busy in attempting a new interpretation of the facts, but Lord Cranborne's statement remains unimpeached and unimpeachable. They know the facts at Washington. We know them here; there is nothing more to say."

It is evident that the British Government does not feel called upon to particularise the point whence they received the proposals for pressure on the American Government or the exact character of those proposals, though the German comments this week have suggested the following pointed challenge. If Germany was so friendly to America throughout the struggle it has to explain the action of the German fleet in Manila Bay. Why do not Germany's friends in the American Senate call for the full report of all the transactions between the German, American and British naval forces in the Philippines during 1898?

ADVENTURER'S WIFE IN WANT

Canadian Spouse of Supposed French Nobleman Penniless

Chicago, Jan. 28 — While Charles Jules Francois, who has posed before Chicago society as Count De Neufchateau, is a prisoner at the Harrison street station his wife is a penniless wanderer. Following the arrest of her husband, Mrs. Francois, who until three years ago was Ethel Mary Hutchinson, a well-known Montreal belle, was turned out of her apartments in the Auditorium Annex. At the time of the arrest she had no money and she was compelled to ask the management of the hotel for a loan of ten cents with which to pay her carfare to the home of friends on the south side. It has also developed that Francois stopped at the Hayes hotel and paid no board. He will have a hearing to-day.

It is the belief of the house detectives of the Annex, that Mrs. Francois, who is a young and handsome woman, is herself the victim of the man who is said to have swindled financiers and hotel keepers all over the United States and Canada. Their investigations have disclosed the fact that when she was married to Francois in St. Mary's church, Montreal, 1899, the man was then posing as a wealthy steel magnate.

The career of the pretended count has been an extended one since his marriage with Miss Hutchinson. As general, count, engineer and financier he has traveled through North America, it is said, swindling hotel-keepers and duping merchants and bankers. In Canada Francois posed as the friend and associate of Charles M. Schwab, the millionaire president of the United States Steel Corporation and of H. C. Frick, the former partner of Andrew Carnegie. A letter from President Schwab was found among his belongings yesterday.

When the man's description and name were telegraphed through the country light was thrown on his career. Letters and despatches received by the police from Boston, Toronto, Montreal, Cleveland, Pittsburg, and Philadelphia tell of his manipulations.

GUARDS OFF FOR THE BOER WAR

Girls They Leave Behind Sob and Cling to Their Necks

London, Jan. 28—The brilliancy of the king's escort of Life Guards, whose bands kept constantly playing, was nothing to what occurred earlier in the day, when the Guards' re-enforcement left their barracks en route for South Africa.

The Guardsmen tramped through the dark streets of the metropolis at 6 o'clock in the morning, accompanied by an uproarious mob of civilian friends, singing songs to the accompaniment of the band. The songs and music, however, did not drown the crying of women, who clung to the necks and arms of almost every man in the contingent.

DENOUNCED BETTING

Rev. D. O. Crossley Speaks Strongly Against Gambling

At the Charlotte street Methodist church on Sunday night, Rev. D. O. Crossley took occasion to refer to what he considered the greatest evil connected with sporting events. He had received information that at the hockey match on Friday night between Peterborough and Port Hope that a large sum of money—nearly $2,000—had changed hands. In the course of his remarks he strongly denounced the gambling element, and hoped for the day to come soon when these evils would be done away with.

DEMISE OF PETER HENRY

He Passed Away Yesterday Morning at St. Joseph's Hospital

The death occured yesterday morning at St. Joseph's Hospital, of Mr. Peter Henry, second son of the late Thomas Henry, after having been in that institution for over a month, suffering from cancer of the tongue. Deceased was 39 years of age, and until about four years ago, was a resident of the town, and was most popular amongst a very large circle of friends. For fiveyears before leaving town he was engaged in the well-known mercantile firm of Henry & Co., and for fifteen years previous had been employed with Mr. Jas. Stevenson, ex-M. P. About four years ago, deceased went to Seattle, and took a position with "Catholic Progress," with which publication he was connected until he was forced through illness to return to Peterborough. Mr. Henry's ready wit and genial disposition made him many friends who will learn with the deepest sorrow of his death.

The sympathy of the entire community will go out to the family, who have been so stricken with sorrow in the past few months.

The funeral will take place to-morrow from the family residence, Sherbrooke street.

BOARD OF HEALTH

Met Yesterday Afternoon and Discussed Matters of Importance—Accounts Passed

The Board of Health met in the Town Clerks Office yesterday afternoon. Those present were, Mayor Denne, Messrs Metheral, Byers, Dr. Moher, McPherson, Schneider and Dr. Burnham.

Dr. Greer acting M. H. O.

Mayor Denne moved, seconded by Mr. McPherson, That Dr. Moher be appointed chairman.—Carried.

The Mayor reported verbally that Dr. Illingham had left the smallpox tent, as the patient was sufficiently recovered for him to leave, and had been paid $200, and that in connection with the quarantine at D. Thorntons he had paid to Thornton $42. He also reported regarding other expenses in connection with the smallpox.

Mr. McPherson moved, seconded by Mr. Metheral, That the payments reported by the Mayor be confirmed.—Carried.

Dr. Burnham moved, seconded by Mr. Byers, That this Board recommend that the R. C. Separate School Board have the Lake Street School disinfected under the supervisions of the Acting Medical Health Officer, and that the M.H.O. be authorized to have circulars printed giving directions for checking the spread of diphtheria &c., and that the Sanitary Inspector deliver the notices to such house holders as the M.H.O. deems necessary. Carried.

Meeting then adjourned.

REPUBLIC OF FRANCE BESET BY PERILS

Ceasarism Appears as a Foe to Republican Institution

A NAPOLEON'S AMBITION

He Declares His Desire to be Emperor of the French without Revolution

The Perils to Which the Republic is Subjected Clearly Defined—The Royalist Cause Likely to Make Trouble

Paris, Jan. 28 — Waldeck-Rousseau's brilliant and powerful speech at St. Etienne — the formal commencement of the Ministerial electoral campaign —has profoundly impressed France. He has clearly indicated the perils to which the third republic is now exposed, and has predicted that the "coming consultation with the country,"—as he styles the parliamentary elections — the friends of Republican institutions will win the greatest victory they have ever known.

"Our foes we know now as we have known them before," said the Premier.

"Formerly the anti-Republican coalition took its name from Boulanger. To-day it is Nationalism, in which each faction thrives upon the expecgectation of duping the rest. To-morrow it will be Caesarism. Boulangerism is a vain memory; Nationalism—we have pulled its teeth and clipped its claws, and now we come to bury Caesar."

In this graphic way the head of the "Government of Republican defense, the Cabinet which has lasted longest and accomplished most since the fall of the second Empire, has flung down the glove to treason. During the next four months France will be in a sea of popular unrest and agitation.

The Cabinet has all along been largely dependent on the Socialist vote, without whose co-operation it could scarcely have lasted six months. During the previous session of Parliament the Socialists were conciliated by the Law of Associations. Had it not been for the action of the government against the religious orders the Socialists would have insisted on a progressive income tax and an old age pensions bill.

It remains to be seen, however, whether Waldeck-Rousseau can play the game of Republican concentration indefinitely. Many sagacious Frenchmen are asking themselves who could take the place of the strongest government the third Republic has known. An alternative Republican government, they will tell you, is scarcely practicable, for while there are many Republican statesmen, few have shown the adaptability of M. Waldeck-Rousseau.

"We must face the possible alternatives," said a well-known Paris journalist. "The Nationalists wish for a dictator, but are unable to produce one. The Duc D'Orleans has steadily lost ground since he endeavored to go to the front.

"Consequently the more conservative elements in French politics who fear Socialism are turning their eyes toward the Bonapartists, as rallying many strong political factors. They are looking to Brussels and asking of what stuff Victor, the heir of the Napoleons, is made.

Prince Victor Napoleon is presumably the Caesar whom M. Waldeck-Rousseau is getting ready to "bury." He has recently declared his desire to be "the Emperor of the French without distinction of party, creed or interest." Beyond this he has neither agitated nor advertised. He possesses one valuable quality that is wanting in some of his rivals—he knows how to play a waiting game.

True, he has neither funds nor organization, and his party in Parliament is infinitesimal, but he is in no way worse off than was Napoleon III when he made his futile attempts at Boulogne and Strasburg. He could, moreover, count on the tacit support of many elements that were consistently hostile to Napoleon II.

M. Waldeck-Rousseau's cabinet has survived many a crisis and displayed a vitality unprecedented in France. It will confront Caesarism as sternly as it has confronted Nationalism. But the approaching contest will have world-wide interest, for it is the unexpected that usually happens in France.

SPECIAL MEETING

Of the Town Council to Give the Waterworks By Law its Third Reading—Council will Meet Again To-Night

The Town Council met in special session last night, when there were present:

Mayor T. H. G. Denne and Aldermen Shortly, Rush, McGreggor, Morrison, Clinkscale, Batten, Best and Roger.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and confirmed.

WATERWORKS BY-LAW.

A by-law to authorise the borrowing of $220,000 for the purchase of the waterworks passed its third reading.

VICTORIA MUSEUM.

Ald. Shortly moved, seconded by Ald. Edgecumbe—That Aldermen Corkery and Edgecumbe be appointed to represent the town on the board of management of the Victoria Museum.—Carried.

Council then adjourned till this evening at eight o'clock.

THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

That the population of Ontario has increased by the meagre number of 51,000 in ten years is disheartening. The natural increase alone, without counting immigrants, should have been at least 200,000. After all the booming and bragging done about our supposed development, we are revolving like a top and making no progress, all the while listening to the hum. No arguments can gainsay the facts. As usual some journals are flourishing herrings, to draw people off the scent, but the people of Ontario are not fools and will certainly want to know the why and wherefore. The province has shared in the general prosperity of the Dominion, but whilst every province but ours has shown a respectable increase in population, the Province of Ontario will lose in the number of its representatives at Ottawa no less than six. The number of our loss at Ottawa represents our falling behind in comparison with the other provinces. The unit of representation was fixed by the British North America Act, and there we are. Our loss in prestige and importance is tremendous, and that we should lose in the number of our representatives at all is a very serious reflection on somebody. What the loss would have been if it had not been for nature coming to our aid in mineral resources it is difficult to surmise. This shouting about the development of New Ontario becomes ridiculous, in view of these facts. Why provide for an overflow when there isn't any? It is time to quit talking politics. We must take stock. If the old system maintained for so many years in spite of protest of allowing our logs to be taken across the lake for American sawing—if this policy were stilll continued, we should all be somewhere else by this time. It is disgraceful that a province so splendid as ours should have fallen so far behind.

DEATH OF MRS. LACHAPELLE

Recently Underwent an Operation from Which She Did not Recover

The death yesterday of Eliza Brabant, wife of Mr. Edward Lachappelle of Auburn, at St. Joseph's Hospital came as a great shock to her large circle of friends by whom she was held in the highest respect. Some days ago she underwent an operation at St. Joseph's Hospital, which, though from a medical point of view, was highly satisfactory proved of too exacting a character to permit of recovery.

Deceased was a daughter of the late Joseph Brabant of Seymour township and was forty-five years of age. Her death will be sorely felt by her husband and her brothers and sisters. The funeral will take place to-morrow at nine o'clock from the family residence Auburn, to St. Peter's Cathedral and from thence to the Roman Catholic Cemetery for interment.

Just a Cold in the Head

But if followed by another cold, or some extra exposure, is liable to result in nasal catarrh. Unless a radical cure is obtained, the throat, bronchial tubes and finally the lungs become affected. Nothing cures colds so quickly and pleasantly as Catarrhozone. The Inspector of Mines for Nova Scotia, Mr. Neville, says, "Catarrhozone is the best remedy I have ever used. It cured me of Catarrh of the head and throat, and I am pleased to recommend such a satisfactory remedy." Catarrhozone is a safeguard against colds, coughs and catarrh. It can be used while at work, in the church, theatre or street cars. Simply inhale Catarrhozone and it cures. Price $1. Small size, 25 cents. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston Ont.

BANQUETED BY THE MAYOR

Town Council, Civic Officers and Prominent Citizens Partook of Mayor Denne's Hospitality

After the Town Council concluded their business last night, Mayor Denne invited the Aldermen to adjourn to the Oriental Hotel where a spread was waiting for them. Arriving at the Oriental the party was considerably reinforced by the different civic officers of the corporation. The party, numbering about 30, proceeded to the large dining room and found there tables neatly decorated and laden with a sumptuous repast. The Mayor took his position at the head of the table with Mr. D. W. Dumble on his left and Mr. S. R. Armstrong on his right. The guests taking the seats assigned to them, the party proceeded to partake of the sumptuous feast prepared for them. Each guest was presented with a neatly arranged menu card, gotten up in book form, as a remembrance of the occasion. After full justice had been done to the excellent menu, the party enjoyed a smoke, during which the toast list was presented as follows:

THE KING.

Mayor Denne proposed—"God Save the King."

THE NEW MEMBERS.

Ald. Best proposed; Ald. McGregor and Morrison responded.

THE OLDER MEMBERS.

Ald. Morrison proposed; Ald. Best, Rush, Shortly, Clinkscale, Corkery, Edgecumbe and Batten responded.

PEACE AND PROSPERITY.

Ald. Shortly proposed; Mr. Dumble responded.

THE MAYOR.

Ald. Roger proposed; His Worship, Mayor Denne, responded.

THE TOWN OFFICIALS.

Ald. Corkery proposed; Chief Rossel, Messrs. Armstrong, [illegible], Dr. Moher, Dr. Greer, E. H. D. Hall, Sheriff Hall, Clarke, McGrath, McKee, Aldridge and Kincaid responded.

THE PRESS.

Ald. Rush proposed; Messrs. McKay, Clarry, and Hall, representing the Review, Examiner and Times, respectively, responded.

THE LADIES.

Ald. Batten proposed; Ald. Roger and Mr. Clarry responded.

OUR HOST AND HOSTESS.

On rising to respond to the toast, Mr. Graham was most heartily applauded. He said it had always been a pleasure to him to do any business with the mayor or council, and he thanked them for the hearty manner in which they responded to the toast.

On rising to respond to the toast to The Mayor, His Worship said:

Gentlemen,—I hardly know what to say in response to the hearty manner in which the toast has been proposed and accepted by you. I thank you all for the very hearty manner in which you drank to my health. I consider it a great honor to be elected Mayor of Peterborough, the first town in the first province of this great Dominion of ours. A year ago I reluctantly consented to be a candidate for the Mayor's chair, and I was elected. During the past year I did everything I could do to further the interests of the town and with the most hearty co-operation of the aldermen we accomplished a great deal, and, I think, conducted the business of the municipality in a satisfactory manner. This year I was again chosen to be Mayor, and was elected without opposition, an honor for which I am truly grateful. This year the council has a great deal of very important business to transact, and I think that with the same assistance I received last year I will be able to give a good account of my stewardship. One important step has been taken, and that is the purchase of the waterworks and I think with two good men and myself that we can make a successful start this year. No one has any idea of the amount of time required to attend to the duties of a public office. I hope with the assistance of this year's council that further progress will be made and that the relations of the council will be as cordial this year as they were last.

In responding to the different toasts everyone complimented the mayor and council on receiving their election by acclamation. The evening was most profitable and enjoyable and will lead to a more friendly and social feeling between the officers of the town in its many branches. The town officers were heartily commended for the most courteous and obliging manner in which they attended the many requests made on them.

The gathering broke up at an early hour after singing the national anthem.

Mayor Denne has proved himself to be an able an efficient manager of the business of the town, and last night proved himself to be a most agreeable and entertaining host. The council and town officials of 1902 will long remember the pleasant evening spent as the guests of Mayor Denne.

Boer Prisoners of War as Matriculants to University---Botha's Regrets

Important Documents Captured by Col. Remington at Schimmelhoek—Boers Were Repulsed

London, Jan. 27.—What is regarded as an important capture is that of General Benjamin Viljoen, who, according to a despatch from Lord Kitchener, has recently been taken in the neighborhood of Lydenburg. Viljoen was Botha's most able aide-de-camp, and the event will undoubtedly have a good effect on the Boers north of the Delagoa Bay railroad line.

BOTHA'S REGRETS.

London, Jan. 27.—Lord Kitchener has cabled interesting and important extracts from the official correspondence of Botha, which was captured by Col. Remington at Schimmelhoek. Among other documents is a letter to his "provisional" government, in which he explains his failure to enter Natal. He says:—"To my regret, I must report that it was impossible for my commandoes to enter Natal because the enemy was aware of our plans, and he already had troops just opposite all the drifts on the Buffalo River."

BOERS REPULSED.

Johannesburg, Jan. 27.—Commandant Boyers made an unsuccessful attempt to rush the blockhouses near Pietersburg the other day. After firing for twenty minutes the Boers cleared out, leaving three dead and three wounded on the field.

IN THE EASTERN TRANSVAAL.

Standerton, Jan. 27.—The British columns operating in the Eastern Transvaal have been particularly successful of late in surprising laagers and capturing Boers. The lines of blockhouses, restricting the enemy's movements are largely responsible for British success. The area of this region is nearly 12,00 square miles, and affords plenty of room for the enemy, but its feeding capacity is being gradually reduced to nil. The British columns moving up and down this portion of the country are slowly but surely depleting it of everything eatable.

BOER COLLEGIANS.

Cape Colony, Jan. 27.—The examination lists of the Cape University published to-day, show that a number of Boer prisoners o war at Simonstown have been given during their confinement an opportunity to obtain a college education. Nine prisoners at the Simonstown camp have passed the preliminary examination. Some of the prisoners at St Helena have passed the higher examination, and applications have been received from prisoners of war at Bermuda to enter for the examinations next December.

PRO-BOER PETITION TO BE SENT TO CONGRESS

Signed By Over 200,000 Persons in The Union

Confident That a Sympathetic Expression Will be Favorably Entertained by Great Britain

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 28 — Webster Davis has gone to New York with a petition bearing the signatures of 212,694 citizens of the South and West, which is eventually to go before Congress, asking for national sympathy for the Boers.

The signatures have been received in answer to an appeal sent out by Mr. Davis four months ago, and are addressed to Congressmen, asking them to vote for a resolution already framed.

The petition asks Congress to declare "that the people of the United States feel a strong sympathy for the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State; that they are pained by the report of the present sufferings of this Christian people, and they unite in the hope that this declaration, which they feel it their duty to make, will be favorably considered by the Government of Great Britain in a settlement of their unfortunate differences."

Mr. Davis himself intends to turn over the petition to the Boer Consul in New York, to be placed in the proper hands.

SUCCESSFUL STUDENTS OF THE CANADA BUSINESS COLLEGE, CHATHAM, ONT.

On Jan. 6th, Harry Collins, a former student of the above institution and an ex-public school teacher in Kent County, secured the appointment as Commercial Master in the Collegiate Institute, Chatham, Ont., at a salary of $900 per annum. Mr. Collins has been holding a similar position with the Quebec High School, and in releasing him from his engagement there, that board left the matter of choosing his successor very much to himself, simply making the conditions that he should be some person who had had a successful experience as public school teacher, and had also been a graduate from the Canada Business College. The result was that on Jan. 15th, Mr. Herman Jenner, of Charing Cross, another graduate from the college and an ex-public-school teacher of Kent County, was sent to Quebec to fill the position of Commercial Master in the High School there, made vacant by Mr. Collins leaving, the initial salary being $700.

These are only fair samples of what this excellent school of business training is continuously doing for its graduates.

They have supplied about eighty-five teachers for business colleges and schools with Commercial Departments in the past, and help of this kind were sent to the management, and could not be filled on account of not having sufficient qualified material on hand at the time.

Mr. W. C. Campbell, of Wingham, Ont., another former public school teacher, from Huron County, and double gold medalist at the June examinations, 1901, commenced with the Sutherland, Innes Co., of Chatham, Ont., on Jan. 7, and is the 34th student of that institution that has been taken into the employ of this firm.

Miss May Dalgleish, an ex-public-school teacher of Middlesex County, and a student of the college, has taken the position of stenographer with the Stott Milling Co., Detroit, Mich.

Among positions filled during the early part of January are the following:

Bart Sheldrick as assistant bookkeeper with the Wm. Gray & Sons Co., Limited, Chatham, Ont.; Miss Edith Ryan as [illegible] with the Chatham [illegible] Co., Chatham, Ont.; Bert [illegible] as assistant bookkeeper with John R. Sullivan & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Miss [illegible] Fleming as book-keeper with Baker & Robinson, Dundas, Ont.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE

Take the city of Portland as an example, where prohibition has been the law for fifty years. That city has a population of 40,000. The Committee of Fifty in 1898 reported that the law is not obeyed there at all, except that the trade is carried on secretly, which was formerly carried on openly. A great deal of the drinking is, however, not even secret. The report of the committee says:

"While the public temptation had in some degree diminished by the abolition of 'gilt-edge' saloons, there lurked a greater danger in the many clubs which had sprung up, chiefly for drinking purposes. No distilleries or breweries were suffered to exist in the city. Yet neither the supply nor the price of liquors was lessened, but the quality was worse. While the traffic at open bars had from time to time been to some extent driven away from the principal streets, still open bars existed in large numbers. Furthermore, to those who shunned the open bars the apothecary shops supplied liquor by the bottle as frequently as desired."

A new and vicious class sprung up in the population who were most active in times of the strictest enforcement of the law. There arose pocket peddlers, most of whom were young men who loiter about the streets and wharves in the lower quarters of the city, and supply customers from the bottle. They serve a drink which produces "a violent and dangerous form of intoxication."

In 1898 one hundred and sixty-one persons paid a tax for the purpose of selling liquor in Portland. They were scattered among the following places where liquor was sold:—First, the ordinary saloons, then the hotel bars, the apothecary shops, bars, including the so-called eating houses, the kitchen bars, the pocket peddlers, the bottling establishments, the jobbing houses, the express companies and the clubs. Within a stone's throw of the G.T.R. station about a dozen saloons are clustered.

The gentlemen who investigated the state of things in Portland for the Committee of Fifty states that in a score or so of such saloons visited by him from six to twenty persons were found who were there to drink, most of them young men, some of them boys between twelve and sixteen years of age. Sometimes older girls appeared to drink and to talk with the men. The kitchen bars, which numbered at that time about eighty, are found in the alleys, tenements and tumble-down houses in the poorer sections of the city. They infest whole blocks in different parts of the town. At least five of the principal hotels sell liquor. They are sometimes fined, but the fine as a rule does not reach a high license fee. Then there is this sentence in the report of the committee:—

"The drug stores have ever been a fruitful source of drunkenness in Portland. About 20 of these exist simply for the purpose of selling liquor."

OUR PAST RECORD.

Our past record of successful catering to the wants of a critical public is the best guarantee we can offer to all who are not yet numbered among our permanent customers. Please remember that we make a specialty of filling physicians' prescriptions. Our stock of Perfumes, Toilet Articles, Brushes, Sponges, etc., is large and varied.

THE LATE CENSUS.

Population of Towns and Villages Given

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—The following is the returns of population of towns and villages in this locality:

Peterborough	11,239
Belleville	9,117
Port Hope	4,188
Deseronto	3,337
Madoc	1,157
Trenton	4,215
Perth	3,588
Campbellford	2,485
Hastings	815
Beaverton	855
Uxbridge	1,637
Havelock	981
Norwood	945
Midland	3,174
Fenelon Falls	1,133
Bobcaygeon	914
Omemee	574
Brockville	8,940
Millbrook	917
Bowmanville	2,731
Tweed	1,168
Stirling	845
Carleton Place	4,089
Smith's Falls	5,154
Cobourg	4,239
Oshawa	4,394
Whitby	2,110
Ashburnham	1,647
Lakefield	1,244
Orillia	4,908
Lindsay	7,003

It will thus be seen that Peterborough and Ashburnham combined had a population, when the census was taken, of 12,886. This has been increased several hundred since then, so that our population stands to-day at about 14,000 or 14,500.

PROGRESS AND SUCCESS.

Progress and success have been our business forward up to the present time. No need to enlarge on our dispensing facilities. This department is run on the most approved system; promptness and accuracy mark all our work.

We are daily renewing and assorting our stock of Perfumes, Atomizers, Sponges, Brushes, Combs and Toilet Goods.

THE PUBLIC VERDICT

The public verdict is immensely in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great family medicine of the present day and never fails to do what it promises. Paine's Celery Compound will permanently cure kidney disease, liver complaint, ills resulting from impure blood, dyspepsia, and stomach derangements. We sell the kind that cures. H. S. MACDONALD, Peterborough, Ont.

A Pathetic Letter

The following note, slightly soiled and bearing spots suspiciously like tear stains, was picked up near one of the Central school buildings the other day, and tells its own tale of stern devotion to duty on one hand and unmitigated anguish on the other: "Friend Roy,—I will write you a little note this evening to tell you that I have decided not to keep regular company with any boy while I am in school, for I must make use of my school time while I can; and besides, I have no desire to go with one boy all the time, anyway. So you needn't come any more at present, but we can still be friends, and I expect you can find someone you like better anyway, and so can I. You needn't answer this. Your everlasting friend."

OUR MOTTO:

"Accuracy, Care and Attention."

Our continued success in business is the best proof that we enjoy the unbounded confidence of the public. We dispense drugs with the greatest possible accuracy, care and attention. Our stock of Toilet Preparations is always up-to-date, and our Perfumes the finest and cheapest.

ALL RANKS AND CONDITIONS of our people are now using Paine's Celery Compound, the great health restorer. No other medicine in the world has such a record of cures to its credit. It makes new, fresh blood corrects digestion, gives energy to body, nerves and brain. If you feel unwell, give Paine's Celery Compound a trial. JOHN NUGENT, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

COUNTY COUNCIL REFORM

Blenheim Township Wants to Go Back to the Old Reeve System Again.

The Blenheim Township Council are taking the lead in an agitation against the present system of representation in the County Council. They have prepared a petition to the Ontario government to be presented at the present session asking that the system be changed and that the reeves of the various townships form the County Council. The Blenheim Council will before presenting the petition ask the approval of every township and town and village council in the province. It is said that there is a unanimous feeling against the present system. The Peterborough municipalities are strongly in favor of a return to the old system.

NOTE AND COMMENT

The Boers are said to be willing to abandon their demand for full independence. Before Kitchener is done with them they'll be willing to do a great deal more than that.

•• • ••

Germany is face to face with one of the worst periods of depression it has ever experienced. Not less than 35,000 workingmen are without employment or means of support in the city of Berlin alone, and systems of public relief at all the industrial centres are being rapidly established, to alleviate the distress of the unemployed.—Leslie's Weekly.

A mother not spoken well of by her children is an enemy of the state; she should not live within the kingdom's wall.

The Author's First Reverse.

On reading A First Acceptance, in the September "Contributors' Club," we wondered if the author had ever contemplated a far more surprising experience than the first acceptance, and that is the first rejection after the first acceptance! That is indeed a crisis in the young author's career. Up to the time when he received his first acceptance, the novice, however high his conceit had swelled, as each new plan and aspiration feebly projected itself on paper, had yet in the bottom of his soul realized that his arms were untried, and that he might be riding for a fall. But when tangible proof of his first success had reached him, and the magic words "The check will follow upon publication" had dazzled his vision, how proudly he scanned the future which was his by virtue of the ink-bottle!

Idea after idea floated before him; "songs without words" to which he would supply nouns and adjective; thoughts inadequately expressed, fancies inhospitably received, which he would succor by the might of his right hand. Or perhaps the didactic devil tempted him, and he fancied the whole world his congregation, to whom he would preach at his leisure.

Alas, fellow scribbler, passing through this Fool's Paradise, we pity you; by the Law of the Jungle—

"As high as we have mounted in delight,
In our dejection do we sink as low."

Perhaps the next step will lead you to the Pons Asinorum which ends in the Via Dolorosa. We have crossed it ourselves, we who had thought our feet so firmly planted on the ladder of literature that we needed only to mount higher and higher till we o'ertopped the stars.

When we had spent our first check a thousand times in anticipation, and at least twice in reality, we decided in gratitude to honor with our continued favor that hospitable magazine which had at last recognized our genius.

No longer stealing out at night to conceal the trembling fingers with which we dropped that long white envelope into the post-box, but flauntingly, in the garish daylight, in the face of all men, we sent forth our manuscript as a conqueror demanding tribute.

Then we waited; security is ever serene. Poor tremblers on the threshold may listen with beating heart for the postman's quick peal of the bell, or look longingly at his non-committal gray coat and his fatal bag. All these sensations were of the past for us; they belonged to the era before we were recognized.

Then suddenly a bolt from the blue—that homing pigeon, our manuscript, returns to us again. At first astonishment is paramount—there must be some mistake. Next wrath—it is a conspiracy to defraud us of our just reward; an envious world cannot tolerate our success. Last, a still, small, spiteful voice within us whispers: "Your bubble is pricked. I always told you that there wasn't much in you, after all!"

What happens to us then? Where are our visions of thoughts clamoring to be clothed in winged words? Where are the songs only waiting to sing themselves through our lips to a silent world? What has become of our pulpit?

How are the mighty fallen! How doth the city which we would have enlightened sit solitary! Ours is no common sorrow; we are none of those who have only suffered the casual buffetings of fortune; ours is the bitter trial of the man who has faced betrayal in the house of his friend.

Fellow quill-drivers, answer us: is there any shock to vanity like unto this, or any lesson in modesty?—"Atlantic Monthly."

The Wandering Shade.

Then came I to a knight who stood before the wall swearing mightily.

Now there was no one near him, and he stood looking at a small black box which hung against the said wall. Yet sware he with exceeding great fervor and many gnashings of the teeth and tearing of the hair, saying:

"Blank - blankety - blank - blank to blanknation! Why 'nell don't you gimme Black 7-11-44?"

Then came a small spirit voice from the mysterious box:

"Number, please!"

Then did the angry knight curse still more fearfully and clutch the black box from the wall and cast it upon the floor and spring up and down on it until naught was left but splinters and wire. Whereupon I approached to expostulate with him.

"Lo, friend," quoth I, "this is unseemly! What hath the unfeeling box done that thou thus gettest upon thine ear?"

Alas! the words he spake to me I may not even repeat; but suffice it to say that even yet the remembrance of them maketh my ghostly hair to curl; and I cannot even think of the black box without involuntarily dissolving into thin air—which same causeth me sundry and much inconvenience.

But 'tis truly a wonderful age and a strange land where men have prepared against the wall a machine to which they retire when angry and ease their feelings by swearing into it.

But it puzzleth me to figure out what becometh of all the profanity. And what meaneth the spirit when it answereth in a still, squeaking voice:

"Number, please!"—San Francisco "Bulletin."

"I Advise All women who suffer from chronic diseases to write to Dr. Pierce."

That advice is based upon practical experience. After suffering for months, and finding no benefit result from the treatment of the local physician, Miss Belle Hedrick wrote to Dr. Pierce for advice. She acted on the advice, regained her appetite, recovered her strength, and gained several pounds in weight.

"Write to Doctor Pierce" is good advice for every woman to follow. It costs nothing. Dr. Pierce invites sick women to consult him, by letter, free. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

In a little over thirty years, Dr. Pierce, assisted by his staff of nearly a score of physicians, has treated and cured over half a million women.

"I suffered from female weakness for five months," writes Miss Belle Hedrick of Nye, Putnam Co., W. Va. "I was treated by a good physician, but he never seemed to do me any good. I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce for advice, which I received, telling me to take his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I took thirteen bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and eight of 'Golden Medical Discovery.' When I had used the medicine a month my health was much improved. It has continued to improve until now I can work at almost all kinds of housework. I had scarcely any appetite, but it is all right now. Have gained several pounds in weight. I advise all who suffer from chronic diseases to write to Dr. Pierce."

A NOVEL

Accordingly the Bellairs' coachman and footman, with the wide barouche, and its two sleek, handsome horses, were conveyed away from Maple Tree House up to the metropolis. The boxes were packed, and Northminster was robbed of its ruler for a little while.

Gentle, quiet, loving Marian Adair had soon worked her way into her aunt's warm heart, and between the two women, who had sorrowed and dreaded together, a bond had sprung up that would not easily be broken.

Lady Blanche stayed at a good old-fashioned hotel, and despite the fact that London was quite empty, she enjoyed her brief visit immensely. Marian Adair, too, was happy; her beloved was not dead; in time he would be back with her again—no amount of pain could null that pleasure —she would have been content to remain a cripple and a hunchback forever if her dear Craven could only be with her once again, with his frank, handsome face and merry, loving voice. But as a matter of fact, the great doctor's opinion had been productive of much pleasure and satisfaction to the girl's aunt, and altogether, Lady Blanche Bellairs was in the best of possible spirits, when she suddenly experienced a check, and a cloud fell on the brightness of her horizon.

As Marian and she were driving through London one afternoon, the second day of their arrival, Lady Blanche all at once gave a great start.

"Why, surely I cannot be mistaken," she said, hurriedly to herself, "that is Ormande!"

Marian's pale, thin face was suffused with a flush of delight. The child adored her big, tender-voiced cousin.

"Yes, yes, it is he, Aunt Blanche! Oh, do let us stop and speak to him!" she cried.

Accordingly the horses were pulled up, and as Ormande was passing the well-appointed carriage, his head bent dejectedly, his whole bearing as different to his former springy, bright, cheery, one, as it was possible to imagine, a voice suddenly reached his ears, and the next moment he was having his hand grasped by Marian's two small ones, and was meeting the gaze of her handsome perturbed eyes, that had a perfect world of questioning in their depths.

"I had no idea you were in town, Ormande. When did you come?" Lady Blanche asked, her anxiety forcing itself into her voice.

Ormande gave her the date, and she remembered at once that it was the day following the Brexley fete.

"You, too, have given me a surprise," he said, with a faint flicker of a smile. "It is a wonder to see you in London, Aunt Blanche."

"I came for Marian; Dr. Stewart ordered it!"

Lady Blanche was gazing at him fixedly. What had come to him? How changed he was! changed not only in appearance, but in voice and manner. He looked as if some blight had fallen on him, blotting out all his former brightness. What had happened? Lady Blanche moved uneasily on the soft cushions of the barouche. So he had been up in town a whole week, and she had been picturing him beneath the trees at Brexley with Barbara, and — — There was a look on the young man's face that his aunt neither understood nor liked. Her quick instinct warned her that she must be prepared for disappointment, and unconsciously a feeling of coldness and resentment flashed into her mind.

"You are looking ill, Ormande," she said, curtly. "What is the matter?"

Ormande smiled again faintly.

"There is nothing the matter Aunt Blanche; I am only a little tired. There is a good deal to do. We have had an epidemic of sickness in our parish lately."

Lady Blanche frowned.

"Your parish seems to be very unhealthy, Ormande. You are in a perpetual condition of epidemics. Is your holiday over?" this last question was put very abruptly.

Ormande nodded his head.

"Yes, it is over," he said, and his aunt fancied she detected a tiny ring of pleasure in the words.

"I thought you were at Brexley," she went on, her grievance coming uppermost again. "Why did you leave, and why did you not write and tell me you were in town?"

"I cry peccavi, Aunt Blanche," Ormande replied. "I have been going to write to you several times, but I have not had a moment."

"A pleasant existence for the future Earl of Thanecourt," observed Lady Blanche gloomily; then, very shortly, "and how did you leave Barbara?" she asked. She was anxious to learn if all was over, and her hope gone entirely.

"Miss Mostyn was well, I fancy," he answered half wearily.

Lady Blanche frowned, this time very deeply.

"Did you enjoy the visit? Is not Brexley Hall a charming old place? And the village, too, Ormande, should have pleased you, if——"

"I saw everything," the young man broke in hurriedly, "and I hope—you, behalf of that girl are not needed now, as, of course, being next-of-kin, she must inherit. I am glad, and yet I am sorry; it is such an awful state things. I am convinced she never went away of her own free will, her face was too sweet and true to belong to a bad woman; and he, at any rate, must be a villain to have tempted her as he has done. I cannot tell you, Otway, how grieved I am about this. I was a firm friend of her father's, and I know that this would just have broken his great, noble heart. Can you do nothing? Forgive me for suggesting it, but your vocation seems to fit you more for this task than myself. Something must be done now. She will be mistress of Charlton Abbey, and, as old Dalrymple's heiress, a person of importance, but even were she only a beggar I should feel the same. We can easily trace out this Smythe, and then the rest is clear——"

Ormande read no farther, for tears blinded his eyes. Had he not tried already, and had he not failed? Katharine, with her own hand, had cut herself adrift. Who could save her now?

CHAPTER XXV.

"You are worn out; let me take your place for an hour. I will call you if there is any need; you can trust me to do so."

Sister Dora hesitated, she glanced with her heavy eyes from the in-valid's ghastly, white face to the scarcely less pallid one of Katharine's

"You are not fit," she said, involuntarily, "and I am used to this, you know."

"Heaven forbid that you should be used to such a task as has been yours during the last few days. I cannot try to thank you, dear Sister Dora, for your goodness in coming back with me yesterday. I shudder to think what I should have done without you."

The nurse took one of Katharine's slender hands in hers, while a slight flush suffused her cheeks. "I do not often falter in my duty," she said, hurriedly, "but——"

Katharine stopped her gently.

"I understand! Ah, yes, I understand so well, and I see now I was selfish to bring you back, but you are such a comfort to me, such a comfort, you will never know how great."

Sister Dora gently caressed the pretty hand she held; there had sprung up in her heart suddenly a great sympathy and affection for this pale, beautiful girl, who called herself wife to the blasphemous bully whose coarse tongue and cruel words had driven her for a time from her task of nursing him. Sister Dora had no need of an interpreter to know that Katharine loathed and feared this man to whom she was bound; the look that came into the girl's lovely eyes sent a pang straight to the nurse's warm, gentle heart, and this look had seemed to deepen during the hours that had passed since the afternoon of the previous day, when Katharine had found her way to the nursing home to plead for her to return.

It was very strong now, that expression of intense, silent anguish, and there were traces, too, on the fair young face of such suffering as is fortunately rare. Sister Dora, in her life of ministration, had seen as much sorrow as it was possible to see but she had never before beheld such a look as lived on Katharine Smythe's exquisite face.

"You will make me vain," she said with a faint smile, though her eyes were wet; "I know I am supposed to be a decent nurse, but you make me out something more, my dear."

Katharine gave no answering smile, but she closed her fingers round the other's hand, while she fixed her gaze steadily on the sick man.

"You must go and rest," she said softly, after a moment's pause. "No, no! —I could not sleep, and the night hours are worse when one is doing nothing! They seem never-ending! Go. I will certainly call you if he gets restless, but the doctor said this narcotic would last probably till morning."

Sister Dora rose reluctantly. She looked anxiously at the girl, so slender and graceful in her simple white flannel dressing-gown, with her dark hair loose on her shoulders.

"My dear," she said, involuntarily, "you will forgive me, but have you no one to share this trouble with you? You are too young to bear such an anxiety all alone. This is the sunshine time of your life; you ought not to be cast into such shadows already. Have you no mother — no sister——?"

"No, I am alone!— quite alone!" Katharine uttered the words with unutterable sadness. They were so true —so very true. There was only one person in the whole world to whom she could turn in this trouble, and that was Gordon's mother, poor Lucy Smythe. But here again she dared not act as she would have done for Gordon, in his few sane moments, never ceased to impress on her that he absolutely refused to allow his mother to come to him or to be informed of his accident.

"I've got a wife, what more do I want?" he said, with a feeble grin. "A most devoted wife, too! Why don't you cut and run, eh, Katharine? Why don't you take your chance of getting away from me? Is it—is it because you are so fond of me that you cannot bear to leave me, even for a moment? —or is it" —and here he laid his hot hand on the girl's wrist, and drew her shrinkingly toward him —"is it that you fear me still? Aye! fear me even when I am lying stricken down? Is it because you know so well that, come what may, if you play me false, I will carry out my revenge, aye, even if it cost me my life?"

She knew he meant every letter of his threat; she knew if she were to take advantage of this illness to slip off her bonds and escape him, that so soon as the old vigor was returned to Gordon's frame, he would relentlessly seek out Ormande, her beloved, and work him the injury he had sworn to do.

But, apart from this, Katharine was, in every sense, a true woman. Evil as Gordon Smythe had proved himself to be in her life, no thought of leaving him, now this calamity had fallen upon him, ever crossed her mind. He was helpless and sick, and her place was by his side. No matter what had gone before, she could not and would not desert him now.

A Woman's Plea For Man's Rights.

THE papers had a story the other day that the President had refused promotion to an army officer because he had jilted his fiancee. Whether this is true or not, it's interesting. The President is a chivalrous man, and whatever he did really do about the officer's promotion, we may be sure that he condemned him for his ungallant behavior to the lady. Most men would condemn him. To go back on your best girl—especially when the wedding-cards are printed and the trousseau ready—is an offence few men would condone. Singularly enough, women—who are the sufferers by it—are very lenient to this infirmity of purpose.

I have often heard girls say, writes Josephine Bonner in the "Argonaut," that they would rather be jilted than married to a man who had lost his affection for them, and I think they told the truth. When Pope said every woman was at heart a rake he expressed his idea in coarse, eighteenth century English. What he meant to say was that every woman is at heart a sentimentalist. However fate and fortune may make her marry, she has her little dream of marrying for love. Presupposing that she is a "nice girl," she would rather be left like Ariadne than go on into the dark and unexplored places of matrimony with a man who no longer cared for her. I am inclined to think her respect for the man would not suffer much—might possibly increase—if he had the temerity to rise up and tell her he had made a mistake and did not love her. Women have been doing this themselves since Pandora opened the box, and nobody blamed them. It was a lady's privilege to change her mind, and that settled it. Maybe we are beginning to feel that the privilege is a little one-sided, and that down-trodden man ought now and then to have a holiday when he, too, can have caprices and not know whether he loves Polly or Sally best.

There is another point in his favor which the men who condemn him do not consider—the courage it takes. It takes nerve to head a cavalry charge in battle, to stand up in a duel, to enter a burning building, but it is nothing to the nerve it must take to look a loving woman in the eye and tell her you don't care for her. Men have not been doing this for centuries as women have, and they do not really understand the fell horror of it. I have no doubt many have gone so far as the front door, or even the hat-rack in the hall, fully intending to break their fetters; then, at the sound of a foot on the stairs, a frou-frou of skirts, have felt their courage oozing away, and decided a lifetime of living a lie was better than dealing one decisive, staggering blow. I don't know whether they were heroes, knaves, or fools—one often is confused in such decisions. Men, I think, would approve of them; women would be sentimentally harrowed, and in their hearts be just a little contemptuous.

The heroism of the situation would depend entirely on how the man acted for the next—say, twenty years. Anybody can be heroic for a moment; time is the test of the real thing. It would seem one of those noble, foolish actions, like the charge of the Light Brigade, which would be pitiful if they were not grand—to spend a lifetime living such a futile lie. It would be so little worth while, so little gain, for such a large expenditure of suffering. Whereas, if the man were not of the mould of heroes, let his wife see he had married her under protest, and that she bored him to death—what would be the gain then? Even if she had not a grain of pride, the woman could hardly be happy with such begrudged attentions and ungrateful companionship. As for the man, he would brood on his wrongs and bemoan his one moment of unselfishness, till a bear with a sore head would be an amiable companion compared to him. In the general distribution of new twentieth century privileges, I don't see why the right to change the mind in matters sentimental should not be now and then extended to the male of the species.

A Query.

If the farmer who tills
Makes his living by tillage,
Does the doctor who pills
Make his living by pillage?
—Philadelphia "Record."

The Origin of a Name.

DR. GEORGE DAVIDSON of the University of California has been wondering for four years past how Cape Nome got its name. Geography is his special field, and it is his professional concern to know the wherefore of geographical names. But "Nome" beat him. He set to work to trace it back to its origin, and the earliest appearance he could find for it was in a British Admiralty chart of 1853. That led him to surmise that the cape was named by officers of the English frigates "Herald" and "Plover" during an expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. So he wrote to the Admiralty Office in London to enquire if there were any "Nomes" on the list of men who sailed in those vessels. The reply, recently communicated by Dr. Davidson to the "National Geographic Magazine," was that when the chart in question was first made, aboard the "Herald," attention was called to this point by the mark (?Name). The chart was sent home in a hurry, and the draughtsman who inked it made the mark read "C. Name." But he did not make his "a" distinctly, and the Admiralty hydrographer made it "C. Nome." And as Cape Nome the point has been ever since, and is likely to remain so until it gets rich enough to support a board of aldermen. Then its name will be changed, for that is one of the mischiefs that aldermen can be trusted to do.

Easy Indifference.

"Why did we arrive late and leave before the opera was over?" asked the youngest daughter; "it was very enjoyable." "Of course it was," answered Mrs. Cumrox, "but, my dear, we had to show people that we didn't care whether we got our money's worth or not."—Washington "Star."

The orator commenced his peroration with these words: "As Lady Godiva said towards the end of her memorable ride, 'I am nearing my clothes.'"—"Sporting Times."

A Fashionable Sham.

A SHORT time after Mme. Sybil Sanderson's first debut in New York, when the papers were ringing with praises of her jewels, her beauty and her voice, she was the guest of honor at a dinner-party, at which her hostess remarked: "Those jewels that you wore in 'Manon,' Miss Sanderson, are the most beautiful that I have ever seen." "Good heavens!" cried Miss Sanderson, "you didn't think that they were real, did you? Those are only stage jewels. If they had been real, I would deserve all that the American papers have said about me."

The New York "Sun" declares that fashionable women are at present wearing quantities of false jewels cleverly made, and perfectly set in gold in simulation of the real article. One of the pictures of the Duchess of Manchester which was printed in the newspapers showed her wearing a pearl necklace which was said to be "the famous Manchester pearls." This claim was knocked in the head only the other day when a New York firm of manufacturers of imitation jewels began a suit against the duke for something like six hundred dollars for this very necklace for which his grace had failed to pay. "It has only been within the last few seasons," adds the "Sun," "that this vogue of artificial jewelry has become fixed. . . The possession of genuine pearls, for instance, is possible only to the very few, for necklaces of well-matched pearls are worth small and even large fortunes. Many of the most perfectly matched ropes have taken years in their accumulation, while others are heirlooms that have passed from one generation to another in the royal families of Europe. When the pearl necklace became so fashionable in America there was a demand for them that could not be supplied, and now nine-tenths of the beautiful ropes that are worn are false. The new imitation pearls are indistinguishable from the real except under a glass and to the eye of an expert. They are perfect in shape, finish, color, and the wonderful satiny surface that gives the pearl its beauty. . . . The diamond imitations are only effective at night, for this stone is one which most successfully defies the art of imitation. A counterfeit pearl takes an expert for its detection, while any one at all accustomed to handling diamonds can readily discover the imitation stone. The Paris makers are sending to this country now some very clever products in this line, the settings being artistic, and the stones tiny and closely set. These are extremely effective at night, and are worn for stage purposes by many actresses who are famous for their so-called diamond collections. These imitations are not cheap. On the contrary, they are constantly advancing in price. For hair ornaments the imitation stones are in much demand. There are some who say that they really outglisten the genuine diamond under the electric light. But they are impossible for wear in the daylight, and by no means approach the degree of perfection to which the pearl counterfeit has been brought."

Dinner at a Hundred Dollars a Plate.

ONE of the most remarkable private dinners in the history of Delmonico's was given in New York lately by Mr. George Heye. For the pleasure of entertaining nine guests from fifteen minutes past seven o'clock until half-past ten o'clock, Mr. Heye transformed the Red Room of Delmonico's into a miniature bower in a pine forest, and spread before them a repast which cost him about one hundred dollars for each of the ten covers laid. Hundreds of pine-boughs had been brought from the woods, and these were so adjusted upon the walls, ceiling and floor of the apartment as to completely conceal their original character. Invisible wires were stretched through them and connected with hundreds of small incandescent electric light globes, which peeped out from the green boughs on walls and ceiling. Each globe was shaped like an orchid, and shone with a pale-green light that lent reality to the semblance of the rare, woodland flower. Over the crash that covered the floor had been strewn pine-boughs, tangles of thick woodland moss, and bushels of autumn leaves in all their rich tints of scarlet, yellow and gray. A round table, eight feet in diameter, made of unfinished oak, rose from the litter of moss and leaves, and its stout legs were completely covered with green and gray moss. Ranged around the table were the ten chairs, each of which, especially built for this occasion, was made of black birch-boughs, fashioned in varied rustic designs and with the bark left on the surface. The center of the table was a mound of maiden-hair fern, moss and oak-leaves in their autumnal tints. Twenty or thirty electric globes, like those peeping from the walls, were arranged among the ferns and mosses in the center of the table, and in front of each cover was a cluster of thirty of the rarest of natural green orchids that the hothouses of New York could supply. There was no other illumination of the room than that furnished by the green globes of the small electric lights, and the effect was like that of twilight in a pine forest. The name-cards for each guest were painted on oak-leaves, and the menus on squares of white birch-bark about ten by seven inches in size. The wines were all of the rarest and most expensive vintages.

Trapped.

Theodore—It's all right, darling. I have met your father, and we took to one another at once. He even went so far as to borrow ten dollars of me. Surely, he can't refuse me your hand after that.

Edith—Dory, I'm afraid you've made a mess of it. Pa told me about the ten dollars, and said I'd better let you slide; that you were too easy.—Boston "Transcript."

At the Author's Front Door.

Messenger-boy—Is this Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson's, or Mr. Ernest Thompson-Seton's, or Mr. Sempson-Tuton's, or Mr. Ernest Thoton-Sempson's? Maid—Wait a minute, can't you. He didn't say what it would be to-day. I'll go and ask him.—Cleveland "Plain Dealer."

"He thinks he's popular, eh?" "Does he? Why, whenever his name appears in the paper, he fancies the public reads it this way: 'John (cheers), Henry (applause), Muggin (loud and continuous cheering).'" — Philadelphia "Press."

Professor Dabney—Ah, well, love is blind. Miss Penelope—Oh, no, Professor; love isn't blind—it is cross-eyed; it sees a lot of things it doesn't see, and it doesn't see a lot of things it ought to see.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"Sure Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

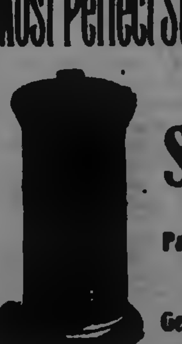
THE

Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube or gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.50
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	16.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	18.00
4	41 in.	14 in.	20.00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 25 feet, with 13 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Perfect Manhood

Is rightly yours; but if you are not the man you should be, if you are losing your energy, your Vital force, memory, annoyed by Varicocele, shrunken parts, and feeling if you don't care what happens, you are suffering from Lost Vitality; it creeps upon men unawares; do not deceive yourself or remain in ignorance while you are being dragged down by this disease; no matter what the cause may be, whether early abuse, excesses, or overwork and business cares, the results are the same; premature loss of strength and memory, emissions, impotency, Varicocele and shrunken parts. OUR LATEST METHOD TREATMENT WILL CURE YOU. We guarantee it as a positive cure for these conditions; it is the outcome of years of experience; it equalizes the circulation, stops all drains, thereby vitalizes the parts, restoring them to their normal condition and make the man of you as nature has intended. Do not be misled by so-called Specialists and Institutes. Read the following facts:

1. We do not accept an incurable case for treatment.
2. Each time you call you see Dr. Goldberg personally. He has 12 Diplomas, etc., which should be sufficient guarantee to his abilities. All other chronic, private and Blood Poison Specialists either have some doctor in charge of their office or have an assistant to doctor you.
3. We are doing business on our own reputation, not of our predecessor.
4. Our records show more actual cures than all the other Specialists combined.
5. You need pay nothing until you are convinced that you are thoroughly cured.

OUR LATEST METHOD TREATMENT GUARANTEED TO CURE

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

Mr. H. J. Heinz Company

We are in receipt of papers from Mr. Carese LeBrun, who is one of the New York City representatives of the H. J. Heinz Company, containing a report of the annual banquet of the travellers of that wonderful concern. There is an illustration showing the banquet hall with over 350 of the managers and representatives of the company present. Carese's many friends in Peterborough will be pleased to know that he is a success in his new occupation.

BIRTHS

DAVIDSON—On Saturday, January 18, the wife of Mr. Fred Davidson, of a son.

In a Railway Wreck

A letter received by The Times from Capt. George S. Thompson, of Sudbury, formerly of Peterborough and Lindsay, gives particulars of a narrow escape which he had recently from being killed in a railway wreck. As it was he was considerably shaken up and bruised. The Captain's many friends in Peterborough and Lindsay will be glad to know that he escaped without serious injury. Capt. Thompson says that Mr. Sam. Campbell, for many years wine clerk at the Croft House, had a narrow escape. He intended taking the train to Sudbury, but something turned up at the last moment that prevented his doing so. Sam was always lucky, even when betting on the dark horse at the Peterborough winter races.

AN OLD RESIDENTER DEAD

Demise of Jos. Larende, who for Over 50 Years Has Lived in Town

Mr. Jos. Larende, who for over 50 years has been a resident of town died at his residence No. 343 Hunter street, on Sunday last. Deceased was born at Point Levis, Quebec, 75 years ago, where he spent his early life subsequently moving to Peterborough. Deceased leaves a widow, three sons and two daughters to mourn his death. During his long residence here he had made many friends and was respected by all who knew him. The funeral will take place this morning at nine o'clock from the family residence to St. Peter's Cathedral and from thence to the Roman Catholic Cemetery for interment.

A FICKLE PUBLIC

Quickly Decides That

Malt Breakfast Food

Is The Great Nourisher for Body and Brain

The public, always fickle and changeable, has, after testing Malt Breakfast Food as a flesh and muscle producer, and health-giver for one year, come to the conclusion that it is the great nourisher for body and brain. The history of cereal foods in Canada cannot furnish such a series of victories as Malt Breakfast Food has achieved in the families of Canada. This delicious and healthful breakfast food has quite captured a fickle public, who in the past required a continuous weekly change of grain foods, not finding any one of them satisfying. Grocers everywhere who sell Malt Breakfast Food, say it gives more general satisfaction than any other food ever placed on the market. Ask your grocer for a package and try it.

CHEQUES MADE GOOD

A PLEASING AFFAIR

Annual Concert Given Under the Auspices of St. Andrew's Guild

The annual concert given under the auspices of the Young Mens' Guild of St. Andrew's Church, took place last night. The spacious lecture room was tastefully decorated with flags and bunting, and added much to the charm of the evening. There was a large attendance, every seat being occupied.

Mrs. Scott Raffe, vocalist, of Toronto, charmed the audience with her sweet voice, while Mr. Donald McGreggor, also of Toronto, was loudly applauded.

Mdlle. DeCrey, of town, played the accompanyments and Mr. Gliddon's orchestra rendered a number of very choice selections. Altogether the entertainment was a huge success.

DEATH OF MR. PURSER

A Well Known Resident of Buckhorn Passed Away on Sunday

The death occurred on Sunday at Buckhorn, of Mr. Samuel Purser at the age of 53 years. The deceased gentleman was born in Ireland and came to this country when he was quite young. For some years his father carried on a blacksmithing business in Peterborough. The late Mr. Purser conducted a general store at Buckhorn for the last quarter of a century. In addition to the store he also had charge of the Post Office at that place.

Mr. Purser was well known as a progressive business man and was for some time connected with the steamboats on the upper lakes, being owner of the steamer Dawn. On religion Mr. Purser was an Anglican and was interested in fraternal societies, being a member of Court Littlejohn, C.O.F., under whose auspices he will be buried. He was also a member of the Orange Order.

Mr. Purser was twice married, his first wife being Libby Cookson, of Kingston, and his second wife Marion Elliott, of Harvey township.

He leaves to mourn his death a widow, two sons and two daughters, all residing at home.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday.

NOMINATIONS YESTERDAY

For the Position of Water Commissioners Bring Out a Large Number of Candidates

Nominations took place yesterday at 10 o'clock, at the Town Clerks Office, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the position of Water Commissioners for the town. Altogether thirteen men were nominated for the position, as follows:

W. H. Moore,—nominated by Wm. Van Every, seconded by J. McClelland.

W. H. Hill,—nominated by Robert. Neil, seconded by Robt. Fair.

T. F. Matthews,—nominated by P. Hamilton, seconded by A. J. Gough.

W G Morrow—nominated by Robt. Fair, seconded by Robt Neil.

W. H. Wrighton—nominated by A. S. McGuire, seconded by Wm. Davidson.

George Ball—nominated by Geo. McGregor, seconded by G B. Cooney.

John Belcher—nominated by Jas. Montgomery, seconded by R. Sheehy.

T. E. Bradburn—nominated by F. D. McKay, seconded by Robt Fair.

R. B. McKee—nominated by H. Best, seconded by Wm. Langford.

Wm Fair Nominated by L. Spry, seconded by Wm. Croft.

Adam Dawson — nominated by Wm. Davidson, seconded by J. J. Hartley.

J. B. McWilliams—nominated by R. F. McGregor, seconded by J. Robson.

R. M. Dennistoun—nominated by R. H. Leary, seconded by R. H. Hill.

Of these a number have withdrawn up to last night, and doubtless more will withdrawn to-day. Those who have already withdrawn are—Messrs R B McKee R. M. Dennistoun.

After the nominations were over Mr. Moore proposed that His Worship Mayor Denne act as chairman and call on those nominated to express their views on the handling of the Water Works. This question was heartily endorsed by His Worship who invited the candidates to take seats within the railing.

Mr. W. H. Moore was the first called on and spoke briefly but decidedly. He said it was gratifying to him to know that the policy of the town controlling its own franchises which he had so strongly advocated in the past was now to be given a trial by the town assuming control of the Waterworks. It was now their duty to select two men who would devote time and energy towards making the scheme a success and in the selection of commissioners care should be exercised.

The men selected should, in his opinion have held some public office before, men who have business ability, broad minded men who are not afraid to be what they honestly believe to be in the best interests of the town. He thought that those elected should serve without remuneration. That should be the object of every candidate, the history of the town could show that during the past 40 years the aldermen had served the town for no remuneration, and generally speaking in a most creditable manner. The Town Trust, had been carefully looked after and the Little Lake Cemetery Co., in which the directors served gratuitously had placed at the disposal of the town a cemetery which was not equalled in Ontario. Personally he did not seek nomination for so important an office without seeking further responsibility.

Mr. George Ball was the next speaker, while his name has been mentioned, he did not seek the office and thought that a man like Mr. Moore should be induced to take it. If it went to an election he would stay in the contest. He did not see that the commissioners should have had previous experience. The speaker thought there was no occasion for an election, we could easily decide on two suitable men and elect them by acclamation and save the expenses of the election.

Mr. Adam Dawson said he was gratified to receive the nomination also to see the interest taken by the ratepayers. He would retire if Mr. Moore and some other gentleman could be elected by acclamation.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams said he had always advocated municipal ownership and would like to see Mr. Moore and Mr. Ball elected as commissioners as they were the only ones he had known to advocate municipal ownership.

Mr. Dumble spoke at some length. He considered the town had taken a very wise step in acquiring the Waterworks. He is not in favour of charging exorbitant rates for water. He thought the municipality should be satisfied with a revenue sufficient to pay remaining expenses and pay interest on the money invested. Mr. Dumble paid glowing tributes to the services of Mr. Henderson as superintendent of the Water Co. and to Mr. Moore who has served the town most faithfully in the council. He thought Mr. Moore would be the best man they could choose for the position.

Mr. H. Best spoke a few words regarding the purchase of the Waterworks. He thought the town had got a good investment and if carefully managed they should never regret their action.

At the suggestion of Mr. J. B. McWilliams and others, The meeting adjourned till 4 o'clock this afternoon when candidates would be asked to be present and present their views more fully, and to see if some arrangement could be arrived at so that an election would be unnecessary.

PROVINCIAL MEETING Y.M.C.A.

Very Satisfactory Report of the Several Meetings Held

The local delegates to the Provincial convention of the Y. M. C. A., who returned home last evening, give a very satisfactory report of the several meetings held.

The convention, the 32nd annual meeting of the Associations of Ontario and Quebec, opened in Berlin, on Thursday last, and closed on Sunday evening, with an attendance of 212 delegates. The principal speakers were Rev. Elmer Harris, who has charge of the Bible Study work; Mr. Walter Wood, Educational Director, of Chicago, who gave an account of the progress of the work during the past fifty years; Mr. Mitchener, International Field Secretary, who was the central figure of the convention; Mr. A. B. Williams, who conducted the students' conferences during the convention; and Mr. J. M. Moore, Railroad Secretary, who "ran an express train" at the Saturday evening session. This feature of the convention was greeted by unstinted applause, and created a wonderful enthusiasm; Mr. Moore had with him an express crew of five men, who gave to the meeting an account of the benefits of the Association in their respective spheres. It is interesting here to note that the railway corporations of America contribute annually $250,000 for this department of the Association work.

The convention on the whole, was most successful. At the Saturday morning session, the sum of $1,800 was raised for provincial finances, on a budget of $6,200.

The meetings on Sunday were especially large, over 1200 men attending the meeting held in the Opera House. The next convention will probably be held at Peterborough, as an invitation to that effect was strongly urged by Mr. Williamson, the local Secretary.

Thousands of Our Canadian Women Have Found the True Fountain of Health

Paine's Celery Compound

A SURE BANISHER OF ILLS PECULIAR TO WOMEN

Dr. Phelps' famous prescription, Paine's Celery Compound, has been, and is now freely prescribed by many of our ablest physicians for the ills peculiar to women. They have found the wonderful remedy to be exactly what has been claimed for it. It has been proved again and again that Paine's Celery Compound is the one great cure for that form of nervousness peculiar to women, and gives to weak, run-down and suffering females a perfect and robust womanhood. All women who suffer from irregularities, hysteria, nervous prostration, anaemia, liver and kidney troubles or blood diseases, should at once give Paine's Celery Compound a trial. Its cures are happy and permanent. Miss Jessie M. Ross, Quyon, Que., says:

"It affords me much pleasure to testify to the great good that Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. I was completely run down in health and a victim of female weakness, and after using three bottles of Paine's Celery Compound I was completely cured. It is the best blood purifier I know of."

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are Not Too Far Away to do Business in.

CABLE COMMUNICATION brings the Canadian investor into almost as close touch with the South African market as the British or Continental investor, and it is a well known fact (among intelligent people) that the London, England, market is the MINING MARKET OF THE WORLD. As we receive cables daily, the Canadian investor is placed by this means on an almost equal footing with the English investor.

We give the names of half a dozen of different companies in which we have done an extensive business during the past two months, showing low prices at which we handled these shares and the present prices:

	Low Price.	Present Price.	Advance.
Heidelburgs	12s 6d	19s od	$1 62
Klerksdorp	11s od	16s od	1 25
Witkopje	10s 6d	16s od	1 37
Salisbury	20s od	28s 6d	2 12
Chartereds	£3 6s od	£4 9s od	5 75
Oceanas	£2 2s od	£2 7s 6d	1 37

These are only a few instances, but numbers of others could be mentioned showing equally large or larger advances, and all our advices indicate that the upward movement in Kaffir (South African) stocks has hardly commenced. Of the above companies it is predicted that Heidleburgs and Sallisburys will touch £6, and Witkopje, Klerksdorps and Oceanas are expected to show a profit of from 200 to 400 per cent on present prices. In addition to securing the best representatives possible in London, England, and receiving advices from such source regarding the condition of the market, we have also our SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.

South African shares bought on 20 per cent. margin or for cash as desired. Direct communication with London by cable.

Write or call for our booklet or any further information desired.

GENERAL METHUEN'S YEOMANRY IN TROUBLE

Lord Kitchener Reports That They Lost Eight Killed Five Wounded, Forty-One Prisoners

LORD KITCHENER SENDS IN WEEKLY REPORT.

General Bruce Hamilton Pursues the Boers in the Vicinity of Ermelo, and Forces Them to Disperse

London, Jan. 28.—A long despatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Johannesburg, Monday, Jan. 27, gives details of the military operations since January 21. They are mostly unimportant, but indicative of continued activity on the part of the Boers. General Methuen's Yeomanry got into trouble near Ristolcim, Western Transvaal, and lost eight men killed, five wounded, and forty-one made prisoners. The prisoners have since been released. This was offset by Gen. Bruce Hamilton's pursuit of the Boers in the vicinity of Ermelo, Transvaal Colony, resulting in the dispersal of a Boer laager at Nelspan. The Boer losses were two men killed, four wounded, and ninety-four made prisoners, including Field Cornet Du Villiers, captain De Jager and Lodwate de Jager a former member of the first Volksraad. In addition, Colonel Plumar captured forty-five Boers. Lord Kitchener reports that Field Cornet B des' command quarrelled while discussing the question of surrender. B des and three of his foll. wers surrendered. The other encounters have already been reported. The week's Boer losses wer 31 men killed, 29 wounded, 322 made prisoners, and 58 men who surrendered.

HALIFAX BIDS FAREWELL TO MOUNTED RIFLES

Scenes of Enthusiasm and Excitement as the Victoria Sailed Away—Final Message from Many Friends

Halifax. Jan. 28.—"Farewell, God speed you, and a glorious return home." This was the telegram received last evening by Col. Evans, dated Regina, and signed by the "Men of the West." There were hundreds on the wharf at the dockyard to-day who echoed the same sentiment when anchors were weighed on the Victorian, and as she passed down the harbor and was lost to view as she sped for South Africa. The big hotels were crowded last night. At the Halifax the officers were bidding good-bye and having the last hand-clasp with many of their friends. The telegraph operator was kept busy receiving and answering telegrams. Col. Evans received over a score of such messages, including a personal one from Lord Minto, wishing him a safe passage, a successful campaign and triumphant home-coming. The colonel also received a telegram from Major Maud, secretary of the Governor General wishing them good luck and every success. Others were received from officers and men who had served under Col Evans in the 1st Battalion of the C.M.R., "Wishing the boys a successful campaign against the enemy of the Empire, and a safe return."

SANG AULD LANG SYNE.

Before the night had merged into morning, the men gathered about the door and in the corridors of the hotel, and with hands crossed with those of their citizen friends, sang, "Auld Lang Syne." Pickets were sent out to gather some of the boys in who had become too demonstrative on the street. The regiment was inspected at the camp this morning by the commanding officer. Every man looked fit and firm, and in fine condition for the six-thousand-mile journey across the sea.

The finely-equipped corps passed through the gates of the old camp grounds for the last time, and to the martial music of the band the men passed through the line of spectators, many singing as they tramped, "There is Only One Girl In The World For Me."

Large crowds had gathered at the corners on Windsor street cheering and waving hands, then following the troops to the embarkation point. The same demonstrative scenes when the "Riders of the Plains" or the heroes of Paardeberg marched to the air of "Soldiers of the Queen," were re-enacted. The same wave of patriotism was shown in the line of march to the embarkation point, and was manifested when troops sailed away. It was the last farewell of the boys, and a rousing send-off. It was 9 o'clock when the Red Cross boys paraded at the Armouries. All were there. There was little or no delay. The men were formed in line, and after inspection by Col. Worthington, the men marched out the main door of the Armouries headed by the bugle band of the 63rd Regiment, and the fife and drum corps of the 66th. There was hand-shaking, and many farewells. All were given rousing send-offs.

The horses of the Canadian Mounted Regiment were all safely placed aboard the troopship Victorian yesterday, preparatory to leaving for South Africa to-day. The animals are an especially good lot and, on the whole, quiet and tractable. They have been well looked after since their arrival here. Out of the whole number purchased only eight have been lost through accidents and sickness. Twenty-five horses which are not in condition to stand the long voyage will be left behind. The C.M.R. is the best equipped regiment that has ever left Canada for South Africa. Both as to uniforms and accoutrements the force has been fitted out with the greatest care.

CHANDOS

—The Coe Hill and Apsley stage was unable to make its regular trip on Wednesday on account of the heavy snow storm.

—Mr. Hugh Clery, of Manitoba, is visiting his mother at present.

—Messrs. D. Hobbins and J. Armstrong, of Peterborough, were visiting friends here last week.

—Mr. John O'Brien was the guest of Mr. John Campbell on Sunday.

—Messrs. W. H. Rooney and W. Crossan, of Coe Hill, were measuring cedar for Mr. Alex. Trotter last week.

—Miss Nellie O'Brien is visiting friends in Peterborough.

—Miss Annie Hobbins, of Peterborough, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Jas. Scott, has returned home.

—Mr. Pat Menague passed through here on Monday on his way to the lumber camps.

—Mr. Pat Scott, of Coe Hill, was the guest of Mr. Wm. Baggs on Sunday.

Sluggish Intellect

CAUSED BY COFFEE

"Careful inquiry in the school-room developed the fact that those children who are habitually given coffee to drink have sallow complexion, are nervous, more or less irritable, and very sluggish intellect, or an overwrought and abnormal imagination, results of extreme nervousness. My own experience with coffee drinking kept me afflicted for some years with severe and constant headaches, with extreme nervousness at times.

"I was compelled to abandon coffee altogether, and was quickly relieved of the headaches and other troubles. I was fortunate enough to secure a package of Postum Food Coffee, but my first attempt at making it was a failure. After another trial and following directions (which are very easy, by the way), I secured a delicious drink, far superior in my mind to coffee. I have continued to use it from the start, and my improvement has been steady with no ill effects at all."

The above was written by a school-teacher, Miss E. Barnard, of Oxford, Kan.

It is an easy matter to leave off the coffee habit, if Postum Cereal Food Coffee is used in its place, particularly when attention is given to its proper preparation. The whole secret of the preparation is in allowing the Food Coffee to boil long enough to bring out the taste and food value.

All first-class grocers sell Postum.

BEET SUGAR IN AFRICA

Almonds and Apricots Also Grown in South Africa

London, Jan. 29—According to the report of the Cape of Good Hope Department of Agriculture arrangements are being made to grow large quantities of sugar beets in South Africa. The report says, "As to South Africa, there are immense tracts of land in this colony suitable for the cultivation of sugar beets, and we do not hesitate to assure those who go the right way about it that there is success before them and a good market for all the sugar they can produce." Another matter that is booming agricultural conditions in South Africa is the growing and producing of prunes, apricots and paper-shell almonds. Formerly all these commodities were imported, but they are now being grown at home. Large jam factories and fruit drying establishments are springing up.

PETERBOROUGH BIBLE SOCIETY

Annual Meeting to be Held at St. Paul's To-Night

The annual meeting of the Bible Society ought to demand the attention and interest of all in a Christian community. The Rev. Bernard Bryan, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Toronto, will give the annual address in St-Paul's church to-night at 8 o'clock.

There is no factor binding Christendom together greater than this great organization. A few excerpts from recent addresses will show the attitude of eminent English divines to the work the society is doing.

The Archbishop of Canterbury: "A man must read history with his eyes shut if he cannot see now that one of the great instruments that God is using to prepare the way for bringing the whole human race together at the foot of the Cross is the work of the Bible Society."

The Archbishop of York: "Of all the wonders connected with the mission work of the church during its whole history, I consider that of the Bible Society outdoes everything else."

The Earl of Halsbury: "What we are engaged in doing is that which, as Christians, we are called upon to do by the Highest Authority of all—namely, to distribute and circulate to all peoples and tongues and nations that message which was once delivered to the saints."

CURLING CLUB

Keene Curling Club won the D. cup of the O.C.A. in a match with Lakefield and Norwood. Skips Campbell and Kennealey are being congratulated on all sides over the victory. J. S. Russell, of Toronto, one of the organizers of our club over 40 years ago sent two splendid watch charms to be given to the skips. Keene now holds two cups, viz: Campbellford Single Rink and the D. in the O.C.A. They have started out this winter to win all in sight.

THE PETERBORO INDIANS NUMBER NOT INCREASING

Rice Lake and the Chemong Band of Aboriginies

The Condition of the Two Settlements, as Well as the Alnwick Indians—All of the Great Mississagua Tribe

The following particulars regarding the Indians of this district are taken from the blue book issued by the Dominion Government:

RICE LAKE BAND

Reserve—The Rice Lake Reserve is located on the north shore of Rice lake in the township of Otonabee, county of Peterborough. It contains about seventeen hundred and fifty acres of land, of which about seven hundred and fifty acres are cleared; about two hundred and forty acres of this is under lease to white tenants, while the locatees cultivate the remainder of said cleared land.

Vital Statistics—The total number shown by the present census is eighty-one, composed of twenty-two men, one women, and thirty-eight young people under twenty-one years of age. During the past year there were two births, one joined the band by marriage, and there were two deaths—an increase of one since last report.

Health and Sanitary Precautions.—The health of the Indians, generally speaking, has been fairly good. They seem very comfortable in their homes, and keep their premises remarkably clean.

Resources and Occupations.—The resources of this band are trapping, gathering wild rice, basket-making; some go to the lumber camps and drives in summer.

Buildings.—The buildings on this reserve, with few exceptions, are frame and are kept in a good state of repair.

Stock and Farming Implements.—The stock is good, and the Indians possess a lot of agricultural implements.

Education.—Some of the children here attend school very regularly, and appear to be learning fairly well.

Religion.—The members of this band are all Methodists; they have one church, and Mr. Windsor, a missionary, preaches to them every Sabbath evening. They have a Christian Endeavor meeting every week, in which some of the members of the band take quite an interest.

Temperance and Morality.—On the whole, these people are law abiding and well-behaved, although there are a few who indulge in strong drink occasionally.

MUD LAKE BAND

Reserve.—This reserve is located on Mud lake in the township of Smith, county of Peterborough. It contains about two thousand acres.

Vital Statistics.—The total number shown by the present census was one hundred and sixty-five, composed of forty-five men, thirty-six women, and eighty-four young people under 21 years of age. During the past year there were five births, six deaths, two joined the band by marriage, and one member of this band has joined another band by marriage, leaving the number in the band the same as last year.

Health and Sanitary Precautions.—There has been a good deal of sickness among these Indians during the past year, chiefly consumption. The children have been vaccinated, sanitary measures are well observed, whitewash is freely used, the houses present a clean and tidy appearance and every precaution is taken to prevent contagion.

Resources and Occupations.—In agricultural pursuits these Indians are making steady improvement, a few of them working all their holdings and are doing fairly well. A good many of them work in lumber camps in the winter and get good wages.

Buildings.—The buildings on this reserve are of log and frame, and are kept in good repair.

Stock and Farming Implements.—The stock is fair indeed and quite a number of the Indians are well supplied with implements.

Education.—There is one school on this reserve. The present teacher is an Indian. Very fair progress has been made.

Religion.—The members of this band are all members or adherents of the Methodist church. A minister comes to the reserve every Sabbath, and they all attend services very regularly.

Characteristics and Progress.—These people on the whole are industrious and appear to take a great interest in their homes.

Temperance and Morality.—The Indians here appear very honest and well behaved, there being very little intemperance in the band.

THE ALNWICK BAND

The Alnwick band number 244, and are Methodists in religion.

METHODISM AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

If prohibition becomes law in Manitoba and Ontario it will be due to the exertions of the Methodist ministry. They more than those of any denomination have resolved to exterminate the liquor traffic, and the recent unequivocal language used by them in their interviews with both Mr. Ross, in Toronto, and Mr. Roblin, in Manitoba, must convince those gentlemen that however many such allies as "The Westminster," they may have in their desire for the referendums, they have none amongst the ministers of the Methodists. The proposed referendum is a tactless proposition, we must admit. It will incense the prohibitionists as a mere attempt to side-track them, after repeated promises and plebiscites, while it renders the position of the antis no whit the better. As an attempt to "stave off the evil day," it will not be a huge success; of that we may be certain. Why indeed was a plebiscite ever taken, and there have been two, if another has to be made to find out what present day opinion is. We cannot blame prohibitionists for feeling that what has "gone before" has been merely a sop to jolly them along.

The ministers of the Methodist Church, however, are determined men, who think that they know what they want and who decline to be bamboozled by politicians, even if they happen to have upon other things similar political opinions. "It will hurt the party," does not work with them. On the other hand let us seek for the reason of the more moderate views of Presbyterians and Catholics. It is understood that the Catholic Church leaves the matter open. The Presbyterians, however, though many of their leading divines have taken a sympathetic course with Mr. Ross and prefer waiting. The old question here arises. If these things are so, if there are these differences of opinion, are we really ripe even for a referendum? Popular opinion must and will of course in the end rule, but, as we have said, it looks as if prohibitional opinion were divided. These reverend gentlemen who are thus responsible for dividing prohibitional opinion on the very eve of the day of battle must feel that victory at present would be premature. Who, also, can be found fault with if after this halting between two opinions displayed by the "temperance body," he turns away in contempt as he often has turned before.

The longer the question is debated the more seriously necessary it becomes to find out why the debate is lasting so long, and if we find that the province is not ripe it would only be fair to prohibitionists to allow them to wait over till such time as they have weeded out the traitors in their camp. One thing we may positively assert and that is that if prohibitionists risk an appeal to the electorate and are beaten the question will be shelved perhaps forever. If this be so the referendum will be a life-preserver thrown to them in the nick of time.

WATER COMMISSIONERS

Candidates Held Meeting Yesterday—Names That are Already Withdrawn

A meeting of the candidates for the position of Water Commissioners was held in the Town Council Chamber yesterday afternoon when several influential citizens endeavoured to persuade some of those nominated to withdraw, and leave two men elected by acclamation. After considerable discussion no such arrangement could be arrived at as most of the candidates were determined to go to the polls.

A number of candidates among whom were some of the best men have withdrawn, Those who withdrew are: —Messrs. R. B. McKee, R. M. Dennistoun, W. H. Wrighton, W. G. Morrow, W. H. Moore and J. B. McWilliams.

We are sorry to see some of these men withdraw their names as we consider that in the above list the town has lost one or more candidates who would be elected and who would be the right man in the position.

The election will be held on Monday next. The following is a list of those who will seek election:— Messrs. W. H. Hill T. F. Matthews, T. R. Bradburn, J. R. Belcher, Adam Dawson, Wm. Fair and Geo. Ball.

Of this number two only can be elected and the rate payers should elect the two best men on the list to the very important position of commissioners.

CHARITY BOARD

Statement Presented Showing Relief Given During 1901 and for January

The Charity Board met last evening, when Mr. R. Innes, chairman, Rev. Father McColl, Ald. Rush, Ald. Batten, Messrs. J. J. McBain, Wm. Yelland, Fowler, Kemp and Miller were present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

A letter was read from Ven. Archdeacon Casey, acknowledging the receipt of the "very thoughtful and flattering" resolution passed by the Board at its last meeting.

The following is the statement of orders given:—

	1901	1902
Groceries	$976.20	$60.60
Wood	230.50	78.40
Tickets	22.65	2.65
Sundries	178.85	4.00
	$1,408.20	$145.75

A number of accounts were ordered to be paid. A number of charity cases were dealt with and the Board adjourned.

MR. EDWARDS ADDRESSES THE TOWN COUNCIL.

On the Subject of His Dismissal From the Position of Town Solicitor

SAYS HE DID NOT UNWARRANTABLY INTERFERE

In the Issuing of the Patent for Water Front Lots—Mayor Denne Lays Another Charge Against Him.

The Town Council met in special session last night when there were present Mayor T. H. G. Denne and Aldermen shortly, Rush, McGreggor, Roger, Clinkscale, Batten, Corkery, Morrison and Best.

The minutes of Monday night's meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Town Engineer submitted his third annual report, which was referred to the Board of Works.

Mr. E. B. Edwards, late town solicitor wrote that he had received notice from the clerk of the Private Bills Committee, saying that Bill No. 12, respecting the town of Peterborough will be considered by the Committee on Friday next, Jan. 31st, at 10 a.m.—Received.

From E. B. Edwards, denying that he had unwarrantably interfered in the issuing of the patent for the water side lot crossed by the C.P.R. spur line, and stating that his only object in interviewing Mr. White was to expedite the matter.—Received.

From the Auburn Power Co, asking permission to erect along the north side of Dalhousie street the poles necessary to connect with the Central Milling Co., with which firm they have entered into a contract for the supply of power.—Referred to the Board of Works, with power to act.

From a number of ratepayers asking that a pipe sewer be constructed on Harvey street, from McDonnell to London street.—Referred to the Board of Works.

From Ald. J. J. Turner, asking Council to grant him leave of absence for two or three months, he having been called home to England to attend the illness of his mother, who is not expected to live.—On motion of Ald. Rush seconded by Ald. Clinkscale, this request was granted, and Ald. McGregor appointed to act as Chairman of the License Committee in Ald. Turner's absence.

THE TOWN SOLICITORSHIP.

Ald. Best moved, seconded by Ald. Clinkscale,—That a by-law appointing Mr. E. H. D. Hall as Town Solicitor, at a salary of $600 a year, be given its several readings.

Ald. Roger urged that it was not fair to Mr. Edwards to pass this by-law before he had been given a hearing; and besides, Ald. Edgecumbe was unavoidably absent and had expressed a wish to be present when this question was taken up. In view of these facts, Ald. Roger moved that the by-law be laid over till another meeting, at which Mr. Edwards be invited to be present.

Ald. Best pointed out that it was imperative that Council act at once in this matter as the Town's Bill was before the Private Bills Committee, and both Mr. E. H. D. Hall and Mr. Edwards were acting thereon.

Ald. Roger replied that there could not be two solicitors acting for the Town. The resolution passed authorizing the appointment of Mr. Hall was either legal or illegal; hence the necessity of passing this by-law at all.

The Mayor replied that Mr. Edwards can be heard after the by-law is passed. No member of the council entertains any ill-will towards him, but as he has been relieved of his office by resolution it is absolutely necessary that this by-law naming and confirming the appointment of his successor should be dealt with at once.

Ald. Roger understood that Council had acted upon what they considered at the time extreme provocation; still he thought they would in a calmer mood see that, in common British justice, Mr. Edwards should be given an opportunity of explaining matters. The Mayor should have notified Mr. Edwards that the by-law was coming up to-night.

Ald. McGregor remarked that Mr. Edwards had no life-lease of the Solicitorship; Council had no further use for his services, and he did not see that he should be accorded more consideration than would be shown an ordinary workingman because he happened to be a member of a very exclusive union. The Council had a perfect right to act as they did in the matter.

Ald. Roger not securing a seconder to his motion, the by-law appointing Mr. E. H. D. Hall Town Solicitor passed its several readings.

THE STREET RAILWAY.

Ald. Roger moved, seconded by Ald. Rush,—That the Council support the application to Parliament of the Peterborough Radial Railway Co. for an act of incorporation, and express itself satisfied with the manner in which the matter has been advertised.—Carried.

PAYMENT AUTHORIZED.

Ald. Roger moved, seconded by Ald Rush,—That the Treasurer be authorized to issue cheques in payment of the several deputations to Toronto re the water front lots, and also cheques for $65 and $15 to the Crown Lands Dept. and A. J. Cameron, respectively.—Carried.

MR. EDWARDS ARRIVES.

At this juncture Mr. E. B. Edwards put in an appearance, and on motion of Ald. Roger, seconded by Ald. Shortly was invited to address the Council.

In his opening remarks, Mr. Edwards alluded to his 21 years official connection with the Town's affairs, in conjunction with five or six years' association with his predecessor, the late W. S. Scott, during which time he had naturally grown deeply interested in any measure of interest to the Town. This matter is not simply a question of dollars and cents, for of late the Town has grown to such an extent that for a number of years its Solicitor's duties have become far in excess of the salary paid for them.

Regarding the reason assigned for his dismissal, Mr. Edwards emphatically denied having stepped in between the Mayor and Mr. Aubury White, Deputy Commissioner of Crown Lands. Since 1889 he has corresponded with, and interviewed Mr. White respecting the water front lots in question. When the latter gentleman was here last year he had accompanied him and the Mayor and Ald. Roger to the site; subsequently he had drawn up the Town's agreement, and furnished a description of the land, and dealt particularly with the right of way of the C.P.R. As a result of an interview with Mr. McMurchy, the C.P.R's solicitor, a patent was to be secured to the Town for all the land in question, less 66 feet for the railway, reserving to the Town the right to cross said railway at Sherbrooke, King and Charlotte streets, should such crossings become necessary—the Town to give the C.P.R. a free deed of such lands utilized by their tracks. At that time the C. P. R. produced a blue tracing of its route on their map at a different angle to the original plan agreed upon. The latter provided for the track running directly across the island in question, while the C.P.R's plan showed the railway cutting across one corner and hugging the Town closer than intended by agreement. This he considered detrimental to the Town's interests.

Turning to his recent visit to Toronto, Mr. Edwards, after explaining his interview with the Hon J. R. Stratton concerning the date the Bill would come before Parliament, and his conversation with Mr. Dawson relative to a copy of the Gazette containing the advertisement of the Bill being on hand, proceeded to give in detail what transpired between himself and Mr. Aubury White. His sole purpose in visiting this gentleman, he said, was to hasten the issuing of the patent, and to see that such was being done in the proper form. He was actuated by no other idea and did not know that there had been anything in his conduct or speech to warrant any other conclusion. Mr. E. E. S. Lindsay, a Toronto lawyer, was present, and the whole interview lasted but a very short time.

Two weeks after the agreement had been drawn up, Mr. White was not ready to issue a patent. This agreement does not include a description of the land in question. On the 31st December, he had asked Mr. White if he had a description of the land, and found that he had not. A former description made by Mr. Cameron did not show the conditions as well as the later one agreed upon, and his object in calling upon Mr. White each time he was in Toronto was to see that the Town's interests were fully assured.

On the 14th January he again called on Mr. White and in course of conversation remarked that the patent could not be issued till a description of the land deeded to the C.P.R. was forthcoming, as, that Company's patent would be issued first and the Town's last. He (Mr. Edwards) also mentioned to Mr. White that the C.P.R.'s plan did not show correctly the course of its track, upon which he replied that if any question is raised now the whole matter will have to be opened up again. Mr. White asked what difference a variation in the two plans would make, when I explained that the Town would be affected thereby, and said "I would not take any responsibility in the matter if any protest is made and the orginal arrangements disturbed." Mr. White then suggested that I had better write Mayor Denne that the patent could not be issued till a description of the C.P.R's allotment was produced, to which I said I did not want the matter to lay over—the patent was not ready at this time—and either the Mayor or I would write any further instructions if there were any."

Continuing, Mr. Edwards said that he had told Mayor Denne on the 14th, by

Paine's Celery Compound

CURES THE SICK

THE ONLY MEDICINE THAT GAINS MARVELLOUSLY IN FAME AND POPULARITY

We make the affirmation with all sincerity and honesty that "Paine's Celery Compound Cures the Sick." Do not for a moment entertain the idea that because you have failed with one or more of the common patent medicines that your case is a helpless one. Let this blessed assurance cheer your heart. Paine's Celery Compound has raised up thousands whose condition was as serious as yours, to a new and happy life. In proof of this, we point to the marvellous gain in fame and popularity all over the world made by Paine's Celery Compound while other medicines have sunk into obscurity and forgetfulness. If you are a sufferer truly desiring renewed health, lose no time in trying the wonderful life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound; no disappointments; no failures. Mr. H. Ball, Chatham, Ont., tells of his rescue from death:

"I was so seriously ill I was obliged to take to my bed, where I laid for four months. The doctors here and in Toronto said my trouble was Addison's disease of the kidneys, and told me I would never walk again. I commenced to use Paine's Celery Compound. After having used a number of bottles I was enabled to attend to business, and felt like a new man. Before using the compound I was very much reduced in flesh; to-day I weigh over 200 pounds. I can affirm with confidence and honesty that Paine's Celery Compound saved my life."

PROVINCIAL ARBITRATORS

Commenting on Mr. Kribs' bill providing for the appointment of a board of provincial arbitrators to adjust the terms of sale and purchase of all public utilities taken over by municipalities, the Kingston Whig, speaking in the light of experience gained in the recent arbitration in that city, says: "The bills referred to will be very interesting. The regret is that that which deals with the purchase of public utilities did not come up a year ago so that it might have a hearing before the arbitration which occurred here on the light question. It may be that Mr. Kribs has not been able to evolve anything out of his inner consciousness which will make the acquirement of public utilities less expensive. It is hardly to be expected. But what he can suggest — or what may be suggested as an outcome of his agitation—is a commission of experienced men, men who have gone through these arbitrations and know their defects, to draft a bill, which will, if made law, be an improvement upon anything which is now upon the statute books."

IGNORANT SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Rev. Dr. Milligan Condemns Principle of Putting Teachers Up at Action

Ignorant trustees putting school teachers up at auction was a defect in Ontario's educational system, which Rev. Dr. Milligan condemned in an address at the opening of the spring session of the Normal school recently.

The pastor of old St. Andrew's dealt in some detail with the difficulties of a teacher. One difficulty was that they had to deal with raw human nature. Another difficulty might be with parents, and in dealing with this point he adverted to the question of authority. He believed in maintaining authority—he took occasion to remark that he was not averse to the use of corporal punishment when judiciously used, to maintain that authority. While Canada had great advantages, she had also some great defects, one of which was lack of reverence for superiors, courtesy to equals, deferential bearing to inferiors. How often did they hear "Yes, sir"? Manners and respect for authority must be taught in the schools, and he spoke of the need of dealing with parents, so as to enlist their support.

A third difficulty might be trustees, and in this connection he took occasion to regret that people had to take their trustees in the present way. He wished they could have some qualification for trustees. He told of a rural school section in which he had lived, in which at the school meeting the only thing discussed seemed to be to get the cheapest teacher. Finally they got as trustee an old bachelor who was an old skinflint, and he ruined the school for several years to the great injury of a number of fine boys. He often wished the school could be under qualified commissioners. Teachers, instead of being valued at their true worth, were put up at auction.

The fourth difficulty was the temptation to make a great deal too much of external results. Statistics had a value, but might be very dangerous.

Hon. Richard Harcourt and Inspector Hughes also spoke, the latter incidentally condemning Kipling's reference to the "flannelled fools."

Of the 125 pupils in attendance at the school this term only nine are young men, the balance being women.

Mining For Rubies.

ONE advantage gained by the victory of the British over King Thebaw of Burmah some years ago, was the acquisition of the famous ruby mines, from which had come the finest "pigeon-blood" stones in the world, and it was expected that an immense treasure of these gems would be found in the royal palace. But, although in the looting of the monarch's hastily-abandoned residence, jars filled with rubies were discovered, nearly all of them were of little value, being flawed and in other respects poor specimens.

It was a great disappointment. Nevertheless, confidence in the resources of the mines was unshaken, and capitalists in England were so eager to buy shares in a company organized to exploit the ruby fields that the police were obliged to defend, with drawn clubs, the officers of the concern against a swarm of half-crazed would-be investors.

Shares in the enterprise were boomed to astonishing figures, but tumbled alarmingly when news began to leak out that the ruby craze was likely to prove a bubble. Mining had been begun on an extensive scale, but somehow the gems did not materialize, and it looked as though the fields were much less valuable than had been supposed, or as if the deposits had been exhausted. After some years investors made up their minds that their money was as good as lost. Hence the great and delightful surprise conveyed by the recent intelligence that the mines have begun to pay dividends.

Experience has taught improved methods of mining, and an electrical power plant has been set up by the company for washing the ruby-bearing earth, called "byon." This byon is widely distributed throughout the Mogok Valley. Natives have worked the upper crust of it for centuries, says the "Saturday Evening Post," and the idea now in view is to get at the lower levels and dig down to bed-rock, where, because of their weight, the largest crystals are likely to be found. A fine stone of twenty-eight carats was picked up recently, and its value may be imagined from the fact that a ruby of one carat is worth four times as much as a diamond of the same size.

The British company (as reported by Mr. G. F. Kunz to the Geological Survey) is now producing fully one-half of the world's yield of rubies, and its leases are said to include practically all of the ruby-bearing territory of Burmah.

Protection of Words.

IN the November "Era" William S. Walsh pleads for much-abused words and phrases:

"In these days when everybody is writing and everybody seems to succeed, would it not be well to start a Society for the Protection of Words and Phrases? Many of these are so brutally overworked by the amateur! The winged words, the words that burn, the thoughts that breathe, the telling phrases, do they not clamor loudly for a rest? That very sentence affords an illuminating example of what I mean. How apt, how vivid, how expressive it would be if all its epithets had not lost their vitality through overwork. To the sated reader the whole sentence is but the echo of an echo, it not merely means nothing, but it is robbed even of its sound and fury. The greenhorn who complained of Hamlet that it was too full of quotations unconsciously expressed a great fact through the medium of a bull. In a wrongheaded way he pointed out that constant reiteration has reduced the grandest passages in the language to mere commonplaces. Give our familiar quotations a rest. Lay to sleep our household words. Let fortune for a while cease to favor the brave. Let us feign that the poet is made. Let a man who would steal another's thunder be arrested for felony. Let us win no more golden opinions. Let the favored few withdraw to some select seclusion, and the countless thousands to some dry-eyed privacy. Thus may nouns, adjectives and phrases, after a long rest, reawaken with the freshness of the morning upon them, their original meanings recreated, energetic, effective, brilliant, as on the day when they were first conceived and brought forth."

A Dream Story.

From time to time I have been so interested and amused by reading in the "Spectator" accounts of vivid and realistic dreams that I feel tempted to narrate one that happened to me, leaving it to your judgment as to whether it is worthy of notice in your paper. In November, 1896, I awoke one morning fully impressed with the idea that I was receiving as a gift an unusually large gypsy ring, set with a single sapphire with a brilliant on each side. The dream was a pleasant one to the female mind, and I soon fell asleep again, but only to awake with a still stronger impression that the jewel was actually in my hands. So curious were my sensations that on my maid entering my room at 8 o'clock I told her of the two dreams, most minutely describing the ring, and I also asked my husband to bear witness to the statement should anything follow to confirm the dream. Two hours later the postman arrived, and so great was my excitement and astonishment at seeing a small, neatly done up packet (evidently a ring case) that I dare scarcely open it, and decided to ask my maid to do so. Before breaking the seal I asked her to repeat the description of the ring that I had previously given her, and then the little packet was opened, and the joyful exclamation followed: "Why, my lady, here it is!" The ring was sent to me by a friend in memory of his wife, who had died some months before; but I had absolutely no idea that I should be the recipient of any souvenir of her, nor did I ever see her wearing the ring in question. The same maid is still in my service, and can (as well as Sir Astley) substantiate my story.—Letter in the London "Spectator."

Stevenson's Grave.

A visit to the grave of R. L. Stevenson would disappoint many people. While some time back visits to this famous hill were most frequent, the limit must now be six persons yearly. And no wonder! The place is quite overgrown with weeds, and perhaps will some day be hard to discover.—New Zealand "Times."

First Boy—It's six o'clock. Let's go home. Second Boy—Nit! If we go home now we'll git licked for stayin' so late. If we stay till eight we'll git hugged and kissed for not bein' drowned.—"Puck."

His Ideal.

First Cat—If you had your choice of all the world, where had you rather live? Second Cat—China! They say there is a wall there 1,250 miles long! Just think of moonlight nights—and a wall like that!

"A New Woman."

Disease makes many a woman prematurely old. Dark-rimmed eyes, hollow cheeks and wasted form are accompanied by listlessness and loss of ambition. Home duties are a weariness, and social pleasures have no attraction.

One of the commonest expressions of women cured by Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is this: "It has made a new woman of me." There's a world of meaning in the words. It means the sparkle brought back to the eyes; the complexion tinted with the rosy hue of healthy blood; the form rounded out anew in graceful curves; the whole body radiant with health.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well. It dries debilitating drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It makes new women of those prematurely aged by disease.

"Dr. Pierce's medicines are the best I have ever used," writes Mrs. C. Nelson, of Chemawa, Marion Co., Oregon. "My health was badly run down when I consulted him by letter. My limbs were cold and my head kept me continually. I was so nervous that the least thing would startle me almost into convulsions. I had palpitation of the heart so bad that I could scarcely walk sometimes. I felt utterly discouraged, but two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' made a new woman out of me."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Send 31 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for it in cloth binding. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Partridges' Eggs.

New Orleans "Times-Democrat."

"But few persons are aware of the fact," said a well-known physician yesterday, "but it is true, nevertheless, that the egg of the partridge is one of the most nutritious things in the world. They are not used for eating purposes except in very rare cases, and then it generally happens in remote rural districts. I have known negro families in the State of Louisiana during the laying season to live on the eggs of partridges. And they would flourish handsomely and grow fat on account of the rich properties of the eggs. These eggs, of course, never find their way into the market, because they are never taken from their nest except by such persons as I have mentioned, and they rob the nests, I suppose, because their principal food supply comes from this source. Quail meat comes pretty high in the market at all times, and the average man will find it more profitable to spare the eggs and wait for the birds when the hunting season rolls around. These men would pass a hundred nests in one day without disturbing an egg. The sport of hunting the birds is an additional incentive. The average negro does not care so much about this aspect of the case. He figures that the white man, having the best gun and the best dog, will beat him to the bird. So he goes after the eggs. One partridge will lay anywhere from a dozen to twenty eggs, and a nest is a good find. I know of many families in rural sections who feast on these eggs in the laying season. I have tried the egg myself as an experiment. I found it peculiarly rich. It has a good flavor, is very palatable, and, in fact, is altogether a very fine thing to eat. Really I believe that the egg has more nutrition in it than the fully developed bird, but, of course, as one of the men fond of the game in the field, I would like to discourage the robbery of the nests."

ONE of the Philippine tribes enforces a "widow tax." The law governing it was undoubtedly founded on more than a superficial knowledge of human nature, and is productive of advantages. "Marriage in haste" among the Tagacaolos, of Mindanao, therefore, leads to a very prolonged and literal "repenting at leisure." Upon the death of the wife the widower must pay a certain sum of money or a certain amount of goods to his father-in-law before he is entitled to look about for an eligible successor to the deceased. With them money is a rare article, and the usual means of barter is by plates of the ordinary ironstone pattern. One hundred of these is considered ample payment to the bereaved parents, and then the man may "a-wooing go." On the other hand, if the husband dies, the widow at once becomes the slave of her parents-in-law, and so remains for life, unless some relative comes forward and produces the requisite payment. The natural result of this rule is that all married people are extremely solicitous of one another's health and welfare. In sickness the invalid is scrupulously attended to by husband or wife, who is perhaps haunted more by a thought of those one hundred plates than by fear of death in the family. Divorce they know not, but polygamy is universal, and a man may have as many wives as his means permit of. Therefore, in case of the death of a much-married man his parents either have enough slaves to render future work on their part unnecessary, or else they are in a position to open up a crockery store. A cheap means of life insurance, this payment is called "cabalban" or "the widow tax."

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

The task was terribly hard; had Katharine known how hard she might have hesitated before taking it up. She had, in addition, the natural worry and anxiety connected with a severe illness, strange and distressing insults to contend against. Gordon had been carried by his wish, unpressed as he was lifted from beneath the wheels of the cab that crushed him, to some rooms which he had used for some time past; and Katharine's first experience had been a half concealed sneer, a wholly contemptuous smile, and a shrug of the shoulders from the landlady as the girl introduced herself as Gordon Smythe's wife. And as it began, so it continued; from one and all, Sister Dora excepted, Katharine received the barest courtesy, and she lived in the perpetual condition of feeling that she was being degraded and debased before all the world.

Truly Gordon Smythe's enmity was to be shunned and feared! The girl could not fail to understand that he refused to have his mother with him, because by so doing he would undo all the malicious injury he had caused Katharine to suffer at one blow. The presence of his mother, and her great affection for the girl, would naturally reinstate Katharine in the opinion of the landlady and others with whom she was brought in contact, and that was not what he intended or desired.

Sister Dora stood for one moment longer, and then, with a final caress to the girl's head, she moved away.

"I shall sleep with one eye open, so do not hesitate to call me, dear," she said, softly; and then she passed into the next room, and Katharine was alone— alone with her husband, with Ormande's voice, love-laden even in its deep distress, ringing in her ears, his entreaties and reproaches eating into her very heart of hearts. Not one word of the cruel, insulting tirade that Barbara Mostyn had poured out on her had remained even to annoy her, but not one single syllable of the words Ormande had uttered was forgotten or ever would be.

"Will the day ever come when this cloud of shame will be lifted from me, and he will know the truth? Shall I be free to breathe and live as I breathed and lived only a few short months ago? Will the sunshine ever gladden me again, or am I doomed to exist always in this atmosphere of dull, black despair! If— if only I could have spoken to him, have exonerated myself in his eyes! Oh, Ormande, my love! My love!"

As she sat there in the silent night hours Katharine was not giving way to rebellious thought or bitter reproach, against the cruel fate that had come upon her; she was praying fervently— earnestly— for strength to be patient and brave; for courage to bear the heavy burden thrust on her young shoulders that, though all the world should turn and revile her, she might not falter in her heart, but live as she was, in truth and in deed, a pure, good, noble woman.

And even while she was uttering this prayer the deep, gloomy clouds above her head lightened a little, and through the chink, could she have only seen into the future, Katharine would have beheld a faint ray of gold, that spoke of a sun that would shine for her again. While she was submitting herself to God's hands the end was drawing near; the end of sorrow and torture, the end of shame and misery, of a double sacrifice that had nearly cost her her life.

"Well, this is really delightful!"

So declared Lady Blanche Bellairs, rising from her chair in the comfortable room at her hotel to greet a smart young lady who had followed up her card. "My dear Barbara," kissing her affectionately, "have you dropped from the clouds?"

"No, a hansom deposited me at your door," said Barbara, with her affected laugh, as she warmly embraced Lady Blanche and then gave a peck at Marian Adair's delicate cheek. "Aunt Mildred was obliged to come up to town to see her lawyer and her dentist, and, of course, I was compelled to come, too."

"And I am very glad that you were," added Lady Blanche, with a smile of keenest pleasure on her handsome face. "Where are you staying? Oh! why don't you come here, Barbara?— it would be so nice!"

"So it would. I wonder if Aunt Mildred would mind. We have sent our things to the Metropole, but we can easily alter that. It is so sweet to be near you again, dear Lady Blanche, that I think I shall urge her to come here!"

"Why not send a telegram— and then you can take off your hat, and have some tea. Marian and I were just going to have ours."

Barbara agreed to do this, and was soon ensconced comfortably in the most luxurious arm-chair in the room, chattering away in her clear, high tones that made Marian's every nerve start and jar.

Miss Mostyn's eyes were busy while she talked. She was watching the door eagerly, and wondering whether Ormande would be likely to come in this afternoon; the letters she had received from Lady Blanche had told her that he was back in town and hard at work, but she imagined, naturally, that he would be constantly with his aunt; hence this sudden urgent business which summoned Mrs. Trevanion to her lawyer and her dentist at one and the same time.

Lady Blanche beamed affably at the cold-faced girl opposite. She was honestly glad to see Barbara, who always showed herself in her very best light to Ormande's aunt, posing as a sweet, sympathetic, unselfish girl.

"This is delightful," declared Lady Blanche over again, and Barbara smiled her metallic smile in recognition.

"You have not been to see Lady Drummond yet, Barbara, I suppose?" Lady Blanche asked, after a while.

Barbara frowned.

"Aunt Ellen is away, I fancy;" then with a short laugh, "the fact of the matter is, that Aunt Ellen and I have come to loggerheads, Lady Blanche, and are not very good friends just now."

"Dear me, my dear; I am sorry to hear that. I hope it is only a small quarrel."

"Oh, that is a question of indifference to me, quite. I consider Aunt Ellen to be very wrong, and as I have some honor; I told her so."

"We all know that Lady Drummond is rather eccentric, Barbara."

"We must draw a line somewhere," was the answer given a little shortly. Barbara paused, and then, looking up, said suddenly, "I will tell you all about it, dear Lady Blanche;" and forthwith she launched out into the whole story of Katharine, imparting a very high color to the affair, and growing quite eloquent. "She positively stated to my face, Lady Blanche, that she was going away with this man Smythe, whatever happened, although she knew him to have a wife alive! Is there, could there be any justification for such a woman? And yet Aunt Ellen refuses to believe a word I tell her; she has got some Quixotic, absurd notion into her head, that because this creature's father saved her man's life, she must hear nothing against her, no matter how strong the proof may be that she is all I have said."

Barbara's cheeks had flushed, and her voice had grown unconsciously vicious; her mad hatred and jealousy for Katharine were such that she could not let herself mention the girl's name without expressing it; indeed, so strong was her rancor now that Lady Blanche looked up at her in much astonishment.

"It seems a very sad story, Barbara," she said. "One can hardly imagine a woman to be so lost to all sense of decency and self-respect as this Miss Brereton appears to be, and after all she may not be entirely to blame. Surely if she is wrong, Mr. Smythe is still more so. Have you heard the full rights of the story, do you think?"

Barbara bit her lip savagely; here was Lady Blanche taking Katharine's part, and pleading her cause.

"Oh, the girl is thoroughly bad, there can be no doubt on that score!" she answered, almost sharply. "She is an adventuress, and has imposed on Aunt Ellen. I don't believe she is Robert Brereton's daughter, although to hear her talk of her society acquaintances, one would imagine her to be a princess at least." This was said most spitefully, for Barbara had not forgiven or forgotten the episode of Katharine claiming friendship with the Duc d'Avignon. "She was quite au fait with all sorts of sensational dodges," Miss Mostyn continued, determining with much inward satisfaction that she would soon destroy all interest that Lady Blanche might have been inclined to feel for Katharine. "Why, she was the very interesting invalid whom Lord Otway rescued on the railway at Northminster. You may remember her, dear Lady Blanche; some lady took pity on her and nursed her; isn't it strange how these women succeed!"

Lady Blanche turned to her niece. "Marian, my dear, it is time you took your tonic; go and ask Graves for it."

Ormande's aunt was a broad-minded woman, but she was full of innate delicacy; and this story, more particularly the manner in which Miss Mostyn was telling it, grated on her fine susceptibilities more than she could well describe. Besides, Barbara's last words had given her a clue to a problem that she had been trying to solve for the last ten days.

As they were alone, she leaned forward to Barbara.

"Was— was this Miss Brereton an inmate of your house while Ormande was there?" she asked.

The angry flush that rose to Miss Mostyn's face was in itself an answer, had Lady Blanche seen it; but Barbara had more venom to vent on one who had never wronged her by word, act or thought.

"Yes, she was there, and it is my opinion, Lady Blanche, that she came there on purpose to meet him again; that she worked her way, through Aunt Ellen, knowing that Lord Otway would be a guest of mine. At any rate she made the most of her opportunities, although, fortunately for himself, Lord Otway did not seem even to know she was present."

And Barbara cast down her eyes with a conscious blush as she uttered this lie glibly.

Lady Blanche listened in silence and some pain; her woman's heart jumped at once to the truth; here was the answer to the question that had troubled her, here the solution to the mysterious change that had come upon her favorite boy.

Barbara misread her silence; she was afraid she had, perhaps, gone a trifle too far, and all at once she determined to bring things to a culmination.

Rising suddenly, she went across to Lady Blanche's chair and knelt beside the elder woman with what passed muster for a very pretty assumption of girlish modesty.

"I— I could have forgiven her all but that," she whispered, sinking her voice; "but Ormande is so—so dear to me that—— dear Lady Blanche, you understand me, don't you? You won't think me unmaidenly or immodest in telling you this— the dearest secret of my heart?"

Barbara bent her face to the other's knee, and Lady Blanche unconsciously caressed the sleek plaits; but though her face wore a tender, sympathetic look, it was troubled also.

"It is a secret that makes me very happy, Barbara, dear," she said gently; "nothing would give me greater pleasure than to see you as Ormande's wife."

Barbara pressed her lips to the white, jeweled hand.

"Ah! you make me so glad—so glad!" she murmured.

"Ormande is so dear to me," Lady Blanche went on, the troubled look deepening on her face; "and, to tell you the truth, Barbara, of late I have been very anxious about him. He seems so changed; he never runs in and out to chat with me as he used to do; whenever I send for him to come, he makes some excuse, as though he wished to avoid me altogether. It is both strange and alarming."

Barbara, whose head was bent, bit her lip again suddenly. This confirmation of Katharine's supremacy in Ormande's heart was simply gall and wormwood to her.

Lady Blanche paused only for a second.

"This change has come on him since he left Northminster. Tell me, Barbara, was he like this when with you? Can you give me any reason for it?"

"I— I— think I can, dear Lady Blanche. I am afraid it was— it is all my fault. I was so unkind to him."

Here Barbara introduced a most artful break in her voice. She was playing a difficult role, but she felt it was likely to be a most successful one. The quick start Lady Blanche had given, and the way in which her brow and eyes had cleared, were observed at once, despite the fact that Miss Mostyn's eyelids were still dropped.

"I have been reproaching myself ever since; and— and to tell you the real truth, dear Lady Blanche, I could not rest until I came up to London and told him how very sorry I am for my stupidity and unkindness. He will forgive me— he is sure to be; [illegible]"

Anecdotal.

Once, during a dry season in China, the late Li Hung Chang called on Minister Conger, and spoke of the weather. "Yes," said Mr. Conger, "it seems to be dry everywhere. It is dry in America, too. I read in one of our papers the other day that in many places in the West the people were praying for rain." "What!" said the earl, "do your people pray to their God for rain?" "Oh, yes," said the minister, "they often pray for rain." "And does their God send it when they pray for it?" asked the earl. "Yes, sometimes their prayers are answered, and sometimes they are not." "All the same like Chinese joss, hey?" said the earl, with a grin and a chuckle.

General Ballington Booth of the Volunteers of America, tells a story of a prayer-meeting held in New York on the East Side during the recent mayoralty campaign. In the midst of a prayer, he relates, one pious brother said: "Oh, Lord, we pray Thee that the Democratic party may hang together in the coming election." "Amen, answer prayer, Lord," put in a Republican who was near. "But I do not mean it as the Republican brother means it, Lord. I pray that we may hang together in concord and accord," continued the Democrat. "Amen, Lord," again said the Republican; "any cord, so long as they hang."

Lord Kelvin once paid a visit with a friend to some well-known electrical works. They were escorted over the workshops by the senior foreman, a man of much intelligence and an enthusiastic electrician. Entirely unaware of his visitor's identity, he minutely explained the details of the plant and machinery, and lectured him in his role of layman quite professionally. Lord Kelvin's friend was on the point of interrupting several times, but an amused signal from the great master of electricity kept him silent. When the tour of inspection was complete, Lord Kelvin quietly turned to the foreman and asked: "What, then, is electricity?" This was a poser for the man, who, somewhat shamefaced, confessed that he could not say. "Well, well," said Lord Kelvin gently, "that is the only thing about electricity which you and I don't know."

A certain congressman who had instructed his butler to say to all undesirable callers that he was in the bath and could not be seen, was recently visited by a constituent with a grievance to exploit. He called every day at the house, but no matter at what hour he presented himself he was invariably informed that the congressman was bathing. "I must see him," he finally said one day to the servant; "my business is most important; I'll wait until he is through with his bath." "Da's no use," replied the negro butler; "gen'leman done waited foe hours de udder day; he wa'n't through den." Whereupon the disappointed constituent is said to have written this upon his card: "You may succeed, if you persevere, in getting your body clean one of these days; but if you should spend the rest of your life in a bathtub it would not purify your conscience or your political record."

A correspondent of the "Canadian Gazette" (London) relates the following story to illustrate the abnormal development of the late Li Hung Chang's bump of curiosity. "One day I was unwise enough to tell him that it was possible to tap the telegraph wires at any point along the line. This got me into a nice mess, for Li insisted on stopping the train in the heart of the Rocky Mountains, and although Le Fung Lee pointed out to him that the tapping might interrupt the transcontinental business of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, he was determined to see Mr. Joseph Baker (an expert telegrapher who accompanied us) tap the wires. The obliging Baker, to my surprise, willingly consented, and entertained His Excellency with an agile pole-climbing feat and a spectacular manipulation of the wire. Joe came down the pole with a most plausible story of what the operators at the end of the line had said to him, but he afterwards confided to me that he had 'only fooled the old man.' Li, however, was delighted, and talked of wire-tapping until he heard about a typewriter we had on board. Then Mr. Baker was kept busy for half a day explaining to His Excellency and the equally interested members of his suite the intricacies of the writing machine."

A Duel of the Wits.

There had been a somewhat protracted discussion in the smoking room between the Aged Cynic and the Prize Idiot, and it had now reached the stage of flickering snappiness, which indicates the beginning of the end.

"After all," said the Prize Idiot, "there is no fool like an old fool."

The Aged Cynic surveyed him calmly. "There is no ass like a young ass," he retorted.

"A tu quoque is the repartee of the intellectually destitute," sighed the Prize Idiot, wearily.

"When your case is bad abuse the other side," quoted the other cheerfully.

"Wise men make proverbs, and fools repeat them," said the Prize Idiot in his most hydraulically crushing manner.

"And who was the wise man who said that?" asked the Aged Cynic innocently; and the Prize Idiot is now making elaborate arrangements for having his seat moved further back.

An Ancient Problem.

How often do passing events recall the halcyon days of our youth? It was announced at a recent mission meeting, to which apparently a sewing circle was attached, that the women seemed shy of making clothes for the other sex, and in regard to attempts that had been made, it was stated that the boys had been able to stand up in the suits, but when they stooped, or tried to move about a bit, there had been trouble. Times have evidently not changed in this respect, and cutting down the parental left-offs to fit little Willie is as much a problem today as it was forty years ago. We have all more or less experienced the trouble referred to, and we can sympathise with the little victims of that mission.

Mamma—Well, did you tell God how naughty you have been? Lily—No, I was ashamed. I thought it had better not get out of the family.—Harlem "Life."

Plumber's Philosophy.

In "Captain Bluitt," the new novel by Charles Heber Clark ("Max Adeler") is a plumber who is nevertheless an honest man. When called to account for a blunder of one of his workmen, he explained as follows:

"You see, things was built crooked in this world on purpose. There ain't nothing that was arranged to go exactly right. You know better than I do, doctor, that if we went sailing along through life smooth and pleasant, like drifting with the tide, we'd never amount to nothing, now would we?"

"No."

"Very well, then; there's big troubles and there's little troubles. You may lose your money or your health or your relations or you may not; but, anyhow, it'll rain on the day you fix for a picnic, or your train'll be late the day you particularly want to make a connection with another train, or you'll stub your toe so's you can't walk just as you arrange for a pedestrian tour, or the rain'll come on hard when you've left home without your umbrella (did you ever notice that?), or a frightful bore'll drop in to see you just when you thought you'd like to be alone. It's always that way, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"You start out in life believing that you're going to have nearly perfect bliss, and lo and behold! there's something every day in the year and nearly every hour in the day to worry and annoy you. Now, why is it, doctor? Why is it?"

"What is your theory, Davis?"

"It's like this. Here we have, as the books say, evidence of design. The road of life was made rough, on purpose. And why? Doctor, you know well enough. It was made so for our good."

"I have heard something like that before, I think," said the doctor.

"Of course! If things was always right, life would be too easy. We need discipline—discipline of adversity. It makes us strong to fight trouble. Our patience is tried, and so we know we have patience and we get more patience and so forth. You know all about it."

"And you think the man who chokes a flue is appointed to help the thing along?"

"Certainly. Probably he never quite means to choke the flue. Some overpowering outside agency directs him, makes him careless, throws him off his guard. He plays his part in the great drama of life. The man who chokes the flue or fixes a pipe to leak is working to make men better. You might call him the Angel of Discipline."

"You think, then, that the whole matter is supernatural?"

"Well, I don't know as I quite call it that. It's just the way things is fixed. You try to toss a book on the table and it falls on the floor. If you tried to throw it on the floor it would have fell on the table. You go through your house in the dark and hold your arms straight in front of you, and an open door goes between your arms and you hit your nose. You could hardly steer straight enough in broad daylight to get the door into the space between your arms, but you do it sure in the dark. Out in the ocean you sail along for days and never see a sight of a ship. Let a fog come up and it's five chances to one you'll have collision in two hours! No, I don't exactly say supernatural; them's just the lines on which the world is built. There ain't no intention that things'll go straight."

"Then it's your thought that a hidden power compelled you to fix the pipe in my bathroom so that it would leak?"

"Well, I don't want to shirk no responsibility or to blame anybody else. But the fact is I did my very best. I thought it was all tight and snug. But there had to be a hitch somewhere for your uplifting towards higher things and so I s'pose my attention was called off, by some mysterious influence, from a weak place in the joint, and you had the benefit. You learned something more about self-control and the hollowness of life when the water came through on the ceiling paper. No doubt you are this very minute nearer heaven because I inadvertently missed that tender place in the joint. It ought to have been added to my bill."

All in the Point of View.

Madame Wu Ting-Fang, wife of China's representative at Washington, says it is becoming the custom in China for ladies to have feet no smaller than those of a five-year-old child, and so the feet of little girls are not confined or bound until they reach that age. By that time they are strong, and if the binding be properly done, there is no severe or agonizing pain. Really the suffering is slight, and by the time a girl attains her full growth the pains cease altogether. Foreigners, she says, have an exaggerated idea of the suffering incident to the making of small feet. But so important is it, from an aristocratic standpoint, for a girl to fulfil in this particular the Chinese idea of beauty that she is willing to endure a little pain to secure that end. According to our own ideas, the binding of children's feet is simply barbarous; but that it is largely a matter of point of view may be seen by what the Chinese lady has to say about the tight waist of women who represent the highest civilization: "I for one prefer having small feet to a little waist. My vital organs are not affected in any way or injured by the confinement of my feet in childhood, but the health of many a woman is ruined by the constriction of her waist."

Unexpected Erudition.

An absent-minded professor of languages dropped into a restaurant one day for luncheon.

"What will you have, sir?" said the waiter.

"Fried eggs," replied the professor.

"Over?" said the waiter, meaning, of course, to ask whether he wanted them cooked on both sides or only one.

"Ova?" echoed the professor, surprised at his apparent familiarity with Latin. "Certainly. That is what I ordered. Ova gallinae."

This the waiter interpreted as meaning "extra well done," and that is the way they came to the table.

A Combination Needed.

Mr. Botts—I think, my dear, I have at last found the key to success. Mrs. Botts—Well, just as like as not you'll not be able to find the key-hole.—Yonkers "Statesman."

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in measured articulation:

"It's to hide the teacher's [illegible] sir"—"Wasp."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

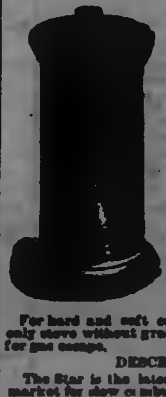
THE
Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion— why! The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and connected to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 40 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.50
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	26 in.	10½ in.	14.00
3	27½ in.	12 in.	19.00
4	41 in.	15 in.	22.50

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 35 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

—Mr. Robert Heidman, who has been visiting in Stratford, has returned to town.

—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cathcart, of Bendette, Minnesota, formerly of town are visiting Mrs. Erskine, Waterford street.

—Mr. H. E. Bradley, Peterborough's up-to-date tailor, has returned from the convention of the Custom Cutters' Association of America, which was held at Milwaukee.

—Rev. Dr. Waddell, of Dunedin, New Zealand, who has been visiting his sister, Mrs. Hugh Waddell, leaves to-day for Texas. From there he will return to New Zealand. Rev. Dr. Waddell has made many warm friends in town who will wish him a safe journey to his distant home.

A Good Time

Owing to the unexampled prosperity of the whole country and of every interest there never was a time when advertising brought better returns than it brings to-day. There never was a better time to increase trade and to establish a business concern in the knowledge and confidence of the whole people. An ad. in The Times is sure to bring good results.

Nervously Exhausted

Sleepless, poor digestion, easily tired, blue as indigo, that's how you feel. Do you want to feel strong, make plenty of blood, enjoy buoyancy, strength and vim. You can do so by using Ferrozone. Ferrozone is a blood builder, nerve strengthener and brain invigorator. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

A Petition and Acceptance

To John E. Belcher, Esq., C. E.

Sir,—We earnestly request you to allow yourself to stand for election as one of the Water Commissioners for the town.

We feel that it would be of decided advantage to have one of the Commissioners an engineer, and especially with our system from its beginning.

(Signed)

Wm. Snowden, Thos. F. Attrill, H Long, R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough; A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D.; H. LeBrun, W. Taylor, T. E. President A. F. of L.; R. J. Munro, Doddy, R. F. McGregger, W. Henry, and others.

To His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Wm. Henry, President A. F. of L.; H. Long, Wm. Snowden, W. Taylor, R. F. McGregger, R. J. Munro, H. LeBrun, T. E. Doddy, T. F. Attrill, A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D., and to my nominator and seconder, James Montgomery and R. Sheehy, and others:

Gentlemen,—In view of your request I will accept nomination for the Waterworks Commissionership, and, as you suggest, will do what I can, if elected, in the way of placing my knowledge of the system and its workings at the service of the town.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN E. BELCHER.

CATHEDRAL WEDDING

Marriage of Miss Nellie Donnatel to Mr. Daniel Foley of Town

St Peter's Cathedral was the scene of a pretty and interesting event yesterday morning, being the occasion of the wedding of Miss Nellie Donnatel, daughter of Mr. Thos. Donnatel, of town, to Mr. David Foley, also of town. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father McColl. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Annie, the duties of groomsman were performed by Mr. Patrick Foley, brother of the groom. The newly married couple will receive the congratulations of a host of friends. For the present they will reside in town.

FORTNIGHTLY CLUB

Rev. Dr. Symonds Delivered a Splendid Lecture Before the Fortnightly Club Last Night.

The regular meeting of the Fortnightly Club was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall last evening and was very well attended. The chairman Sheriff Hall introduced the speaker of the evening to Rev. Dr. Symonds in a well chosen speech and expressed the pleasure of the club in again having an opportunity of listening to him.

Rev. Dr. Symonds on arising to speak was heartily applauded and was attentively listened to throughout his address on Philip Brooks. This is the first time Mr. Symonds has addressed the club since his departure from town some months since to take a very responsible position at Trinity College School, Port Hope.

At the conclusion of the address a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker for his very pleasing and instructive address.

COUNTY COUNCIL MEET

MR. T. G. EASTLAND ELECTED WARDEN BY ACCLAMATION

Messrs. Sherrin and O'Brien Appointed Auditors, and Mr. W. A. Stratton Sessional Clerk

The January Session of the County Council opened at the Court House yesterday afternoon, when the following members were present, Messrs. Casement, Crowe, Fitzgerald, Costell Shaw, Eastland, Anderson, Peck, Pearce and Dr. Jeffs.

The first business taken up by the Council was the election of Warden.

Mr. Fitzgerald, moved, seconded by Mr. Peck,—That Mr. Eastland be warden. No other name being offered, Mr. Eastland was declared elected by acclamation, and ascended to the chair with the usual ceremony. In a short speech Mr. Eastland thanked the council for the honor they had done him and hoped the business would be conducted with harmony during the year.

Mr. W. A. Stratton was appointed sessional clerk on motion of Mr. Pearce and Dr. Jeffs.

The election of Auditors was then proceeded with and after considerable voting, Messrs. W. Sherin of Lakefield and Wm. O'Brien of Douro, were appointed auditors.

Mr. Pearce moved, seconded by W. Fitzgerald, that the council adjourn and go into committee.

WARDEN EASTLAND

The hearty congratulations of The Times is extended to Mr. Thomas G. Eastland on his election to the position of Warden of the County of Peterborough. Mr. Eastland is probably the youngest Warden that has ever graced the position, being only 41 years of age. He was born in this town, where he spent his youthful days, removing to Apsley many years ago, where he now fills the position of Postmaster and Crown Lands' Agent.

Warden Eastland represents No. 3 Division in the County Council. This Division comprises the Townships of Harvey, Galway, Cavendish, Burleigh, Anstruther and Chandos. He was entitled to the honor, having served five years in the County Council, and has always taken a leading part in conducting the affairs of the municipality. His popularity is such that his election to the highest position in the County was made unanimous.

Town Council

telephone, of what had transpired, and had also mentioned the matter to Mr. Armstrong the same day—He read a letter from Mr. White, in which he did not think anything which had transpired in his office should lead to such a climax as Mr. Edward's severance from his position as solicitor, and that while Mr. Edwards had interferred regarding the C.P.R's right of way, he had at the same time urged expedition in issuing the patent.

The late solicitor also read a letter from Mr. Lindsay, who was present at the interview, in question in which he inferred from what he heard that Mr. Edwards was only trying to expedite matters. Mr. Edwards incidentally remarked that Mr. White had spoken rather hasty about anything turning up to cause further delay.

Mr. Edwards here entered into what promised to be a rather lengthy delineation of the powers of all councils over civic officers, the professional duties entailed by a Town Solicitor, his duty as regarding the patent in question, and the courtesy due him after so lengthy a service in the Town's interest, when Ald Toger drew his attention to the fact that the by-law appointing Mr. Hall as solicitor had been already passed. He was not aware of this, regretted that he had been placed in a false position by being granted a hearing after the by-law had been passed and at once took his seat.

MAYOR DENNE'S REPLY.

The Mayor in his opening remarks said he noticed that Mr. Edwards had addressed himself to the Mayor and not to the Council. Mr. Edwards had no authority whatever to go and interview Mr. White on January 14th. When the agreement between the Town and the C.P.R. had been signed his duties in connection there with had ceased.

On Oct 16th last a resolution had been passed authorising the Mayor to conclude a bargain for lots on the water front at $5 an acre. This matter had been in Mr. Edward's hands since 1890, and when he (the Mayor) took office, he made up his mind to bring it to a settlement, for when the canal is completed it will be necessary for Peterborough to have docking accommodation. When he went to England he asked Town Clerk Armstrong in his absence to forward any letters from the Crown Lands Department to the Solicitor with instructions to give them his immediate attention. On his return he found that one such letter had been forwarded to Mr Edwards. Subsequently he (the Mayor) met the Hon. J. R. Stratton, whose government he accused of unnecessary delay in the water lots measure. The Hon. Gentleman promised to look into the matter, which he did with the result that he (the Mayor) got a calling down for not answering a letter from the department of seven week's standing. An investigation showed that in answer to the letter in question Mr. Edward's had merely drafted one in reply for the clerk to fill in certain blanks as to description of the water lots, which he was unable to do so; so the letter remained unanswered until his (the Mayor's) return.

Continuing, Mayor Denne said that it was only on the urgent solicition of Mr. Armstrong that he had consented to take Mr. Edwards with him to Toronto, for the reason that Mr. McMurchy, the C.P.R.'s solicitor, had told him that Mr. Edwards was the first man in this section of the country to have a law suit with his company, and he had been fighting them ever since. The Hon. J. R. Stratton had also been told the same story.

As to the water lots, said the Mayor, the size of the island was of no account for the reason that the railway had been given the right of way. That agreement was signed, and should be given up to. On his writing to Mr. White as to the course of the delay in issuing a patent, he replied confidentially "that Mr. Edward's had called and interferred" "Now, continued the Mayor, "Mr Edward's duties in this matter ceased when the agreement was signed. If he was so anxious to get the matter settled why had he not done so 12 years ago?" Mr. Edwards remarked that he did not say he had had charge of the [illegible] since 18[illegible]—the patent was not ready issuing at that time, as the government were asking an exhorbitant figure for the lots. The price was reduced after Mr. White's visit last summer.

To Mr. Edwards, Town Clerk, Armstrong explained that the letter referred to by Mayor Denne was one of 13th August last. Mr. Edwards was at Stony Lake and sent a pencil draft of a reply planks for him to fill in, which he could not do. Neither could Mr. Edward's clerk fill in the planks as a description of the land in question could not be found in the Solicitor's office.

Mr. Edwards replied that he be forwarded the material with which to fill in the planks as far as possible then, and thought the answer had been forwarded. Another survey was necessary at this time, but Mr. Cameron could not be found.

Mayor Denne replied that this survey was not made till his return from England, when he hunted up Mr. Cameron, and if Mr. Edwards had done the same he would have saved considerable delay.

Mr. Edwards replied that if the difference between Aug. and Sept. caused any delay, he could not understand why a patent could not be issued between September and December.

The Mayor,—"Did you explain this to the council?

Mr. Edwards,—"I did not know there were any meetings."

The Mayor,—"There were only seven."

Mr. Edwards,—The matter was near the council, being in the Town Clerk's hands."

In reply to Mr. Edwards, Town Clerk Armstrong admitted that the gist of what Mr. Edwards told him of his conversation with Mr. White in Toronto amounted to the same as he had explained to the Council; only to him (the clerk) Mr. Edwards said that "Mr. White was angry." He had repeated to the Mayor exactly what the solicitor had told him.

Council then adjourned.

Catarrh is a Germ Disease

Science, armed with the microscope, has established it a fact, and this conclusion renders obsolete the practice of treating asthma, catarrh and bronchitis by stomach drugging, sprays, snuffs, etc. Such treatments are an utter failure because they cannot penetrate the delicate air cells of the lungs, or permeate the air passages of the nose and bronchial tubes where the germs of catarrh have their stronghold. Catarrhozone is the only certain remedy. It is inhaled by the mouth and after spreading through all the respiratory organs is exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone kills the germs, heals the inflamed tissues, clears the head and throat in two minutes, and cures in a few hours. Nothing is so effective, pleasant and simple as Catarrhozone. Two months' treatment $1.00. Small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

A YOUNG LIFE ENDED

Sudden Demise of Thos. Ross, Son of Wm Armstrong, Stewart St.

The death occurred yesterday at his home, 250 Stewart Street, of little Thomas Ross, the seven-year-old son of Mr. Wm. Armstrong after an illness of only a few days. Mr. Armstrong had only returned from Brandon yesterday morning and knew nothing of his son's illness until he went to his house. A message informing him of the illness of his son had been sent to Brandon but did not arrive there until after he had departed. The boy had been ill for scarcely a week, suffering from a form of inflamation and all possible medical aid had been employed, but to no avail. The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon at 2.30 and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

A True Nerve Tonic

Acts not so much upon the nerves themselves, as upon the digestive functions, and the abundant formation of rich, red blood. The nerves cannot be fed on medicine. They can be fed and strengthened by digested and assimilated food. Ferrozone's marvellous action arises from its power over the digestive and assimilative functions of the body. You take it, the blood grows richer, redder. You feel strength and vigor, digestion ceases to be noticed, for it has become good. Work is easier, for you have the strength to do it. In a short time you have health. Use Ferrozone.

Application to Parliament

Notice is hereby given that an Application will be made to the Legislature of the Province of Ontario at the present Session thereof, for an Act to incorporate the Peterborough Radial Railway Company, with power to construct and equip and operate the same by Electricity, Compressed Air or other Motive Power in the Town of Peterborough and Village of Ashburnham; and from the Town of Peterborough to the Village of Lakefield, and thence through the Township of Douro to Clear Lake, and from the said Town of Peterborough through the Township of Smith to Chemong Lake, and from the said Town of Peterborough through the Township of Monaghan to the River Otonabee; and from the said Town of Peterborough or Village of Ashburnham through the Township of Otonabee or Monaghan to Rice Lake. With power to the Company to acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise, and to operate boats and other vessels, and to acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise lands for the Purposes of the Company and for Parks and Pleasure-grounds, and to make traffic arrangements with other Companies and persons, and to construct, maintain and operate Telephone and Telegraph lines in connection with the said Railway, and for other purposes.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are Not Too Far Away to do Business in.

CABLE COMMUNICATION brings the Canadian investor into almost as close touch with the South African market as the British or Continental investor, and it is a well-known fact (among intelligent people) that the London, England, market is the MINING MARKET OF THE WORLD. As we receive cables daily, the Canadian investor is placed by this means on an almost equal footing with the English investor.

We give the names of half a dozen of different companies in which we have done an extensive business during the past two months, showing low prices at which we handled these shares and the present prices.

	Low Price.	Present Price.	Advance.
Heidelburgs	12s 6d	19s od	$1 62
Klerksdorp............	11s od	16s od	1 25
Witkopje............	10s 6d	16s od	1 37

Chartereds	£3 6s od	£4 9s od	5 75
Oceanas....	£2 2s od	£2 7s 6d	1 37

These are only a few instances, but numbers of others could be mentioned showing equally large or larger advances, and all our advices indicate that the upward movement in Kaffir (South African) stocks has hardly commenced. Of the above companies it is predicted that Heidleburgs and Salisburys will touch £5, and Witkopje, Klerksdorps and Oceanas are expected to show a profit of from 200 to 400 per cent. on present prices. In addition to securing the best representatives possible in London, England, and receiving advices from such source regarding the condition of the market, we have also our SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA.

South African shares bought on 20 per cent. margin or for cash as desired. Direct communication with London by cable.

THE INVASION OF ENGLAND BY FIFTY THOUSAND GERMAN TROOPS

How a Young German Officer Figures It Out

Britain Would Be Taken By 50,000 German Troops

Her Channel Fleet Would Be Overpowered Before Aid Arrived

Berlin, Jan. 29—The following appears in the leading papers, and will make interesting reading:

If trouble were to arise, the only means by which Germany could injure England would be by raid or invasion, which has been carefully thought out. Col. Schneider says, "The invading army would be infinitely finer in physique than the English army. It is certain to be composed of men who would be able to carry their rifles and their ball ammunition, and, unless killed or wounded, would easily last through the two or three days fight that would probably settle the fate of the invasion one way or another. It is hoped in Germany that the concentration of her navy upon that small fraction of the British fleet which could be spared from Imperial obligations to guard her coasts would give a local superiority in numbers sufficient to obtain command of the sea for some thirty hours, time enough to land a force of some 50,000 men, amply sufficient, in the opinion of the German general staff, to deal with the armed crowd, as they reckon, after careful study, our home defence forces to be. The invading force would be a most carefully selected one. Every detail would be thought out. The place of embarcation, the route to London or Glasgow, the possible battlefields — all would be known to the leaders by a previous careful survey on the spot."

FRANCE MORE PEACEFUL

London, Jan. 29—Although our relations with Germany are strained, there is reason to believe that a corresponding relief is felt in diplomatic circles in respect to our relations with France. It will be noticed that France has laid down no great warship during the past twelve months, having restricted nearly the whole of her naval activity to the development of her submarine fleet. A French novel, by M. Olivier Saylor, entitled "Les Maritimes," which has already been the occasion of five duels, giving an interesting insight into the condition of the French navy. The French admirals and officials are satirised under easily recognizable pseudonyms. If the Naval Intelligence Departments of other nations are up to their duties, they will obtain a copy of this novel and study it. There is reason to believe that it is being read with much interest in the Chancelleries of other powers.

The inactivity of France in relation to naval matters is alleged by well informed people to encourage the British Treasury to cut down the expenditure on the navy and army during the forthcoming session. According to Sir Robert Giffen, our greatest statistician, in a letter to the Times, the new budget that the Chancellor of the Exchequer will ask for will be £156,000,000. Sir Robert, however, only estimates the expenditure of the South African occupation during the coming year at £26,000,000. On the lowest estimate, the South African war can scarcely fail to cost less than £15,000,000 in excess of Sir Robert's friendly forecast. The revenue estimated for the current year is £142,000,000, plus an increased yield of the new taxes. On Sir Robert Giffen's estimate, there is a deficit of £10,000,000, but if we add the probable extra cost of the South African occupation we get £25,000,000, while the army and navy estimates, instead of being only £61,000,000 are more likely to require £80,000,000. The estimated deficit, therefore, for next year, instead of being £10,000,000, will be about £45,000,000. It is not, of course, expected that the Government will reveal the whole of the deficit at once. They will postpone to the end of the session the supplementary estimates which are necessary for carrying on the ordinary business of the year and for defraying the cost of the noble but reckless statesmen, to whom imperial interests are but the ping pong of existence.

ENGLAND'S BID FOR GRATITUDE

Ministry Believed to be Fearful of Intervention in Africa

Washington, D.C., Jan. 29—The attitude of Great Britain during the Spanish American war, as announced in a speech by Lord Cranborne, regarding the question of European intervention, was quietly discussed by Senators, but no members of the Committee on Foreign Relations would speak for publication. Three members of this committee privately concurred in the opinion that the making public of British Foreign Office secrets at this time is done for three purposes:

First—To prevent any action by the United States looking to intervention between Great Britain and the Boers.

Second—To secure more favorable consideration of the pending settlement of the boundary dispute between Alaska and Canada.

Third—To somewhat dampen the enthusiasm with which unusually cordial relations are being fostered between the United States and Germany.

These members believe the English Ministry is especially apprehensive that the United States may join with other nations in taking steps looking to a termination of hostilities in the Transvaal.

Imperial Yeomanry Fought Gallantly

Ladybrand, O.R.C., Jan. 29.—Particulars have been received regarding the capture of a troop of Imperial Yeomanry near this place on Sunday last. The patrol was acting as escort for some unarmed natives who were engaged in wheat cutting near Lindeguesrust. As the patrol was passing through a defile they were surrounded by a force of 150 Boers, who sprang from their hiding places and attacked them suddenly. They made a gallant fight, but owing to the strength of the enemy were unable to accomplish much. Eighteen men and one officer were captured, but subsequently released.

Wants France to Intervene in South Africa

Paris, Jan. 29.—The session today of the Chamber of Deputies was devoted to interpellations concerning the attitude of France on the Transvaal war.

M. Berry, (Conservative) introduced the interpellation. Several speakers dilated upon the horrors of the concentration camps and the alleged violations of the rules of war. M. Berry urged the French Government to bring about intervention in South Africa.

Abbe Lemire also called upon the Government to aid the Boers, not only by sympathy, but by diplomacy to become a friendly people. The abbe concluded with saying:—"We made the United States free, let us make the Boers free also."

M. Delcasse, replying, said:—"Whatever may be the sympathies all here profess for that courageous people intervention on the part of France would only result in entangling her foreign policy, and it is the duty of the Government to return the entire liberty of that policy."

The Chamber unanimously approved the declarations of M. Delcasse, and then adjourned.

BRITISH RAILWAY TO THE NYANZA

Commander B. Whitehouse Returns from Completing Work

CONVEYANCE OF THE TROOPS

Soldiers Can be Conveyed From Bombay India, to the Lake in About Fourteen Days

London, Jan. 29.—Commander B. Whitehouse, R.N., has lately returned to England on the completion of the British portion of the Victoria Nyanza railway. He and one assistant, C. S. Hunter, of the Uganda Railway, and these two surveyors, accompanied by thirty Swahilis, spent thirteen months in exploring in two small steel boats every part of the British shore of the Nyanza. Over 2,200 miles of coast line, of mainland and islands have now been accurately charted, and in parts the maps of the lake shore have been altered beyond recognition.

Speaking of the expedition Commander Whitehouse observed that he had always understood that the objective of the Uganda Railway was the nearest point of the Victoria Nyanza from Mombasa, so that the huge area of its shores could be tapped for trading purposes. In old days the best route to the lake was through German territory, the journey from the coast to Uganda taking forty-five days. The old English route necessitated from sixty to seventy days' travel, with a great many difficulties and possible delays to be reckoned with. Now there was only one route worth using—namely the British railway, with which no caravan route could possibly complete, as on the opening of through traffic the journey from shore to shore would be done in two days.

"During the journey, the expedition visited many islands quite unknown, and came across numbers of savage naked people previously unvisited. I am glad to say that, except on one occasion, and even then the affair was satisfactory settled, we never had any trouble with the natives, all of whom, though many had never seen Europeans, were friendly and amiable. Even some of the tiniest rocky islets were found to be tenanted by fishermen. Preparations are being made for the development of the lake traffic with the opening of the railway, and passengers leaving the train at Port Florence will step on board twin-screw steamers alongside the jetty, which will convey them to the different stations. The Government centre of Uganda is at Entebbe, 148 miles from Port Florence. One of the steamers for this service has already left England, and should be on the lake by June. Another steamer will follow. These vessels are 175 feet long, and draw six feet of water. The completion of the railway will make an immense difference to our important territories in Equatorial Africa. For instance, it may be noted that, if necessary, in case of disturbances, troops from India can now arrive on the lake from Bombay in about fourteen days."

The Pain of Sore Feet

Just about the most tantalizing of all pains comes from sore feet. To get relief bathe the feet in warm water and then rub them with Polson's Nerviline. It penetrates through the pores of the skin, takes out the soreness, reduces swellings, invigorates the tired muscles, tones up the circulation, and prevents the feet from becoming sore again. Nerviline is a protection and safe-guard against the pains and aches of the entire family and cures rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache, etc. 25 cents.

PROTEST FROM CAPE COLONY

War Greatly Prolonged by the Present Policy—Why the Cape Dutch Rebel

Capetown, Jan. 29—The colonials are greatly disgusted with the unaccountable leniency of the military authorities toward the Cape Dutch who join the Boers for a short spell of fighting, pot a few British soldiers at long range and then, their thirst for the sport being assuaged, go back to their farms and profess the most intense loyalty to the Government. It is a very common practice for young Cape Dutchmen to temporarily attach themselves to the nearest commando, and after a few weeks campaigning go home as if they had been engaged in the most innocent diversion. In almost every instance it is known how their absence has been spent, but except in the case of men of prominence the punishment is made so light that it not only does not deter others from going out, but does not even deter the same persons from repeating the performance. This is carrying forbearance too far, and instead of conciliating the wavering Dutch, must simply arouse their contempt. It shows moreover, that while the military have ostensibly a free hand in South Africa a tight rein is kept on its affairs in London, and all the evils of a divided authority are felt in a crisis which calls emphatically for the promptness and energy which can only be given by individual control. It has been proved time and again that to show weakness in dealing with the South African Dutch simply encourages them to rebel, and it would not be surprising if the infatuated policy of the British produced an uprising in the colony. The effect of such weakness on Canada, Australia and the other members of the Empire which contributed their sons so freely in the cause of the Mother Country must be disheartening. They certainly did not contemplate sending their children to be shot down by men who can walk into the British camp red-handed from the slaughter and receive no heavier punishment than a light fine or a few weeks' imprisonment. It may be necessary to treat the Dutch colonials in a kindly manner, but it cannot be necessary to condone murder, and the British will not only prolong the contest indefinitely, but lose the respect of all reasonable people, including their own colonial kin, by pursuing such a course.

Catarrhal Poisons and Their Remedy

The poisonous secretions from catarrh are dangerous because they affect the stomach and bowels, giving rise to an unhealthy condition of these organs. Catarrh is the source of much ill-health and was considered practically incurable until it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of the medical profession that by the use of Catarrhozone any case of nasal or throat trouble can be permanently and quickly cured. Catarrhozone by its unusual merit has enlisted the support and endorsement of the most prominent medical authorities, who freely state that anyone giving it a trial is sure to receive permanent benefit. PASSING OF THE OLD SOLDIER

But Two Officers Living Who Commanded Armies in Civil war

Washington, Jan. 29—In a talk with a reporter for the Evening Star, General Oliver O. Howard said there are but two officers living who commanded armies during the civil war. "As I count them up," said General Howard, "from Generals Scott, McDowell, McClellan, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and others, down to include myself and General Logan, there were twenty-seven such commanders, and of them I do not know of more than two living — Lieutenant General Scofield and myself. So we are getting rather lonely. Scofield and myself commanded army corps before being assigned each to an army and department. I think there were over forty corps commanders on the Union side in the civil war. Of them only ten are living. As I recall them, there are Sickles, of the Third Corps; Stanley and Thomas John Wood, of the Fourth Corps; Wilcox, of the Ninth Corps; Siegel, Carl Schurz and Stahl, of the Eleventh Corps; Granville M. Dodge, of the Sixteenth Corps; 'Baldy' Smith and General Alexander McDowell McCook."

AGAINST REFERENDUM

The Temperance People Express Their Views Regarding Another Plebiscite

The following resolution was passed at a meeting Monday evening last by representatives from the Ministerial Association, and the following temperance societies: W. C. T. U., the S. O. T., I. O. G. T and R T of Temperance:

It was resolved—"That this meeting places itself on record as unqualifiedly in favor of a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in Canada, except for mechanical and medicinal purposes, as the only correct method of dealing with the liquor traffic, that through all time has proved a menace to everything that tends to the upbuilding of the home, society, the church and the nation.

In the present crisis in Ontario, when the highest tribunal in the British Empire has declared by its decision on the Manitoba Act that it is within the power of the individual provinces of Confederation to enact a law embodying a large measure of prohibition, be it resolved that it is the duty of the Ontario Government at its present session to avail itself of this privilege, and enact a law along these lines, this step we deem not only in the best interests of the province, but it will also be a fulfilment of promises repeatedly made by the Hon. George W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, and his predecessor, Sir Oliver Mowat, that so soon as this question was definitely settled, the Government would be prepared to grant as large a share of prohibitory legislation as would be legally permissable, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Government, and to each of the local papers.

BIBLE SOCIETY

Annual Meeting of Peterborough Branch in St. Paul's Church Last Night

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Branch of the B. and F. Bible Society was held last night in St. Paul's church with Sheriff Hall in the chair. The meeting opened by the singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," and with prayer by Rev. Mr. Bastow, of Murray St Baptist church. Rev. M. [illegible] read as a scripture lesson the nineteenth Psalm, after which Rev. Mr. Potter, of St. Andrew's church, Secy. of the local branch, read his annual report, with the depositary's and Treasurer's reports. These showed very satisfactory progress. The executive had met and divided the district to be covered, into sections, and they earnestly urged that the work be made as easy as possible for those who devote their time to the arduous work of collecting. The several reports were adopted.

The chairman then introduced Rev. Bernard Bryan, Toronto, representing the British and Foreign Bible Society, who addressed the meeting.

There are many encouraging things about a meeting such as this. It first shows an interest in an excellent work. The B. and F. Bible Society exists for the translation, publication and circulation of God's Word into all languages and to all lands. It is fulfilling the great commission of our Saviour when he said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; and lo, I am with you always." A review of the work of this Society since 1804 shows great accomplishments in distributing the bible without note or comment.

It is by means of these meetings that the interest grows ever in the work. As when Christ is lifted up as the most beautiful in ten thousand, we grow more like Him, so when we get to know about God's work, we gain an interest in it. A young man once told the speaker that he had begun to read about missions; a short time after he told him he had commenced to pray about missions, and shortly after this he began to give to missions. Later he offered himself as a missionary, but owing to poor health was not accepted. Nevertheless he devoted a large portion of his income to the work.

Meetings of this kind also afford an opportunity for manifesting our oneness in the Lord Jesus Christ. Truly we have one Lord, one faith, one baptism, we love one Lord, we love one book, and our great desire should be to circulate that book and win this world for Christ.

Mr. Bryan had in his study a volume entitled "The Testimony of the Ages," giving the testimony of centuries of literature and science to God's Word. In the latter portion of the book was a picture of an aged and venerable man bowed over a book, and with hands clasped in prayer. Beneath was this question: "Who is it?" There are many answers. From Francis Bacon, from Sir Isaac Newton, from Benjamin Franklyn author of the Philosophy of Common Sense, and from many others comes the glad testimony of the value of that Word. Great and good men have prized it—do we not all know the blessing of its possession? Where would we be to-night if the translation and circulation of the scriptures had travelled east instead of west? Just where the eastern nations are to-day. We owe all that is good and fair in our land to this source. Voltaire attacked the bible 100 years ago, but he has passed into history, and the bible, whose decay he predicted, remains. It is attacked to-day in the most insidious manner, but Christ found the Hebrew Scripture just as we have it to-day, and He treated it as a book above criticism. The infallibility of the Word of God goes side by side with the infallibility of God. When the temple of Solomon was being built, it was said the king went from one to another inquiring who made his tools. The carpenter, the stonemason, and all replied that the blacksmith had made them. The blacksmith, on being questioned said he had made his own

PETERBOROUGH PUBLIC LIBRARY

So far as the needs of the public are concerned, "The Public Library," (which isn't public at all) might as well be in a hay loft. The authorities or the government or the Town Council or whoever else it is that conserves the mental health of the people of Peterborough are either ignorant of their duties or very neglectful of them. We are not here speaking of the directors. The book-covers are dirty, the gas lamps are wretched and far between. The paper room might as well have a brace of tallow candles in it as the delapidated Auer lights suffered to go to seed over the tables. As for the public at large, probably not more than ten per cent. know that there is such a thing as this library. The stairs alone would appal anyone with a weak heart or weak limbs. The old are practically debarred from its use altogether. If it were not for Mr. Peters the place would not be worth going to. But there is a more serious complaint still to be made: Why are the periodicals not allowed to remain? Why must they be sold and removed from the building? Anyone at all conversant with library work knows that a fyle of magazines is a most valuable means of reference. As it stands to-day in a town of (with Ashburnham) 12,000 inhabitants, the library is a disgrace in every particular, and when we consider the semi-darkness prevalent both day and night, it is like crawling into a barn to seek to consult the marvellous array of good books that adorn the shelves. Many of the books are stacked from the floor up, as if searchers of both sexes were expected to lie down on the floor to find what they wanted. Mr. Peters alone redeems the situation from total depravity. When we consider the disgusting foulness of the air we wonder indeed that he is alive to tell what he knows. The effect of these inconveniences is to reserve the library for a few. It is astonishing how low the average is of intelligent reading in our midst. Whose fault is it?

County Council

The County Council met at two o'clock yesterday, pursuant to the adjournment, the Warden, Mr. T. G. Eastland, in the chair. All the members were present. The chairman of the Committee to strike the Standing Committee for the year presented his report.

Mr. Pearce moved, seconded by Dr. Jeffs, that the report be adopted.

Mr. Shaw, chairman of the Committee on appointments presented his report.

The Otonabee Power Co. invited the County Council to be present at the ceremony of laying the keystone at their new power house yesterday afternoon. On motion, Messrs. Fitzgerald and Costello were appointed a committee to represent the council.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE MAY SOON COLLAPSE

Important Change in the Position Nations Imminent

IT IS SAID THAT ITALY PROPOSES TO WITHDRAW

What the Effect Would be on Europe Should the Alliance be Dissolved

London, Jan. 29—It is now no secret that Italy and France have entered into an agreement defining their respective spheres of influence on the Mediterranean coasts of Africa, an agreement allotting to Italy the right to occupy Tripoli and its hinterland, when the Sultan's authority in that region shall be no longer recognized. The disclosure of this friendly understanding has, naturally, cast some doubt on Italy's intention of renewing her alliance with Germany and Austria. An anxious enquiry on the subject was met the other day in the Reichstag by the Chancellor, Count von Bulow, in a defiant rather than a reassuring way. The military resources of the Fatherland, he said, were incomparably greater than they had been at the time when Italy became a member of the Triple Alliance. Italy's support was no longer indispensable, and although Count von Bulow refrained from making any explicit reference to Austria, he intimated distinctly that Germany was strong enough to stand alone.

What the effect would be of Italy's withdrawing from the Triple Alliance and maintaining a strict neutrality in the event of a war between Germany and Austria on the one side and France and Russia on the other is apparent. To appreciate the bearing of such an incident on the situation we should recall the strategic plans which have been frequently discussed in Berlin newspapers, and have been based on the assumption that the Franco-Russian League would have to face all three of the Central European Powers. These being the factors of the problem, the solution seemed simple enough on paper, so far as the land fighting was concerned. Italy, it was taken for granted, would throw the whole of her military force against the southeastern flank of France, which country, to protect itself, would need to mass about one-half of its army in the same quarter. Under the circumstances, France could place only the remaining half of its army on the Rhine to resist attack on the part of Germany. But why, it may be asked, would Germany necessarily possess a preponderance of force upon the Rhine? The answer is that, in the case supposed, the entire military force of Austria would be available for operations against Russia, and that, consequently, only a third of the German army would be required for the same purpose. Thus two-thirds of the German strength would be arrayed against one-half of the French on the line of the Rhine, and, unless there were a marked disparity of skill on the part of the commanders, the result could not be doubtful.

This, at all events, was the conclusion reached by German military experts. Now let us see how their reasoning would be affected by Italy's neutrality. As before, Austria would be at liberty to launch her entire military force against Russia and it might still be assumed that only a third of the German army would be needed on the Vistula. Even so, Germany would be able to marshal only two-thirds of her military strength against the whole of that of France, which last-named country would no longer dread attack on its south-eastern frontier. Under these conditions the latter country would have decidedly the better chance of success, provided, of course, the skill of the opposed commanders should be about equal. Thus far, we have not glanced at the naval side of the hypothetical contest. Even the combined fleets of Germany, Austria and Italy would at present be unable to cope with those of France and Russia, and, obviously, the disparity would be greater, were Italy to proclaim herself a neutral.

The withdrawal of Italy from the Triple Alliance, however, would indicate a belief that the friendship of France and Russia was worth more to her than that of Germany and Austria. Such a belief might lead her to go beyond a mere declaration of neutrality and become an active partner of the Franco-Russian League. In such an event the whole military force of Italy could be used against Austria and the last-named power would need at least a half of her army to defend her western frontier, as was the case in 1866. Only half of Austria's strength being thus available for operations against Russia, she would need to be aided by at least half of Germany's. Germany, therefore, could employ only half of her soldiers on the Rhine to face the entire French army. Under the circumstances, the Germans would be unable to defend the Rhine, unless, indeed, their general were a man of great military talent and opposed to an incompetent French commander. There is no reason to suppose that the Germans now possess a Frederick the Great, or that the French would allow a Prince de Soubise to lead them to a second defeat at Rosbach.

We have thus far assumed that, whatever part Italy might take, Austria would remain faithful to Germany. That is by no means certain. It might be deemed prudent at Vienna to maintain a strict neutrality. In that event Germany would be left entirely isolated, and would be in imminent danger of succumbing to her enemies.

ADMIRAL SCHLEY APPEALS TO PRES. ROOSEVELT

Asks That the Verdict of the Committee of Inquiry be Quashed in Favor of That of Admiral Dewey

Washington, Jan. 29. — The Navy Department has made public Admiral Schley's appeal, delivered to the President about a week ago. Admiral Schley asks that the President review the findings of the court, on three grounds, in each case basing his appeal on the finding of Admiral Dewey, as opposed to the majority report. The first ground of appeal is the holding of Secretary Long that "the conduct of the court in making no finding, and rendering no opinion on those questions (that of command and of credit for the victory) is approved, indeed it could, with propriety, take no other course, evidence on these questions during the inquiry having been excluded by the court."

On this point the petition says that the Secretary of the Navy was in error in stating that the court excluded testimony to show that, as Dewey said, Schley was the senior officer in the battle of Santiago was in absolute command, and entitled to the credit due for the victory which resulted in the total destruction of the Spanish ships.

The petitioner asks the President to annul Secretary Long's endorsement on this point and that he specifically approve Admiral Dewey's statement, declaring that Schley was in command. He says that only in this way can exact justice be done him under the precept.

The second ground relates to the alleged withdrawal of the squadron at night from Santiago Bay and the character of the blockade, and the propriety of Commodore Schley's conduct in the premises. This was one of the points upon which Admiral Dewey specifically dissented. The petition recites the findings of the court to the effect that the flying squadron did not withdraw at night, and declares that, by this statement the court obviated the necessity of expressing its opinion as to whether or not a close or adequate blockade was established, and the propriety of Commodore Schley's conduct in the premises.

Therefore, Admiral Schley asks the President to annul the Secretary's endorsement, which "marks valid the failure of the majority members thereof to report their opinion upon that portion of the said eighth specification." And it is also asked that there be substituted therefor Admiral Dewey's holding that "the blockade of Santiago was effective."

The third ground recites Admiral Dewey's opinion to the effect that the passage from Key West to Cienfuegos was made by the flying squadron with all possible dispatch, having in view the importance of arriving off Cienfuegos with sufficient coal, that the blockade of Cienfuegos was effective; that the Adula was permitted to gain information and finally that the passage from Cienfuegos to a point off Santiago was made with as much dispatch as possible, while keeping the squadron a unit. The petition declares that this opinion being at variance in certain points with the majority opinion, is the only one justified by the evidence, and facts before the court, and it is asked that the Secretary's approval of the majority findings be set aside and annulled in each instance, where it is at variance with Admiral Dewey's opinion, and that the latter's opinion should be approved for the reasons heretofore set out in the bill of exception filed with the Secretary of the Navy.

It is finally stated:

"That if this testimony was all false they should have so announced, and if all or any part of it was true the said applicant was entitled to the benefit of it, and by declining to consider or pass upon it they have deprived him of his common law and constitutional rights."

A Petition and Acceptance

To John E. Belcher, Esq., C. E.

Sir,—We earnestly request you to allow yourself to stand for election as one of the Water Commissioners for the town.

We feel that it would be of decided advantage to have one of the Commissioners an engineer, and especially with our system from its beginning.

(Signed)

Wm. Snowden, Thos. P. Attrill, M Long, R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough; A. C. Dunlop, L. N. Carmichael, M.D.; H. LeBrun, W. Taylor, T. E. Buddy, President A. E. of L.; R. J. Munro, R. F. McGregor, W. Henry, and others.

To His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Wm. Henry, President A. F. of L.; M. Long, Wm. Snowden, W. Taylor, R. F. McGregor, R. J. Munro, H. LeBrun, T. E. Buddy, T. P. Attrill, A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D., and to my nominator and seconder, James Montgomery and R. Sheehy, and others:

Gentlemen,—In view of your request I will accept nomination for the Waterworks Commissionership, and, at your request, will do what I can, if elected, in the way of placing my knowledge of the system and its workings at the service of the town.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN E. [illegible]

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—In 1900 the town of Neepawa assumed the municipal ownership of electric lights and established a telephone service. The project met with the usual interested opposition; it was prophesied that the first year would show a deficit of at least $4,000. The Neepawa Register, after a year's trial of the scheme, republishes the prognostications of its opponents, and sets against them the following facts:

"At the town meeting a year ago Mayor Howden gave a thorough explanation of affairs in connection with the plant during the portion of a year it had been in operation, and claimed that a fair test would show the town's expenditure to have been a splendid investment. That the mayor was far from being unduly optimistic is borne out by the figures we give below. These show the receipts and expenses up to the end of November. Mayor Howden has made himself fully conversant with the operation of the plant, and has devoted a great deal of time in oversight of it, and is to be congratulated upon the results shown. There are 1,400 incandescent lights installed, which with the street lights makes a total of 1,550; while the number of telephones in use is 130. The figures are:

Receipts.

Incandescent lighting	$4,484 73
Street lighting	1,150 00
Telephones	1,870 00
Total	$7,504 73

Expenses

Wood	$1,600 00
Oils	175 57
Salaries	2,105 52
Insurance	280 90
Repairs, etc.	289 58
Incidentals	277 50
Interest	1,050 80
		$5,779 36

Leaving a profit of ... ...$1,725 37 which will pay the interest due last year, $720; sinking fund for same year, $600; and sinking fund for this year, $600. In the above statement the salaries, interest and sinking fund have been computed up till the end of 1901, so that we have the month of December to the good, less the amount of wood burned, and this should add another $300 to our profit account. Next year we should be able to improve considerably on this showing, as by use of the water power we will reduce our expenditure for fuel, besides adding to the years of usefulness of our machinery."

THE FUNCTIONS OF SCHOOL BOARDS

Because the Board of School Trustees is dependent on the Council for its appropriation, it may be supposed that it is a secondary body in other senses. There could be no greater mistake. It is one of the most important bodies of the whole community, and parents should see to it that men of the best kind offering are selected to represent them. On their good or bad administration depends the health and general welfare as well as the mental training of the little ones. In the larger cities of the United States this view of the matter is coming to be better understood. The Principals' Association of New York has just held a meeting, and the proceedings indicate that school boards across the lines have not been any more selected for their fitness to deal with the general economy of the public schools than they have in Canada; the principals have apparently undertaken the task of leading to the desired reforms, and demonstrating for the benefit of the people the closer relationship existing between not only the health of the children attending the schools, but of the public generally. One feature of the meeting referred to was the examination of a sanitary expert on the condition of the schools. It is to be hoped that in connection with one subject he touched upon we are better off in Canada than they are in Greater New York, for it was stated that "the school rooms in this borough (Brooklyn) are not thoroughly scrubbed out more than once a year," and this provoked the not unreasonable plea that it is high time that some women were appointed on the district boards "who know something about housekeeping, and who will not rest until the schools are kept at least as clean as the average of the homes from which the children are drawn." Attention to the care of the teeth and the regular medical inspection was strongly urged. Objection is sometimes raised to what some regard as the intrusion of domestic matters into the school arena. No one would advocate any undue intrusion of the kind, but the schools are a domestic matter of the highest order, and must be regarded as such. The school board of the future must be elected with this in view, and it is none too soon to make a start.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Notice was given by Ald. Crane, in Toronto Council, that he will move that a petition be presented from the Council to the Dominion parliament, asking the government of Canada to pass such legislation as will enable them to take over and thereafter operate the telegraph and telephone systems in Canada, except so much thereof as pertains to railway companies' private business, and that a circular be prepared and sent to all the municipalities in Canada, urging them to send in similar petitions to parliament.

When You Know How.

"I WILL be beautiful," she said, as she turned away from the mirror. "Surely in this modern, progressive age it is possible for any girl to acquire beauty."

So she invested in all kinds of cosmetics, had them applied by an artist, and went to a big ball. The next morning she scanned the society columns of the papers eagerly, but there was not a word about "the beautiful Miss Brown." She merely figured among those who were "also present."

"Still," she added, "it is possible to be beautiful when you know how, and I will experiment until I discover the secret."

Thereupon she employed a beauty doctor, and was rubbed and massaged every day for a month or more, but it was no use. The gossip departments of the papers spoke of this girl and that girl as "beautiful," but never of "the beautiful Miss Brown."

"Possibly," she thought, "something is the matter with my gowns. Much depends upon proper harmony or contrast, which often makes the beauty. I will have one designed especially for me by the most gifted of costumers."

The papers said she was "beautifully gowned," but that was all.

"I will become engaged," she cried, in despair. "If necessary, I will marry. Brides are almost invariably beautiful."

But when her engagement was announced the papers merely referred to her as "the charming and gifted Miss Brown."

"Alas!" she exclaimed, "can I not be beautiful? Is that great boon possessed by so many girls, no more favored by nature than I am, to be always denied to me? What is life to me, if I am thus handicapped? A mockery, truly! I will have none of it."

In this humor she went boating, and, giving it the appearance of an accident, deliberately fell into the water, from which she was quickly rescued by an athletic young man.

"Why," she cried, the next day, as she thought it all over, "was I not allowed to die?"

Then her glance fell upon a daily paper, and her eyes instantly brightened.

"Gallant rescue of a beautiful girl," she read. "Pretty Adele Brown, the beauty of the season, saved from a watery grave."

"Why, of course," she commented, thoughtfully. "It's very simple when you know how. Now I think of it, a rescue or a scandal will make a girl beautiful any day."—N.Y. "Town Topics."

Funny Answers.

An English teacher, commenting on the "wonderfully funny" answers given by his pupils to questions, cites the following specimens:

A boy, aged ten, thus answers a question as to the cause of the Transvaal disturbances: "Krugger and Kannerbullism is one. He is a man of blud. Mr. Chamberling has wrote to him sayin' come out and fite or else give up the blud of the English you have took. he is a boardutchman and a wickid heethin. lord Kitchener has sent for his goary blud and to bring back his scanderlus hed ded or alive."

An essay on Gladstone, by a boy of eleven, states: "Mr. Gladstone lovd everybody. he lovd publicans and cinners and Irishmen. he wanted the irish to come to England and have home reel, but Mr. Chamberlin says, no, no. so alars he got his blud up and killd Mr. Parnel. Mr. Gladstone died with great rispect and is burried in Westminster with pieceful ashes."

The Duke of Norfolk takes pleasure in telling many stories about himself. Here is one of them: A large party of Americans arrived one day at Arundel, with an order to go over the Castle. As the butler was away, the Duke, fond of a joke, acted his part, and conducted them personally through the various stately rooms. They plied him hard with questions, such as, "What sort of man is the Duke?" "Is he good-looking?" "Couldn't we have a peep at him somewhere?" "Is he a good master?" "And how long have you been in his service?" etc. The Duke preserved a perfectly rigid demeanor through all this personal cannonade, replying respectfully to all their queries, and when the party left was rewarded with a handsome tip of half a crown.

is a disease of civilization. When the Indian was a stranger to the white man he had no name in his vocabulary for this dreaded malady.

Without arguing as to the curability of consumption, it may be stated positively that Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures weak lungs, hemorrhages, bronchitis, deep-seated and stubborn cough, and other diseases which if neglected or unskillfully treated find a fatal termination in consumption. There is no alcohol in the "Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

Persons suffering from chronic diseases are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence is conducted under the seal of sacred secrecy. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

In a little over thirty years, Dr. Pierce, assisted by his medical staff of nearly a score of physicians, has treated and cured thousands of men and women who had been given up as incurable by local physicians.

A NOVEL

Lady Blanche bent and kissed the girl's lips.

"Forgive you!" she cried briskly. "Of course he will; only give him the chance. Poor Ormande! Why, he looked the picture of misery. You cruel little thing, to make him so unhappy! I never saw a man so wretched in all my life!" Then, with a burst of true feeling: "My dearest child, you have taken a load off my mind. I never thought of this. I feared and imagined the worst, and instead there comes this delightful news that the very thing for which I have longed so much—a romance between you and Ormande—really exists, and will exist on, let us hope, for years and years. Forgive you! Of course he will; and listen, Barbara—he shall come here this very evening, and you——"

"Don't tell him I am here when when you send." There was no mistaking the eagerness in Miss Mostyn's voice. "I—I should not like that."

Lady Blanche pinched the girl's flushed cheek.

"Trust me," she nodded her head gently. "I am no fool, as you shall see, my child, and will be the first to own in the future. There, kiss me, Barbara, my dear; henceforth, my daughter, you have made me happier than I have felt for many—many a day, and——"

"But," Barbara broke in hurriedly, "you must not expect too much to-night, dear Lady Blanche. Remember, Ormande has to forgive me, and he cannot do it all at once," with a shy, nervous laugh. "Think of his dignity. No, I must humble myself first, but cannot expect to be received back into favor too soon."

"You are two silly children, and don't deserve to be humored; but there"—with another kiss—"I promise to be deaf and blind until you allow me to see, hear, question and congratulate."

And Barbara Mostyn drew a sharp sigh of acute relief. So far, so well; before eight should be ended she would have played the last card in the game and that was to land her into that desirable position of Ormande's wife and future Countess of Chancecourt.

What would be the result?

CHAPTER XXVI.

Ormande, Lord Otway, was toiling wearily up the stairs of his humble, unpretentious home on the evening of the day that had seen the arrival of Miss Mostyn in London. He had had a long, tiring day among the poverty-stricken and the sick; working to comfort and console—working to forget.

He stood for a moment in the doorway of his room, then hesitated; then, as if urged by some uncontrollable power, he moved across to a writing-table, and unlocking one of the drawers, drew out a small piece of paper and gazed at it with an earnestness that was almost painful. It was a rough pencil sketch of Katharine's lovely face. Ormande had seen Captain Derwent doing this picture, and, waiting his opportunity, had managed to persuade the young officer to give him the sketch. It was his dearest—his saddest—possession.

"If I had but saved her!" he groaned; "if she were only free from this shadow and taint of sin, even though Death itself claimed her, I should be content! Oh, my dear, dear love! Lost—lost to me and to Heaven!"

It was not often he permitted himself to give way, and now, with an effort, he controlled his emotion, and looking away the sweet pencilled face, he rose resolutely to his feet.

Then, for the first time, he became aware of a note awaiting him on the table.

"From Aunt Blanche," he murmured, brushing his eyes, and opening the envelope.

Lady Blanche wrote only a few lines.

"Dear Ormande—If you have no other engagement, I wish you would run up and dine with us to-night. I want to see you particularly. Don't disappoint me this time, my dear boy; I see nothing of you now.

"Your affectionate aunt,
"Blanche Bellairs."

"Poor Aunt Blanche," Ormande murmured to himself. "I am too selfish. I forgot that she and Marian were all alone. I must go to-night, weary though I am. The sooner I wean myself from solitude the better!"

Nevertheless, it was with a heavy sigh that Ormande dressed for dinner and drove off to the hotel where Lady Blanche was staying. He was cheered a little by the warm greeting he received, and smiled like his old self as Marian Adair flung her arms round his neck with a cry of joy not to be mistaken.

Dinner was served at once, and then Lady Blanche spoke of the business for which, presumably, she had summoned her nephew this evening. She seemed in very good spirits Ormande thought, and he exerted himself to be as bright as he could.

Once dinner was over, Lady Blanche made a sign to Marian.

"I know you will excuse me, Ormande, but it is time for Marian to have the bandages changed, and I like to superintend this all myself. Go into the other room. I don't suppose you will be very dull. You will find all the newspapers, and"—with an imperceptible pause—"and other things."

Ormande, of course, obeyed his aunt, and sauntered into the adjoining apartment, but no sooner there than he started back with a sudden exclamation.

"Miss Mostyn! You here?"

What a crowd of horrible memories rose to torment him as he stood meeting that set, cold smile! He was too surprised even to take the hand Barbara extended to him.

"You here?" was all he could say.

Barbara came toward him softly.

"Yes; I would not let Lady Blanche tell you. I wanted to give you a surprise, Lord Otway," with a tiny little pause and a sigh. "I—I hope it is a pleasant one to you."

Ormande put his hand into hers.

"How could it be otherwise?" he said quite mechanically. In vision his eyes seemed to see that other pale, beautiful face gleaming from beyond Barbara's neat, fashionable head.

"Oh, I am so glad—so glad!" she cried, and so saying, she drew him across the room to a comfortable chair.

"Sit down," she said softly, "and let us chat. I have so much to talk about."

She drew up another chair, and sank into it with a rustle of her silk skirts, then, glancing at him: "How pale you are!" she exclaimed.

Ormande passed his hand over his brow.

"The heat of this summer has tried me very much," he answered, evasively. He felt a sense of annoyance and disgust creep over him. In a vague sort of way he seemed to recognize that he had been tricked into meeting this girl, for whom he had nothing but dislike and contempt.

"Ah, yes; and you work so hard," Barbara said, with a tender inflection in her voice. "You need some one to take care of you, Lord Otway, and see that you do not fall ill."

"A man is a poor thing if he cannot stand his share of work," Ormande answered coldly. Not one word was mentioned about Katharine, for which Ormande was grateful. To have to listen to harsh, vulgar abuse of her, even though he believed her to be living in sin, would have been more than he could bear; and he knew that Miss Mostyn would have no womanly tenderness in touching on the subject. He little guessed how cruel and wrong Barbara had acted toward the girl whose only fault had been her unconscious rivalry with the heiress of Brexley Hall.

"I am afraid Marian must be ill," he said, quietly, "or my aunt would not have neglected you, as she appears to be doing now, Miss Mostyn."

"Oh, please don't trouble, Lord Otway. I am such an old friend of dear Lady Blanche's that she knows I shall make myself at home; besides, I want for nothing while you are with me."

Ormande frowned. These words, and more especially the manner in which they were uttered, jarred on him painfully.

"Nevertheless, I think I will find her," he said with increased coldness.

Barbara rose as he was moving, and put one hand on his arm.

"Don't go," she whispered, with a flush rising to her face. "I want to speak to you, Lord Otway, very particularly."

* * *

When Lady Blanche returned to her room from attending to Marian's wants, she found Miss Mostyn standing alone by an open window.

"Where is Ormande?" she asked in surprise.

"Lord Otway has gone." Barbara's voice was choked and thick, her face was also very pale. "You—you promised not to ask any questions, dear Lady Blanche," she said hurriedly. "He—he cannot quite forgive me; but—it is sure to come right; quite sure to come right in the end!"

Lady Blanche smiled and nodded her head.

"Silly children!" she remarked, as she kissed Barbara and said good-night. "But, there, you are only like all other lovers since the world began, and no one can arrange these matters save your two important selves. Now run away, and sleep well, my dear—and dream of the happiness in the future!"

Lady Blanche might have modified her cheerfulness if she had known the real truth, that Barbara Mostyn had humiliated herself so far as to offer her hand and her fortune to Ormande, Lord Otway, and had received a cold, courteous refusal, a refusal in which contempt and astonishment mingled to a large degree. Even Lady Blanche would have stood aghast had she known this; for, middle-aged as she was, she was still as modest as a girl; but Barbara never intended any one to know, and as she walked down to her bedroom that night—baffled, and raging with anger—she swore that not only would she be Ormande's wife yet, but that, once in that coveted position, she would punish him severely for all the disappointment and vexation his conduct had caused her. She had no plans but her brain was skilful in manipulating mean and dishonorable things and that she would be even with Ormande she never for one moment allowed herself to doubt.

Lady Blanche Bellairs and Barbara were seated at breakfast the next morning, and enjoying a good feminine chat, while Mrs. Trevanion was engaged in performing commissions for her tyrannical mistress and niece, and Marian Adair was at her lessons, and wondering sadly when her dear Craven would send her news from Australia, when the door was opened and Lady Drummond came in with a rush.

"Now, what do you think?" she cried, before she had barely got through the formality of shaking hands with Lady Blanche, and bestowing a nod on Barbara. "I heard the news last night; met Carruthers, who told me you were here, Barbara, and so up I rushed to tell you all about it, and vindicate my cause!"

"That sounds like Bedlam!" Barbara said coldly; she had a presentiment something disagreeable was going to happen.

Lady Drummond shrugged her lip, and nodded her head.

"Wait a moment, my dear!" she observed, with annoying coolness. "First of all, I have found out Katharine and her husband——"

"Husband!" broke in Barbara, sneeringly.

"Yes, Barbara, husband! Ah, I know I was right! If ever honesty, purity and uprightness were written on a woman's face, that face was Katharine Brereton's. You would fall in love with her at once, I know, Lady Blanche; you could not help it."

"Lady Blanche, fortunately for herself, is gifted with more wisdom and common sense," was Barbara's rude reply; to which, however, her aunt made no direct response.

"Yes, I have found Katharine, and found her, not an outcast, or a disgraced woman, but one who will rank with yourself, Barbara. She has inherited all old Dalrymple's money, and her home, henceforth will be at her own estate, Charlton Abbey."

Lady Blanche gave an exclamation, and Barbara was rendered speechless.

Charlton Abbey, the one place above all others of which she had ever been jealous and envious; it was situated only eight miles from Brexley, and had always been a thorn in Miss Mostyn's side, rising as far above her own possession in antiquity, beauty and value as the diamond does above glass. And this had come to Katharine, the girl she loathed, hated and detested! The thought was maddening.

"Pray where did you get this fairy story from, Aunt Ellen?" she asked with a very disagreeable laugh.

"From Mr. Montrose, who happens to be one of Katharine Sm, the's trustees——"

A Curious Man's Thoughts on Winter.

At the moment of writing it is only fair to say that King Frost has not yet got us in his icy grip. But as it is not unusual to expect something of the sort at this season of the year, we may very well stand up and look at the prospect of sport which any seasonable weather of the kind may bring us. There is sliding for instance. If you don't happen to possess a pair of skates, or to own a friend who will lend you a pair, Nature is determined that you shall not lose all chance of risking your neck, just because you are lacking the usual outfit.

Of course for really superior slides you ought to put a little water down overnight; but as you have probably grown out of little frivolities of that sort, you can confidently rely on your next door neighbor's little boy doing what is necessary in the matter. Doubtless you will not leave your house in the morning with any idea of becoming actively engaged as a display slider. It is not until you find one of your feet slowly but surely creeping upwards to the sky, as the song says, that it will occur to you to throw up your hands and drop into the conventional attitude as a measure of self-protection. You will probably be encouraged in this course by noticing that a small but enthusiastic knot of bystanders is endeavoring to raise a cheer for your benefit. The next moment the programme comes off with a loud bang and you scramble to your feet, and address yourself loudly to nobody in particular in a way that makes the thoughtful observer trustfully hope that the recording angel wasn't looking your way at the moment.

It is commonly understood that the gentler sex are denied the relief that is afforded to mere man by the possession of an elastic vocabulary. But a casual slide that is spread out on the pavement is perfectly catholic in its tastes, and is open to receive all comers. The slide makes no invidious distinctions as to age or sex. Anybody with a limb to break is warmly welcome. It seems a little hard, however, that when an accident of this kind does take place by the unexpected co-operation of a member of the fair sex, the unhappy victim is almost invariably a lady who should be old enough to know better. The young and flighty damsels who could fall on an extemporaneous slide and make quite an elaborate and picturesque display of the business, are usually most successful in avoiding accidents of the kind; while, on the other hand, elderly ladies will practically make a bee-line for the trouble and then shower a liberal perspective of knitted wool and red flannel on the unsympathetic spectator.

The part that snow plays in our lives varies according to circumstances. As the poet said, distance lends enchantment to the view. And when you are looking at the snow-clad landscape over the top of something cheerful and hot in a large glass, there is doubtless a good deal to be said for the poetic side of beautiful snow. At the same time, I am not one who believes in coddling when the snow is on the ground. I am glad to say I can enjoy as well as anyone a brisk walk along the open country when the snow is lying thickly around; and I think there are few moments when one feels more keenly than at such times what a glorious lark it is to be alive. The tingling of the blood as it comes through the veins, imparting a healthy glow to the cheek and all the rest of the details, as per patent medicine advertisement, are all benefits of the snow that I keenly recognise and cordially appreciate. But what does me all up, so to speak, is to have a small boy come up behind and sock me unawares in the neck with a half-melted snowball.

Of course, we are all young, and, after all, we can afford to laugh at trouble of that kind. Usually, if I am out in a fair-to-medium suit of clothes, and I find that snowballing is in the air, I endeavor to make for cover. But if the worst comes to the worst, and I find that my hat has been knocked off and my clothes are more or less blobbed with melting patches of snow, I consider I have lost all the dignity I set out with, and that I may as well start throwing back. I have a sort of feeling that, since I am no longer respectable, I may as well go the whole hog and have my fling with the crowd. I always look forward with some dread to the winter in the distant future when I may have become too old, or as the East End damsel said, "too much of a bloomin' lydy," to throw back. It seems to me that it is very cruel to snowball an old fellow who can only dance around and squirm and call on high Heaven for help; and I have no doubt that it is precisely this aspect of the case that makes it so deliriously enjoyable to the average boy on the snowballing lay. Indeed, to regard the matter from a sportive standpoint, the boy may consider that the old gentleman is in the same boat as the hunted fox, who is said to enjoy the hunt as much as anybody.

A Queer Lawsuit.

The other day Mrs. Norma Adams and Samuel Gardner, who live on adjoining farms, began suit to determine the ownership of a brood of fourteen turkeys, says the San Francisco "Argonaut." The brood, headed by two old hens, a white and a bronze, had been running the fields of both farms all summer. Mrs. Adams owned the bronze hen and Mr. Gardner the white. Each claimed that their respective hen was the mother of the brood. One of the witnesses before the justice testified that he had once turned a dog upon the straggling band of turkeys. At the approach of the dog the young birds flew into a tree, the bronze hen ran into the woods, while the white hen stood under the tree and gave battle to the dog, which she repulsed, then called the brood to her, and they marched off. After hearing this witness, the justice decided that the white hen was the mother of the brood, and gave the turkeys to Gardner.

Rebuttal Evidence.

"There, my dear," said the returned hunter, "there's one bird for you, anyway. Bagged him just as I was about to give up in disgust." "Oh, George!" she exclaimed, "it's a carrier-pigeon, isn't it?" "Not much! It's a quail." "But it has a card tied to its leg, with some message on it. Let's see. It says: 'Jona Jones, Poultry and Game, Central Market.'"—Philadelphia "Press."

Curious Bits of News.

Luigi Garreno, a journalist of Rome, in order to get up a story on the Pope's daily life, recently secured employment in the Vatican as a gardener.

Petrified tropical fruits have been found in coal from Spitzbergen, the island group in the Arctic Ocean, midway between Greenland and Nova Zembla.

A writer in "Blackwood's Magazine" mentions as an incident of life in Labrador the burial of a live pet in a barrel under the November snow. The owner of the animal (a black bear, by the way) dug up the barrel twice during the winter, but did not awaken the occupant, who was permitted to sleep on till May.

Edward Beaupre of the Territory of Assiniboia, Canada, claims to be the tallest man in the world. His exact height is seven feet, ten and three-fourths inches, and he is still growing, and expects to reach the eight-foot mark. He is twenty years old, wears a number twenty-one shoe and a number twenty-one collar.

A Chinese manuscript lately discovered in the Paris library proves the startling fact that anaesthetics were used in China seventeen hundred years ago. A certain concoction, it states, was given by the doctors before performing an operation, which rendered the patient unconscious. The anaesthetic was a simple preparation of hemp.

The translation of the Bible from ancient to modern Greek, against which students in the Grecian capital have been rioting, and coming into fatal conflicts with troops, was ordered by Queen Olga, because she found so many Greeks could not read the language of their classic ancestors. The students oppose the translation on the ground that it would be desecration to put the Bible into Greek as it is now spoken.

Four hundred and ten thousand immigrants landed on the shores of the United States last year. Many of them were Christians, many others were not. The majority even of those who were had no copy of the Bible. In the hands of each, as he set foot upon the soil of his new home, the New York Bible Society placed a copy of the Scriptures. Twenty-one different languages were represented, the largest number being in German, the next largest in Swedish.

Because a beautiful young white woman, the heroine in Sir Walter Besant's serial story, "No Other Way," is forced to marry a negro criminal, the "Sunny South," one of the leading literary weeklies of the South, has announced the discontinuance of the publication of the story. The "Sunny South" declares the story passes the dead-line of Southern sentiment. It appears that the novel was selected after a synopsis had been submitted, and not until the fourth instalment were the objectionable features discovered. The editors declare the plot of the story to be "an obsession, the result of mental indigestion, from which we shall endeavor to save our readers."

Hang Trouble on a Chair.

"Laugh and grow fat" is a saying as old as the hills. It has long been an accepted fact that humor is a promoter of digestion and merry words the deadliest foes of disease. A doctor named Kennedy writes an interesting article on the value of laughter, in which he shows it is not only a remedial agent, but is also a valuable preventive against a host of diseases. The physical effects of laughter are thus put down by Dr. Kennedy: Laughter increases the blood circulation. It enlarges the heart. It expands the lungs. It jiggers the diaphragm. It promotes the dioculation of the spleen. In other words, laughter stirs up the vital regions of the body, gives them healthful exercise, and produces a mental exhilaration which acts upon the system much as a brisk walk in a crisp atmosphere does upon the appetite. As strong allies to laughter, Dr. Kennedy gives the following directions for mental peace of mind: Beware of theologians who have no sense of mirth; they are not altogether human. Keep your chin up. Don't take your troubles to bed with you; hang them on a chair with your trousers or drop them in a glass of water with your teeth.

Society Slang.

It is rather amusing to watch the changes in society slang; for the "best" society has its own special vulgarities, which change from decade to decade—even from year to year. Lady Blessington, if she were reincarnated and suddenly projected into a woman's afternoon chatter at a smart club, would think she had missed her country, observes an English exchange. A few years ago it was the mode to scatter Gallicisms freely into conversation. But the French craze has passed, and even such an old servant as "chic" is never heard, and rarely seen but in the fashion articles. To-day's slang—in the "best" circles of England—has probably reached the lowest depth of fatuous vulgarity. Its keynote is abbreviation. What are "undies?" Well, they are the things that a woman puts on first in the morning and takes off last at night, when she gets into her "nighties." "Tinny-winny" is another favorite Masonic word among those in the social know. It corresponds to the 'bus conductor's "little bit of all-right." And if you want to go a step further in compliment, you may describe your new frock—if you are a woman in the "best" set—as "quite too deevie for words." We hope Dr. Murray has a contributor on the pounce for these words in Mayfair. He has missed "deevie" from the New English Dictionary, but he is in time for "tinny-winny," to say nothing—as, of course, nothing should be said—of "undies."

Surgeon (after the operation)—I am glad to be able to assure you, Mrs. Tyte-Phist, that the danger is now over and your husband will recover. We have successfully removed the appendix vermiformis, and it is of such a unique formation that I shall preserve it for use in my medical lectures. Mr. Tyte-Phist (opening his eyes)—You'll allow me something for it, I suppose, doctor?—Ex.

"How did it happen?" "Oh, I got into a game where the limit was the ceiling—and somebody took off the ceiling."

Ever since the Forth bridge was opened—eleven years ago—painting has gone on continuously, according to the "Mechanical Engineer." "Beginning at the south end, the workmen take three years to cover the entire length of the bridge, and, as three years represents approximately the life of the paint, no sooner are they finished than the men have to begin again. In this way every square inch of steel comes under observation at least once in three years. The staff of men employed varies in number from the maximum of 35."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

THE Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for hours without a touching. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Pr
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.
1	28½ in.	9 in.	12.
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.00
4	41 in.	15 in.	22.00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 30 feet, with 15 feet ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

[NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The market to-day should be well attended.

—There was a considerable amount of wood on the market yesterday.

—The Ashburnham Public School concert will be held on Friday night.

—The morning trains on the C.P.R. were late yesterday owing to a run off this side of Tweed.

—The C.G.E. Co. expect to have their power house at Auburn in running order by March 1st.

—The Girls' Guild of All Saints intend giving a social evening on Shrove Tuesday, Feb. 11th.

—The sleighing in the country is very good. There are a number of pitch holes.

—The last dance under the auspices of the Knickerbocker Club will be held to-morrow evening.

—The ruts on George street are very dangerous, and we would suggest that the town grader be used to level them down.

—The Peterborough hockey club play in Cobourg to-night, and will be accompanied by a large crowd of backers.

—The Peterborough Cheese Board will hold their annual meeting on Saturday, Feb. 8. Important business will be dealt with.

—Messrs. Hawthorne and Edminson have completed their work on the equalized assessment of the county, and the report will be laid before the present session of the County Council.

—The non-coms dance on Tuesday next promises to be the most largely attended affair of the kind held in town this season. The Committee is working very energetically to make the dance a success.

—A brisk runaway took place yesterday morning on Hunter street, when a horse attached to a cutter, took fright and dashed around the Post Office corner, and up Water st., where it was stopped. No damage was done.

—Mr. Whiten requests us to state that if there are any of the royal chorus that have not had their photos taken yet they must come at once or they will be too late to be in the group.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Mr. Harry Phelan Has a Narrow Escape from Being Killed

Mr. Harry Phelan had a narrow escape from being killed yesterday afternoon. He was walking down Simcoe street, and when opposite P. Grady's hack livery met a runaway horse which turned into Grady's yard, knocking him down. By great exertion he jumped up and caught the horse, thereby saving his own life, and saving Mr. Grady's hack from destruction. Mr. Phelan is to be complimented upon his plucky and daring act, and we are pleased to know that he came through the experience without a scratch.

Your vote and influence is respectfully solicited by T. F. MATTHEWS, Candidate for the office of Water Commissioner.

SPLENDID RESULTS AND PERFECT SUCCESS WHEN THE DIAMOND DYES ARE USED

Diamond Dyes have long ago become the popular dyes in the homes of the civilized world. They are sure and reliable under all circumstances, giving the choicest, most brilliant and most lasting colors.

Diamond Dyes are the safest to use in the home. No poisonous ingredients to irritate the hands are ever used in the manufacture of these famed dyes. Common and imitation package dyes are largely composed of dangerous materials.

Diamond Dyes are so easy to use that a child can dye as successfully as a grown person. Beware of common and crude dyes sold simply for the sake of large profits. Insist upon having the Diamond Dyes and your work will be well done.

If you are interested in home mat and rug making, send your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, and you will receive the season's designs to select from.

The Salvation Army

The red-hot revivalists of Toronto, are coming to Peterborough for a twelve days' campaign, and will hold forth in the Salvation Army barracks, commencing to-night. The party comprises Brigadier Pugmire, Staff Captain Manton, and Capt. Urquhart.

Red Hot Revivalists

Brigadier Pugmire was converted in an Army meeting in the old land a number of years ago and became an Officer shortly afterwards. He has commanded some of the Army's largest Corps, notably Brighton, Regent Hall, and Clapton Congress Hall in London, England. In the latter place over a thousand souls were brought to Christ during his ten months' campaign. He also served in the United States, having pioneered the Colored work in the Kansas and Missouri district.

The Brigadier and Mrs. Pugmire were distinguished by the honor of being placed in the jail at Fort Scott, for preaching Christ in the open air.

For two and a half years he had the oversight of the Army's work in the Maritime Provinces; then he became Social Secretary at Territorial Headquarters. Very recently he relinquished the Provincial Officership of the East Ontario and Quebec Province since which time he has been appointed Spiritual Special by the Commissioner.

The Brigadier possesses a splendid voice, a kind spirit, and a compassionate heart, and is an excellent soloist, a good musician and an attractive and successful platform worker.

The Brigadier is accompanied by Staff Captain Manton, of Toronto. The Staff Captain is one of the oldest Salvationists in Canada, and has been an officer for seventeen years, having served in many different parts of Canada. For the past five years he has held various positions at the Territorial Headquarters. The Staff-Captain is a very sweet singer, and is specially suited for revival work.

Capt. Urquhart is a lad of considerable musical ability and hails from Eastern Canada.

The Peterborough Army had a special day last Sunday. Their meeting, which commenced at 10.30 a.m., did not finish until 10 p.m., some of the soldiers put in a full day without refreshments, at the barracks. In the evening twenty new members were sworn in. Success to them.

About fifty-one people have professed conversion in the Army during the past three months. Welcome news this from any source.

Capt. Maude Patterson, who has seen some years' service on the coast, delivered a lecture to the Band of Love last evening on "British Columbia, its People, Products and Prospects," which was highly instructive.

HANDY HUSBAND

Knew How to Get Part of the Breakfast Anyhow

"'I know one dish I can prepare for breakfast as well as any cook on earth,' said my husband one day when the cook was ill and he had volunteered to help get breakfast. He appeared with his dish and I discovered it was Grape-Nuts, which, of course it was easy to prepare for it was perfectly cooked at the factory, but it was a good illustration of the convenience of having Grape-Nuts about.

We just added a little cream, and, of course, had a delicious bit of food. We took up Grape-Nuts immediately after returning from a five years' sojourn in a hot country, and our stomachs were in bad condition and we were in bad health generally.

When we first tried it I confess we thought there were other and better things to eat and were told we must acquire a taste for this new food. Sure enough, in a day or two we liked Grape-Nuts better than any other kind of food on the table. We both gained steadily in health and strength, and this was caused by Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee.

A friend of ours had a similar experience. She was seriously ill with indigestion and could find nothing to eat that would not give her heart burn and palpitation, especially at night.

She found that a small dish of Grape-Nuts with cream made her a satisfactory supper and gave her a comfortable night's rest. In a short time she gained several pounds in weight." The writer lives in Topeka, Kan. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE KEYSTONE LAID.

BY MAYOR T. H. G. DENNE YESTERDAY AFTERNOON

At the Power House of the Otonabee Power Company at No. 5 Dam

The new power house of the Otonabee Power Company was the scene of a very interesting event yesterday afternoon, being the occasion of the laying the keystone over the main entrance by his Worship Mayor Denne in the presence of over fifty prominent citizens of the town and county among whom were Aldermen Clinkscale, Batten, Rush, McGregor and Shortly, representing the town council; Messrs. G. W. Fitzgerald and P. Costello, representing County Council; Messrs. T. F. Matthews, P. Hamilton, and Wm. Hamilton, jr., representing the manufacturers; Messrs. E. M. Elliot, Jas. Davidson, Jas. English, Wm. Fair, Adam Hall, President Canadian Cordage & Manufacturing Company; W. G. Ferguson, sec'y. Otonabee Power Co.; W. H. Meldrum, Manager Otonabee Power Co., and others too numerous to mention.

At two o'clock yesterday afternoon the invited guests assembled at the Town Council chamber and proceeded from there to No. 5 dam, about four miles north of town, on the Otonabee river. Several sleighs were required to convey the party to the new power house, which is in the course of erection. On arriving there those of the party who felt chilly warmed themselves at a large bonfire, after which they made a short inspection of the work which is being done. At 3.30 the party were called together in front of the building, and Mr. George Fitzgerald, County Councillor, addressed the assemblage, and said it was a great pleasure to him to be present to-day, at this important event, the laying of the key-stone of the building to be occupied as a power house by the Otonabee Power Co. The County Council had been invited, but as their duties were important, they could not come in a body and had selected Mr. Costello and himself to represent the Council at this important event. Some months ago considerable commotion had been made regarding the lease of the dam from the Dominion Government. The lease had been secured after some delay, and now the building for the power house was nearly completed and the work of building piers and excavating for the wheel pits was rapidly nearing completion. He was one of the first to subscribe for stock in the company and as a result of the efforts of those interested in the organization of this company, we are assembled here to witness a most pleasing and interesting ceremony to-day. He then called on Mayor Denne to place the keystone in position.

THE KEYSTONE

being placed in position by His Worship, he turned to the assemblage, and said, "I declare the keystone of the Otonabee Power Company well and truly laid." His Worship said the duties of the Mayor of the Town of Peterborough are very numerous but this was a new duty and a very great pleasure to be present here to-day to lay the keystone of the Otonabee Power Co. The company are starting off under unusually good prospects. At the present time they have contracts signed which will bring in a revenue of $8,500, and contracts assured to the company amounting to $6,000, making a total revenue counted on by the company of $13,500. In wishing the company every success, I am repeating the wish of a very large majority of the manufacturers and citizens of the Town and of the County. A few years ago work was started in the Trent Valley Canal and this is the first immediate result of the work done, which will be a very great benefit to the town. In concluding, Mayor Denne expressed the wish that his successor and successors may have the opportunity of performing the same pleasant duty which he had just performed, at every dam on the river between Peterborough and Lakefield. The Town Council have always been pleased to deal with manufacturers who were looking for a site in the town, and was always prepared to deal with them in a most reasonable manner, and he was sure would always continue to do so. Again expressing his wish that this undertaking will prove a success for those interested in the organization and management of the company, the Mayor retired.

EX-REEVE ADAMS

of Ashburnham, was next called, and replied as follows:

Mr. Mayor and Gentlemen,—I cannot express my thanks for the invitation to be present to-day at this pleasant event. I am greatly surprised at the magnitude of the work on hand, and at the large amount already completed. I think the undertaking of the Otonabee Power Company in putting in so large a plant for the generation of electric power will have a very great influence on the growth of the town and the village of Ashburnham. He assured the company that he wished them every success.

Mr. P. Hamilton was next called on and said he had not expected to be called on and had not thought of anything in particular to say. About 30 years ago we did not dream of power being produced on the Otonabee River and transmitted to manufacturing concerns miles away. We find many changes to-day from what it was 30 years ago. In those days a manufacturer must have water to turn his machinery—to-day electric power was transmitted 100 and 200 miles in many places. The future is before us and we must make the best of it. The large amount of power generated here will have considerable influence in increasing the manufacturing interests of the Town of Peterborough. We cannot tell what will take place in one or two years but no doubt the fact of getting a large amount of power at a very cheap rate will make an immense improvement in the town.

Mr. T. F. Matthews said that those present would greatly appreciate the invitation extended to them to be present by the members of the Power Company. He had pictured to himself what work was being done but his eyes had been opened to-day, his calculations were not equal to the amount of work done. The nerve energy and muscle that had been employed in the undertaking were deserving of success and new manufacturers and others would receive power much cheaper than ever before. The enterprise is backed by the entire population of the town and while considerable amusement had been aroused over dam No. 5 he was sure that the company would have the hearty support of the entire community.

Mr. R. R. Hall, Solicitor for the company, was next called on and in reply said it was very gratifying and pleasing to them to see such a representative attendance at this ceremony. Since the first steps were taken to organize the company it had not been all plain sailing. Some obstacles had been placed in the way which have been removed and will, in the end, be a great benefit to the town. A paper published in the States advertises the town of Peterborough as the best place in America to obtain sufficient water and electric power at very cheap rates for manufacturing purposes. The company had a large number of communications from American manufacturers asking for rates for electric power with a view of locating here. He thought that the town council should become interested in the work of the newly formed Trent Water Conservation Association which was formed to try and induce the government to take some steps to have a more better regulated flow of water in the Otonabee and connecting waters.

After Mr. Hall had concluded speaking those assembled viewed the work in the rock cut where a large number of men are employed in taking out the rock for the foundation of the wheel pits. The power house is 25x40 feet and is built entirely of stone, which was taken out of the raceway below the dam, the wheel house will be 25x65 feet directly under which the wheel pits are being made. The tail race is 600 feet long and 75 feet wide giving a good outlet to the water after it has passed through the wheels.

The work of excavation will be completed in about two weeks and then the wheel pits will be built and the machinery will be placed in position. The machinery will be capable of producing 1500 H.P. and machinery for another 500 H.P will be installed when required. The entire electric plant was purchased from the C.G.E. Co. and is now being set up. The pole line for the transmission of the power is completed now into the village of Ashburnham. The Company having got permission from the G.T.R. Co. to put the poles along the right-of-way of the company. The village of Ashburnham has given the required permission for the poles to be placed along certain streets in the village. The Town Council have also dealt very generously with the company and gave them permission to place a pole line along such streets as was necessary to reach their numerous customers. A shot was set off in the rock cut at the power house to show the guests how it worked.

About 6 o'clock the party returned to town well pleased with their outing as the guests of The Otonabee Power Company.

CARD TO ELECTORS

To the Electors of the Town of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been urged by the numerous friends of Municipal Ownership to allow myself to be placed in nomination for one of the Water Commissioners, I have consented to be a Candidate. The grounds upon which they urge my election are, amongst others, that I am really the father of Municipal Ownership in this town, and have consistently fought the battle therefor throughout, and that at its incipient or experimental stage, such a one should be given the first opportunity to prove the feasibility of the scheme. They further urge that my record has been pure from all cliques and other corrupting influences, and that I will stand up fearlessly for the rights of all alike, without fear, favour or affection. It is needless to say that if elected I will do my utmost to carry out the most sanguine expectations of my numerous friends and water consumers generally. Respectfully asking you one and all for your vote and influence, I am, ladies and gentlemen,

Your Obedient Servant,

GEORGE BALL.

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT HEALTH RESTORER FOR OLD AND YOUNG.

The indorsation of Paine's Celery Compound by men occupying high positions in the medical profession has not been brought about by hasty conclusions. Their verdict in its favor was pronounced only after severe tests and direct proofs of cures.

Medical evidence freely given by honest and unbiased physicians, places Paine's Celery Compound ahead of all other prescriptions and medicines as an infallible cure for rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous diseases, liver and kidney troubles, derangements of the stomach, and troubles arising from an impure condition of the blood.

Mrs. L. Lefave, Chapleau, Ont., writes about herself and daughter as follows: "For years I was troubled with rheumatism and nervousness. I was treated by doctors, and tried medicine after medicine without any good results. Fortunately a friend of mine advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound. I did so, and after using four bottles I found I was stronger and better than I had been for years. My daughter was cured of kidney disease after suffering for twelve years, by using a few bottles of the compound."

and those of all the others. So in connection with missionary work, the B. and F. Bible Society is the blacksmith, supplying the Word in the languages required. The Church Missionary Society which last year received between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 and circulated the scriptures in 100 different tongues, received them all from this Society. And all others had to come to the same source. Every missionary in China, Japan and India turns his eyes back to England saying "send the Book in this language." The missionary work of to-day would simply collapse were it not for the Bible Society. It is carrying on a marvellous work in its own way and on its own lines. Last year they published 5,047,719 copies of the Scriptures, and not long ago exceeded their funds by $40,000 for its translation into the Russian tongue. It has now been translated into 406 languages, 1,000 persons are engaged in the work of translation. About 2,000 languages remain into which to translate it, but these 406 are the great conquering languages.

The bible is now within the reach of 1,200,000,000 souls. 812 male colporteurs were engaged last year, and 612 bible women. These women read the Word to 40,000 heathen women every week, and advanced 2,700 to a knowledge of reading themselves. They distributed during the year 22,884 copies of the scriptures. Christ had said "Other sheep have I which are not of this flock," and the work of this Society was as much divinely sanctioned as "the church, the bible, or the ministry.

The Upper Canada Society is the strongest auxiliary in the world, having 600 branches. Last year we sent $6,948.50 as a free contribution to the B. and F. Society; $3,000 to the Quebec Auxiliary, distributed 27,450 copies of Scripture, and had seven colporteurs engaged.

There are three ways of rendering most valuable service—by prayer, work and giving. A little girl once asked as a birthday gift, two bibles, one in English, and one in the Hindoo language. In one she wrote her own name, and kept it as her own. In the Hindoo copy she wrote: "From Annie, a little girl in England, who loves the Lord Jesus Christ, to some one in India whom she hopes will learn to love Him, too." Years afterward, in offering herself as a missionary she chose India as a field. On conversing with a family who had all been converted, she was surprised to find the same copy which she had sent as a girl.

Votes of thanks were tendered the speaker, the managers and collectors, and after the offertory had been taken the meeting closed with the doxology and Rev. Mr. Davidson pronounced the benediction.

A Pleasant Duty.—"When I know anything worthy of recommendation, I consider it my duty to tell it," says Rev. Jas. Murdock, of Hamburg, Pa. "Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder has cured me of Catarrh of five years standing. It is certainly magical in its effect. The first application benefited me in five minutes. 50 cts."—9

FEARS A NEW REVOLT IN THE PHILLIPINES

Senator Hale Talks of Giving Up Islands

Says Time is Coming When Filipinos May Be Free

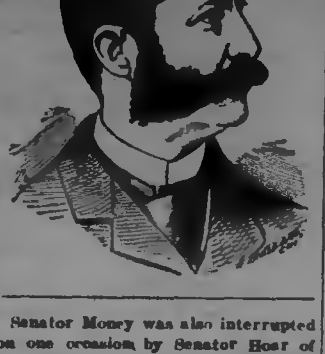
The Public Astounded by Declaration of Member From Maine

Money Attacks Lodge's Bill for Rule of the Philipine Group

Washington, Jan. 31—"It is my belief that conditions in the Philippines will continue to grow worse instead of better; that instead of there being peace insurrection will become more violent. The time is coming when we will begin to consider without regard to party alliances the desirability of extending complete liberty to the Filipinos by aiding them to set up a republic of their own and by withdrawing our forces from the islands."

This view of our ultimate destiny in the Philippines expressed by Senator Hale of Maine yesterday afternoon caused a profound sensation. Senator Hale has heretofore refrained from giving expression to his convictions about our Philippine policy, although his friends have known that he has had little sympathy with his party's plan of holding the islands.

Senator Hale's view was expressed as an interruption of Senator Money's speech upon the Lodge Philippine tariff bill. The senator from Mississippi opened the debate upon that measure for the Democrats. At the beginning of the day's session Senator Carmack, in behalf of the minority of the committee on Philippines, introduced the minority report on the Lodge bill, which defines the Democratic position. The report has already been published in full.



Senator Money was also interrupted on one occasion by Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. Mr. Money had made the unchallenged statement that previous to the beginning of hostilities by our land forces in the Philippines the Filipinos had organized and were maintaining town and city governments throughout the archipelago which were conducted in such manner as to prove conclusively that they were capable of self government. Mr. Hoar recalled that Washington had said that a people who could organize and maintain town governments were capable of self government.

Mr. Money then made an extended speech in criticism of the government policy in the Philippines, declaring: "We are committed to it, I suppose, until we have a lucid interval and we are not likely soon to have that." He maintained that the United States in acquiring the islands and holding them had done one of the most foolish things ever done by a nation and he was afraid we would "not have sense enough to retrace our steps."

Mr. Hale here interrupted to say that the situation in the Philippines would grow worse.

Replying to a question of Mr. Hale as to what he would do with the islands Mr. Money said: "Let them go to the devil and take care of themselves as far as the American people are concerned."

GIRL SHOT DEAD IN BUGGY

Her Young Companion Also Has Wounds in the Head

Coffeen, Ill., Jan. 29—A horse and buggy stopped in front of a livery barn here last night without a driver. Investigation showed the buggy contained the dead body of Miss Gertrude Clifford, who lived near Donnellson, and Fred Brockman, unconscious and almost dead.

Brockman was restored to consciousness and put under arrest. The girl's death was caused by a bullet wound through the temple. Brockman had two bullet wounds in the head. It is doubtful whether he will live.

When asked about the affair he refused to say anything except that a letter would be found in the buggy to explain matters. The letter was found in his overcoat. Officers took charge of it and declined to make public its contents.

Miss Clifford was a member of a highly respected family near Donnellson and was about 20 years of age. Brockman is 20 years of age.

AN INFERNAL MACHINE

Postal Clerk Injured by Explosion While Stamping Package

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 29 — J. W. Martin, a post office clerk, was injured to-day by the explosion of nitro-glycerine or an infernal machine. While stamping letters and packages with the "received" stamp a package addressed to a local hardware house exploded.

Examination revealed on it the name of a New York smokeless powder concern. The interior of the parcel showed a tin box in which the explosive had been packed. The local hardware firm disclaims having ordered such a package or having been notified of its shipment.

Rheumatism is a Constitutional Disease

The pain and localized conditions are mere results of constitutional conditions. Poisoned blood sends its evil influence to various parts of the body, and to cure permanently you must treat it constitutionally. Nothing so completely dispels these poisons from the system as Ferrozone. It makes new blood. It imparts vitality and vigor, enabling the system to throw off the poisons that engender rheumatism. Ferrozone also fortifies the system against the weakening effects of rheumatism, and cures, not simply relieves as most medicines do. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

COLONIES TO BE REPRESENTED IN BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS

Resolutions Moved in Home Parliament to Reduce Irish Representation and Admit Members from Canada and Australia

London, Jan. 30.—In the Commons yesterday an amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, moved by Louis Sinclair (Conservative) was debated. The amendment urged a redistribution of the electoral system, increasing the English and Scotch and reducing Irish representation, and admitting representatives of Canada, Australia, and other colonies.

Hon. A. J. Balfour opposed the amendment on behalf of the Government, on the ground that Parliament must dissolve after a redistribution bill is passed, and that the time is not now ripe to deal with the details of the subject.

James Bryce, (Liberal) protested against a redistribution of the Irish representation, as it would merely increase the discontent in Ireland without benefitting England.

Sir Charles Dilke declared the preponderance of opinion in Australia was against representation in the Imperial Parliament.

Edward Blake (Nationalist) suggested that the whole scheme for colonial representation was to be explained by a desire to compel the colonies to relieve the United Kingdom of a large share of the cost of the South African war.

The amendment was defeated.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Toronto, Jan. 27.—This morning a representative of The Star called on Warden Gilmour at the Central Prison, and requested an interview with Dr. Harbottle, who is serving one year for shooting at Herman Stewart in Burford on Nov. 29th last. The request was cordially granted, and the Warden led the way through the iron-gated doors and past the blue-coated guards.

Dr. Harbottle, a man well past the sunny side of life, stepped out of a little room in answer to his name. Clean-shaven, hair turning grey, thin, with the look of an ascetic, and a voice almost as gentle as a woman's—here was the doctor who in shooting at Stewart in the little town in Brant Country had become the subject for big heads in the newspapers, and a well advertised man in a day.

It will be remembered that Dr. Harbottle was accused of being a pro-Boer, and was subjected to so many persecutions by the villagers that his house was barricaded like a fortress, and his life in the village made a miserable one. The shot was the outcome of these persecutions, and the imprisonment, so the doctor's friends say, is the result of an attempt to clear the village of a gang of thugs.

"Are you a Boer sympathizer?"

In answer to this question, Dr. Harbottle, who is a Catholic, showed that his Catholicity was streaked with Presbyterianism, for he said: "I believe in predestination and foreordination. I believe that the Lord runs wars just the same as He runs the weather, and I took the result of the war just as I took the weather."

"You are a university man?"

"Yes; educated in this Province, and Hon. J. M. Gibson and I contested for the same scholarship in the same year."

Dr. Harbottle then related the story of his persecutions at length, prefacing it with the statement that he had a relative, Frank Harbottle, who went to the front with the second contingent, and that from his own home money had been sent for the widows and orphans in the British army.

Life has not been safe in Burford if Dr. Harbottle's story is true, and it is substantiated with the names in every case. He is by no means the only one who has been annoyed and insulted, outraged by violence or threats. He tells of a string of offences that would do justice to a western town in frontier days.

James Kerns' residence was visited by thugs, his windows broken, and his woodpile set on fire.

The residence of Daniel Dunn, a bailiff, was bombarded, and Dunn had to hide under a stairway to escape the missiles hurled in.

Dr. Chrysler's home was bombarded with stones, resulting in the hastening of the death of the doctor's wife.

Fred Pettit was shot at under cover of darkness.

As the result of a quarrel, one village tough shot at another.

Shots were frequently heard on the street after nightfall.

Even the clergymen were not exempt, and Rev. Albert Margarett's residence was rotten-egged, the fire wagon run over his lawn, and his sidewalk upset. The clergyman eventually resigned his charge.

These are the outrages that Dr. Harbottle says have taken place in Burford, apart from those to which he has been subjected.

"Murder is imminent in Burford." This is what Dr. Harbottle quotes one of the local authorities as saying when the outlawry was at its highest.

MAGISTRATES ACCUSED.

The doctor also makes the statement that once when culprits were charged with breaches of the peace similar to those mentioned, money was supplied for their defence by certain magistrates in the vicinity.

In relating his own persecution, Dr. Harbottle said, "They burst in my windows with military rifles, then fired in blank cartridges, which were supplied, I believe, by the military there. Then they put up a notice in the post-office that they had shelled my house from the Cornish House, and were waiting for more ammunition and supplies."

In explanation of his shooting at Stewart, Dr. Harbottle said: "I am a good shot, and Stewart would never have been touched if he had not dodged. At the nearness of range I could without trouble have shot him, but I merely wished to scare him and give my persecutors a lesson, and it was only because he dodged that the bullet struck him at all."

Dr. Harbottle, in speaking of efforts made to secure his release, said: "To be freed is not uppermost in my mind. I stand for the principle involved, and wanted to have the oppressed protected. I did not ask the people of Burford to give me their practice. All I wanted was to have them let me alone."

Dr. Harbottle is wearing the prison suit, and has the comparatively pleasant position of head nurse or prison surgeon's orderly, and his knowledge of medicine and men makes him quite a busy man.

New York, Jan. 28.—"The killing of men under the name of war," wrote Andrew Carnegie in a letter which was read at the P. F. Collier dinner at the Metropolitan Club last night "is the foulest blot upon humanity to-day. We see much discussion as to what is or what is not permissable under civilized warfare. My view is that this is a contradiction of terms. There can be no such thing as civilized warfare. We have made little progress in the path of genuine civilization as long as we can find no better substitute for the settling of international disputes than the brutal murder of one another. As a general proposition, it may be stated that the nation which refuses peaceful settlement is responsible for the war which ensues. Britain, having done this in its dispute with the Transvaal Republic, is responsible for the extermination of a brave and heroic Christian people.

"But let us remember that we are today engaged in shooting down Christian Filipinos whose only crime is that they believe in the declaration of independence. Sad that both branches of the so-called most highly civilized race should be guilty of the most uncivilized crimes. Let us all pray that this disgrace is soon to pass away."

WAR WITH GERMANY AFTER PRINCE'S VISIT

Poultney Bigelow Predicts a Struggle Between U. S. and Germany

DUE WHOLLY TO TRADE INVASION

Declares Our Commercial Dealings Are Calculated to Produce Friction at Any Time, Despite Evidences of Friendship

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 31 — Poultney Bigelow had interesting things to say to his friends at the Chicago Club tonight in regard to the American visit of Prince Henry of Prussia. It is Bigelow's opinion that the political influence of the Embassy will be infinitesimal and that before the shouts of acclaim quit ringing in the Prince's ears the Republic and the Empire will be at each other's throats in the struggle of a war.

"The political influence of Prince Henry's visit is not worth a snap," declared Bigelow. "We shall embrace him with effusion. We shall do everything that American hospitality dictates, we shall cheer him and we shall send him home with the happiest impressions of American personal life. And within six months we shall fight Germany just as gayly as we fought Spain. Before the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 this Emperor's father was the honored guest of Louis Napoleon in Paris and the personal relations were of the most friendly character.

"But wars are not made or unmade by such things as personal visits. Our official relations with the German Empire are good, but it is merely on the surface. Our commercial dealings are calculated to produce friction at any time.

"The German aristocracy is an aristocracy of landlords who cordially hate every article of commerce with which the name America is identified. There is not a single export from the United States that does not compete with the product of a German aristocrat who has much to say about peace and war.

"The German aristocrat realizes that America has invaded Europe for the purpose of dominating its markets, and he is just ignorant and conceited enough to think he can improve things by fight. Germany wastes no sentiment in diplomacy. The only safe policy for America to-day is a steady reduction of our Custom House tariffs to show the world that we believe commerce should be reciprocal; that we are willing to buy as well as sell."

"I suppose I shall get myself disliked for this," said Bigelow, "but it does not matter. I want to say that, despite the futility of Prince Henry's visit, it is the most important embassy since Lafayette came from France. It is the first time in history that we have been treated as equals by Germany—mark you—the first time in history. They are beginning to realize our importance.

"We should make a brave show of our army and navy for Prince Henry, so as to impress him with our power. Keep the Shafters and the Algers in the background; they are political incompetents and of no use on earth. Let him see the real soldiers and sailors of our army and navy."

Bigelow, who as a youngster was a playmate and schoolfellow of Emperor William and his brother, praised Prince Henry's characteristics warmly. He added:

"The Emperor is the German Roosevelt—agressive and impulsive, whereas his brother is more inclined to the quiet and domestic. One would never suspect that he had any more pretense to official destination than the average intelligent, well-educated young man."

WE'LL ALL BE CRAZY

Detroit Doctor Says the World Will Be a Lunatic Asylum

Detroit, Jan. 29—Dr. R. B. Hoyt, a former member of the Board of Education, has gathered statistics which convince him that at the present rate of increase of insanity the population of this country will be mad in two hundred and sixty years.

"Within the last fifty years," he said," the number of insane persons and fools has increased 300 per cent. That means if the increase continues that the entire population of this country within 260 years will have gone insane or become foolish."

TESL CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

High Frequency Currents Used at the Brompton Hospital

London, Jan. 29—Dr. Symes-Thompson, consulting physician at the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton, in a lecture delivered here, spoke hopefully of the experiments which are being carried on at the hospital in the treatment of phthisis by means of Tesla's high frequency currents and the injection into the veins of a chemical substance that is fatal to the bacilli.

He quoted statistics showing that the deaths from tubercular maladies in London had decreased 55 per cent. in forty years, and predicted that such diseases would be extinct within a century.

Special From Norwich, Ont.

The recovery of Mr. Norman Batty Hardware Merchant, one of Norwich's oldest and most successful citizens, has excited much comment. For years Mr. Batty has been an unceasing sufferer from Catarrhal Asthma, and although no end of time and money was spent relief was not obtained until Mr. Batty commenced Catarrhozone treatment, which perfectly cured him. This case is only equalled by that of Mrs. Bannon, wife of J. J. Bannon, druggist, who was also cured of Asthma and Hay Fever by Catarrhozone after 30 years' suffering. Fully a hundred persons in this town have been cured of catarrhal troubles by Catarrhozone, which is a remarkable proof of its value. Two months' treatment, price $1. Small size 25c. Sold by all druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

COUNTY COUNCIL

Standing Committees Struck and Appointments Made

The County Council were in session all day yesterday with Warden Eastland in the chair and all members present.

The minutes of the opening meeting were read and confirmed.

THE STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Pearce presented the report of the Committee appointed to strike the Standing committees as follows:—

The Committee appointed to strike the Standing committees for 1902, beg leave to report, recommending the following, viz:—

County Property,—Messrs. Casement, Crowe, Costello and Peck. Mr Peck to be Chairman.

Appointments to Office—Messrs Crowe, Anderson, Pearce, and Shaw. Mr. Shaw to be Chairman.

Roads and Bridges—Messrs Jeffs, Peck Crowe, Fitzgerald, Costello, Anderson, Casement, Pearce and Shaw. Mr. Anderson to be Chairman.

Schools—Messrs. Peck, Pearce, Fitzgerald, Anderson, Jeffs and Casement. Mr. Fitzgerald to be Chairman.

Petitions—Messrs. Anderson, Fitzgerald Crowe, Shaw, Jeffs and Costello. Mr Costello to be Chairman.

Printing—Messrs. Shaw, Anderson, Crowe, Costello and Jeffs. Dr. Jeffs to be Chairman.

Finance—Messrs. Jeffs, Peck, Fitzgerald, Crowe, Costello, Casement, Pearce Anderson and Shaw. Mr. Pearce to be Chairman.

Equalization and Assessment—Messrs. Jeffs, Peck, Pearce, Crowe, Costello, Fitzgerald, Casement, Anderson and Shaw. Mr. Casement to be Chairman.

Joint Committee—Messrs Crowe, Pearce Peck, Casement, Anderson, and Shaw be a committee to confer with the Town of Peterborough and adjoining Counties in all matters of joint interest. Mr. Crowe to be Chairman.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. B. PEARCE,
Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Pearce and Dr. Jeffs, the report was adopted.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Shaw, Chairman presented a report of the Committee on Appointments, as follows:—

The Committee on Appointments beg leave to report recommending as follows:—

1. That Mr. W. B. Ritchie be appointed Trustee of the Norwood High school.

2. That Messrs. E. A. Peck and R. C. Strickland be appointed members of the Board of Audit of Accounts in connection with the administration of justice.

3. That John E. Belcher, C.E., be reappointed County Engineer.

4. That Dr. William Caldwell be reappointed gaol surgeon at a yearly salary of $150, payable as formerly, the sum to cover all extras heretofore charged.

5. That Mr. Henderson Nesbitt be reappointed caretaker of the Court House at a yearly salary of $175, payable as formerly.

6 That Mr. Archibald Fulton be appointed caretaker for the Gannon Narrow Ferry, at a salary not to exceed $150, payable and under the same conditions and regulations under which the position has heretofore been held.

7. That Mr. Thomas Flood be appointed caretaker of the Pigeon Creek bridge at a yearly salary of $25, as formerly.

8. That Mr. John Jones be appointed caretaker of the Buckhorn bridge at a yearly salary of $5.

9. That the nomination of a student by this Council to the Guelph Agricultural College be left in the hands of the Warden, with power to act.

10. That the Warden and Messrs. Casement and Peck be representatives of this county on the Board of Management of the Peterborough Historical Society.

11. That Mr. Edward Young be appointed caretaker of the Young's Point bridge at a yearly salary of $5.

12. That Mr. William Lockington be appointed caretaker of the Nassau bridge at a yearly salary of $5.

13. That Mr. Wm. O'Leary be appointed caretaker of the Chemong Lake bridge his salary and duties to be fixed by the Road and Bridge Committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. SHAW,
Chairman.

Messrs. Shaw and Crowe moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Fitzgerald moved in amendment that the report be referred back and Wm. Whelan's name inserted as caretaker of Gannon's Narrow's Ferry instead of Arch Fulton.

The amendment was lost, but the report was referred to the Committee of the Whole in order to allow the names of the nominating officers for the next elections to be added.

NOMINATING OFFICERS.

The Council then went into committee to consider the appointment of nominating officers. The result was that a clause appointing the following was added to the report:—

Division No. 1—James Drummond, Otonabee.

Division No. 2—Geo. W. Bennett, North Monaghan.

Division No. 3—J. W. Ratcliff, Chandos.

Division No. 4—Jas. Calder, Norwood.

Division No. 5—Francis Moher, Douro.

TOWNSHIP TREASURERS.

Statements were read from the treasurers of Lakefield, Douro, Otonabee Town of Peterborough, and Northumberland and Durham giving the monies paid by those municipalities to the County during the year.

Mr. Pearce pointed out that all treasurers of municipalities paying money to the County should have had statements before the Council.

Mr. Casement moved that the County Treasurer communicate with those municipalities that have failed to comply with the law in this regard and that those still neglecting be proceeded against.—Carried.

MURDERERS SHOOT THE GUARDS AND ESCAPE

Biddle Brothers at Liberty in Pittsburg---Had Aid from Persons Outside

SAID 10 HAVE BEEN AIDED BY WARDEN'S WIFE

Prisoners Provided With Saws and Revolvers—Guard Hurled Over Railing to Stone Floor Beneath

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 30.—Edward and John Biddle, awaiting execution in the county jail for the murder of Grocer Thomas B. Kahney, of Mount Washington, overpowered the guards at four o'clock this morning, and escaped.

Both prisoners had been provided with saws, with which they cut the bars in their cells, and were ready at any moment to make an opening sufficiently large to pass through. The prisoners occupied adjoining cells on the second range. They had evidently been preparing for escape for some time, and had assistance from the outside, as both were armed with revolvers.

Shortly before four o'clock one of the Biddles called to Jas. McGeary, who had charge of the outside gates, and asked for some cramp medicines in a hurry, saying his brother was dangerously sick.

McGeary hastened to the cell with the medicine, when John Biddle sprang through the opening in the cell, and, seizing the guard around the waist, hurled him over the railing to the stone floor beneath, a distance of 16 feet.

Edward Biddle joined his brother immediately, and both, with drawn revolvers, hurried to the first floor, where they met Guard Reynolds, and shot him.

There were but three men on duty, and the third was on one of the upper ranges. He was ordered down at the point of the revolvers, and the three guards were put in the dungeon.

The keys were taken from Keeper McGeary, and the two desperate prisoners had a clear field. The only persons who witnessed the escape were prisoners, who could not interfere or give an alarm. The Biddles went to the wardrobe, where the guards keep their clothing, and each put on a new suit. They then unlocked the outside gates, and passed out into the street.

The escape was not discovered until the daylight guards came on duty at 6 o'clock. They were informed by prisoners where the night guards had been put, and they were soon released from the dungeon, and sent to the hospital.

The escape of the Biddles was subsequently explained in a statement issued by Warden Peter K. Soffel. The warden asserts that his wife is responsible for the furnishing of the revolvers and saws to the Biddles which enabled them to escape. In her infatuation for Edward Biddle, it is alleged, she has left her husband and her four children, and it is supposed is to meet the escaped convicts at a place agreed upon.

The story of the matter is brief. Mrs. Soffel was the only person admitted to the jail since last Sunday. Yesterday afternoon she visited them during the warden's absence. Last evening she retired at 9 o'clock. She told her husband that she was going to visit a sister at McDonald, and that she would retire early, so that she could get an early start. Warden Soffel was about the jail until after midnight. He retired to his own room, which is separate from Mrs. Soffel's shortly before 1 o'clock. When he awoke this morning he asked for Mrs. Soffel, and was informed that she was absent. Later, when the details of the escape became known, he telephoned to McDonald, and was informed that Mrs. Soffel was not there.

Warden Soffel immediately made a frank confession of his suspicions. Nothing suspicious was noticed in the actions of the two prisoners, nor was anything wrong discovered when the day guards went off duty yesterday afternoon. The murderers evidently sawed the bars during the night using what appears to have been soap to deaden the noise and to reduce friction.

The two guards injured will probably recover. The bullet wound sustained by Reynolds is not regarded as dangerous. The physicians have been unable to ascertain as yet the full extent of McGeary's wounds. His head is badly contused, but there are no signs that his skull was fractured by his sixteen-foot fall.

For several months preceding the Kahney murder, daring burglaries were of almost nightly occurrence. The police seemed powerless to prevent them. On the morning of April 12 last Mrs. Kahney was awakened by burglars, and called to her husband, a cripple, who was sleeping in an adjoining room with one of his children. As he entered the door of his wife's room he was shot dead. The burglars then fled. A few hours later, Detective Patrick Fitzgerald and two officers surprised the Biddle brothers at their home, but before they were captured, Fitzgerald was killed and Edward Biddle, who shot him, was dangerously wounded.

Walter Dorman, another of the gang, and two women, Jennie Rodine and Jennie Seebers, were also arrested. Dorman turned State's evidence, and the two Biddles were convicted of Kahney's murder, and sentenced to be hanged, John on the 14th of this month, and Edward on the 16th, but three days before the date set for John's execution they were respited until February 26th and 27th by Governor Stone, so that their cases could go before the Pardon Board at its coming meeting. Dorman, is still in jail awaiting sentence. The women were released.

The entire detective force is at work on the case, but up to ten o'clock there was no clue as to the direction the murderers had taken.

A Petition and Acceptance

To John E. Belcher, Esq., C. E.

Sir,—We earnestly request you to allow yourself to stand for election as one of the Water Commissioners for the town.

We feel that it would be of decided advantage to have one of the Commissioners an engineer, and especially with our system from its beginning.

(Signed)

Wm. Snowden, Thos. P. Attrill, H Long, R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough; A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D.; H. LeBrun, W. Taylor, T. E. Boddy, President A. F. of L.; R. J. Munro, R. F. McGregor, W. Henry, and others.

To His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Wm. Henry, President A. F. of L.; H. Long, Wm. Snowden, W. Taylor, R. F. McGregor, R. J. Munro, H. LeBrun, T. E. Boddy, T. P. Attrill, A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D., and to my nominator and seconder, James Montgomery and R. [illegible], and others [illegible]

Gentlemen,—In view of your request I will accept nomination for the Waterworks Commissionership, and, as you suggest, will do what I can, if elected, in the way of placing my knowledge of the system and its workings at the service of the town.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN E. BELCHER.

A Good Number

An article on Marconi, a new serial and other note-worthy features, make the February Canadian Magazine decidedly attractive. M. O. Scott gives some information about Marconi's relations with the Canadian Government not before given to the public. From this it appears that Marconi will shortly return to Ottawa, after a consultation with his London backers. The article also indicates that the Ministers are vieing with each other to see who will have the credit of controlling the wireless telegraphy of the future. The new serial is entitled "The Four Feathers, and is by A. E. W. Mason, whose novels are well known, especially "Parson Kelly." Its scenes are laid in Ireland, London and the Soudan, and is mainly a military story. Professor Shortt writes of the Imperial problem and points out that the time is at hand when it may be necessary to defend the rights and liberties of the mother country from encroachments on the part of the colonies. The Hon. J. W. Longley traces Canada's religious development, and protests against assuming from the statistics of ecclesiasticism that religion has developed. Mr. Longley thinks people are not so devout and religious to-day as they were a century ago. Norman Patterson describes the famous tidal bore at Moncton; W. D. McBride has a profusely illustrated article on passenger coaches, past and present, and M. O. Scott writes of the changing aspect of Sable Island. The departments are as interesting as usual.

ONE ON THE BOYS

Mother Rather Got the Start of Them

Sometimes the mother plays a turn on the young people and greatly to their benefit. A young lady in Memphis, Tenn., Miss B. Dye of 222 Carroll Ave., comments in an interesting way about the harmless little deception her mother played upon one of the family during the summer.

She says, "Every member of our family could write a testimonial about Postum Food Coffee and what it has done for us. Father has really been made over since quitting coffee and using Postum, but I must tell you about brother.

When he came home from college last summer he was thin and looked dreadfully. We questioned him about his food and drink. He said he drank coffee, 'Of course I can't get along without a good cup of coffee three times a day.' Mother did not say anything to him, but made Postum for him just the same, and at the next meal he complimented her on the coffee. Several times he said, 'Now if I just had such coffee as this at school I could make better averages in my studies.'

So during the whole summer he drank Postum, thinking it was strong coffee, and we could all see, from day to day, how much he was improving in health. His complexion gradually cleared up, and he gained in every way. When he went back in the fall mother told him the secret she had kept for over three months, and put several packages of Postum in his trunk.

You may depend upon it, the lesson was one he will never forget. My younger brother quit coffee about a year ago and has been using Postum Food Coffee, and he has been built up from a regular invalid until he is now a fat, rosy-cheeked boy, full of life and fun. Just the other day he remarked he was getting along so much better in his studies than ever before and he wondered what caused the change. Mother remarked, 'It is Postum.'"

MUNICIPAL BOOK KEEPING

The annual report of the Municipal Auditor in the Government service, Mr. J. B. Laing, shows that there has been a great change for the better in the case of municipal monies, and greater vigilance displayed in the audits since the new system was put into force. The report commences with the gratifying assurance that the improvement in municipal accounts throughout the province, to which attention was called in the report for last year, still continues, and it is further stated that there have been no losses of importance in the form of deficits of municipal treasurers to report for 1901. This seems as though a system, which will prevent the deficits and sometimes defaults of the past, has been successfully inaugurated. Regularity is now the order of the day, though the reports indicate that here and there during the past year a treasurer was occasionally found who did not make use of the account forms recommended by the Government, but such cases were rare and are getting more so year by year, but generally the municipal treasurers in Ontario used and appreciated the new forms of account because they tended to accuracy. One matter in connection with the municipal finances seems to need some greater care and attention. Sufficient attention, we are told, is not given by local auditors to the guarantees of municipal treasurers. The Provincial Auditor says, "there is reason to believe that these securities are in many cases worthless, being improperly drawn out, outclassed or expired by affluction of time." Many recommendations are made as to details which municipal officers will do well to attend to carefully.

GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT

A report has been issued by the Census Bureau at Washington, showing that there were in the United States in 1900 877 establishments, with an invested capital of $567,000,606, engaged in the manufacture of gas. This sum represents the value of land, buildings, machinery, tools, implements and the live capital utilized, but does not include the capital stock of any of the corporations. The value of the products was $75,716,693, to produce which involved an outlay of $4,773,569 for salaries of officials, clerks, etc.; $12,436,296 for wages, $14,709,[illegible] for miscellaneous expenses, including rent, taxes, etc., and $20,005,356 for materials used.

The report says that the modern tendency toward concentration of industrial enterprises is well exemplified in the gas industry, in which there is an increase, as compared with 1890, of only 18.2 per cent. in the number of establishments reporting, while the increase in the capital is 119.1 per cent. The average capital per establishment for 1900 was $646,622, as compared with $342,740 for 1890, the average capital in 1900 being nearly double that in 1890. The increase in the number of cubic feet of gas consumed is 82.7 per cent. The average product per establishment has risen from $40,217,670 cubic feet in 1890 to 76,630,402 cubic feet in 1900, an average increase of 85.4 per cent. per establishment. The reduction in price from $1.42 to $1.05 per cubic foot has caused the value of products to show a lower rate of increase, the $56,987,290 reported in 1890 increasing 32.9 per cent. to $75,716,693, produced in 1900.

The conclusion is warranted that, although the wider uses to which gas has been adopted have caused a striking increase of 82.7 per cent. during the decade in the number of feet consumed, the rapidly increasing use of electricity for lighting purposes has not only tended to prevent the erection of other gas plants, but has resulted in the dismantling of nearly fifty establishments during the decade.

The striking increase in capital (119.1 per cent.) is found, the report says, chiefly in the items of machinery, tools, implements and equipment, and is due to the constant demand for new equipment required to provide for increasing service. This also explains the fact that the percentage of increase in the value of products (32.9 per cent.) is so much smaller than the per cent. of increase in capital, another factor being the reduction in the price of gas during the past decade, which would reduce the percentage of increase in the value of products.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

A striking feature of the recent mu- where did you come from baby dea nicipal elections throughout Ontario has been the general interest taken in the question of municipal ownership. With few exceptions in the cities and larger towns the question has entered into the campaign in some form or other and has been almost in every case upheld by the ratepayers. There is a growing sentiment in favor of the municipalities controlling natural monopolies. This feeling can be traced to the gradual irritation and dissatisfaction which has been increasing under the exactions of corporations, backed by legislation of the Ontario Government discriminating against municipalities in favor of bodies that can put up for the machine fund.

In addition to the vote by Ottawa on the telephone question, the town of Milton carried a plebiscite to control the electric lighting system. W. F. Maclean's unexpectedly long run against Mayor Howland is attributed to the popularity of his municipal ownership platform.

DIAMOND DYES

HAVE GIVEN AN IMPETUS TO THE WORK OF HOME DYEING

The days of old fashioned home dyeing work passed away when the Diamond Dyes were given to the world. To-day, the operation of coloring — making old things look like new—is easy and quick work when the Diamond Dyes are used. All over this Canada of ours Diamond Dyes are known as money and time savers. They lead all other dyes in the world in strength, fulness, of color, brilliancy and fastness. Diamond Dyes are warranted never to fail when the simple directions are faithfully followed.

He Said "No."

THE great Young Men's Christian Association Convention recently held in Boston brought delegates from all parts of the world to testify to the value of the Christian religion as the highest rule of conduct for a practical life. It was natural, as the delegates met each other, for them to exchange vital experiences. The following was told by one who had traveled eight thousand miles to attend the meetings:

"My father was a rancher on a small scale in Australia. He had only a thousand sheep or so and a couple of square miles of run for pasture. He was an English emigrant of sturdy yeoman stock, and while the free life of a shepherd had taught him tolerance and kindness, he remained true in principle to the strict lessons of his early years.

"The nearest neighbor or station was ten miles away, but the ranchmen used to think nothing of riding twenty or forty miles to a centrally located farm on Saturdays to spend the night in carousal, and ride back on Sunday.

"The isolation was so depressing and the heat so exhausting that when the men came together once a week in this way, drinking and gambling seemed inevitable. In the kindled passion and excitement of these coarse pleasures they thought they might forget for a few hours the suffering and privation of their lot.

"At last it was my father's turn to entertain. He must invite the herders of the kraals and ranches within a radius of nearly fifty miles.

"'Boys,' he said to his two sons, my brother and myself, 'it's the parting of the ways. We either live as we have lived, simply, in the fear of God, minding our business, paying our debts if we can, saving our money if possible, and being cut by every man round here, or we fall into the ways of our neighbors, and drink and gamble ourselves into perdition. I am not going to break your mother's heart, and I say "No" even if they burn us down.'

"It was the critical moment of our lives. I could have fallen at my father's feet and worshipped him when he made that decision. He looked like a god—determined and invincible.

"So it came about that my brother and I divided the circuit between us, and I rode to the north and he to the south. To every ranchman this message went: 'Father invites you for Saturday and Sunday as usual. There will be no cards or liquor—only a quiet talk about old England and the welfare of the colony.'

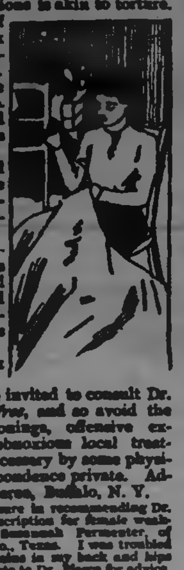
"We waited that Saturday afternoon with trembling, not expecting a single guest. But suddenly one rode up, and then another, and another, until the whole section was represented. There never had been so large a gathering. They came in curiosity and with respect.

"With mother opposite him, father said grace at table, and we boys saw tears flow down rugged cheeks. That night the men talked long about bushmen and rabbits and fences and drought, and how to stand by each other.

"The next morning, as he did every Sunday morning, father conducted prayers, this time before fifty of the roughest men I had ever seen assembled; and there was singing of hymns, broken here and there by sobs and tears. When they parted, my father, although a recent comer, was the acknowledged leader of the community.

"That section became the most prosperous section in all the country round. And I thought if Christian courage could accomplish that, it was good enough for me to live and die by. My father's 'No' was the one thing needed to save the community, and it saved it."

Sewing as a business is an exacting and exhausting occupation. Long hours, fine work, poor light, unhealthy atmosphere —these are only some of the things which fret the nerves and hurt the general health. Often there is a diseased condition of the womanly organism which causes backache or headache and the working of the sewing machine under such conditions is akin to torture.



Thousands of women who work have written grateful letters to Dr. R. V. Pierce, whose "Favorite Prescription" has cured their womanly ills and established their general health. "Favorite Prescription" establishes regularity, dries unhealthy and offensive drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free, and so avoid the indelicate questionings, offensive examinations and obnoxious local treatments deemed necessary by some physicians. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for female weakness," writes Mrs. Susannah Permenter, of Paola Store, Shelby Co., Texas. "I was troubled with bearing-down pains in my back and hips for six years, and wrote to Dr. Pierce for advice. I tried his 'Favorite Prescription' and six bottles cured me. I feel like a new person and I thank Dr. Pierce for my health. Life is a burden to any one without health. I have told great many of my friends about the great medicine I took."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

"Katharine Smythe, indeed! On my word, Aunt Ellen, you are easily imposed upon. Pray have you seen the lady's marriage certificate, and does she stoop to the pretence of wearing a ring?"

"I have seen Katharine's eyes as she told me she was Gordon Smythe's lawful wife, a fact Mr. Smythe has taken great pains to impress upon every one since that wife has inherited a fortune, and that is enough for me, Barbara!"

Lady Drummond's voice was full of quiet contempt, and Lady Blanche's face wore a puzzled, pained expression.

"Eyes! Pooh! bah! The woman is an arrant humbug! Aunt Ellen, I am sorry for you!"

"And I for you, Barbara. I regret that any relative of mine should possess so mean a spirit; you should rejoice that one of your own sex has come out unscathed from the fire of shame and scandal. Katharine has been cruelly wronged! She did not tell me that, but I know it; I am certain of it! Some day the truth may be told, and then you, too, may learn how easy it is for us to judge others, and let our own faults slide."

Then, turning to Lady Blanche, Lady Drummond continued: "Mr. and Mrs. Smythe go down to-day to Charlton Abbey; the doctors have given him permission, and he will be carried there by the easiest means possible. Katharine has asked me, and I shall pay her a visit as early as I can. Let all the world side against her, I will still believe and respect her, for her father's sake first, and now for her own!"

CHAPTER XXVII.

The news of her strange inheritance seemed to Katharine like nothing but a wonderful dream. She could not believe her ears as she stood before Mr. Montrose, and learned that riches, and all that makes life luxurious had come to her.

"I have had some difficulty in finding you, my dear," Mr. Montrose had said, as the girl still stood speechless and amazed before him.

They were talking in a little room that led off the one where Gordon was lying. He could hear every word, and this sudden wealth was something more than marvelous and delightful to him.

Katharine was quick to notice the almost pained hesitation with which her father's old friend addressed her. Mr. Montrose called her by no name, thus proving that he already judged her as Gordon had intended she should be judged, and she could do nothing but submit to this. When the question of immediate ways and means had been entered into, Mr. Montrose was about to take his departure, when he was stopped by Gordon's voice, weak and low, calling him from the next room.

"I have heard all you have been saying," he muttered, with a gleam of his old sneer in his eyes and lips. "So— I am married to a rich woman, it seems! Aye," as both Katharine and Mr. Montrose started involuntarily, "we are married, sure enough, aren't we, Kattie?"

Katharine was silent for a moment. She found it difficult to stifle her contempt for this man who, now that she could give him riches, determined that she was worthy of the consideration which, as a woman, had been her due from the first; but the next moment a sense of great freedom came over her, and, lifting her eyes to Mr. Montrose, she said, very simply:

"I am his wife. I have been his wife from the first."

And then Gordon talked on excitedly about Charlton Abbey, and declared they should go there at once; he was strong enough to stand twenty journeys, and he was eager to be at home with his dear wife— his wife, who had been like an angel; had nursed him back from the grave; and so on till he grew exhausted.

Mr. Montrose, watching Katharine, saw her shiver involuntarily. There was much to be questioned— much to be known; but a glance at her face determined him to question nothing yet. It was sufficient that he knew her to be Gordon Smythe's legal wife; in time he might find out the truth of this strange affair— the meaning of Katharine's sad face— but not yet.

After that, it was all bustle and confusion to the girl. She seemed to live in a dream, out of which the meeting with Lady Drummond and her warm, affectionate manner rose gratefully. She was claimed on every side by lawyers, by doctors, and chiefly by Gordon, who, with cunning dread, feared lest she should slip away from him now by some chance.

It was not Katharine he doubted; he knew the power he had over her. But now that her position was changed, he feared that she might open her heart to her new friends and so escape him. His one desire, one idea, was to leave London and get away to Charlton Abbey, there to remain until his strength was fully returned.

The day came at last that was fixed for the journey. Lucy Smythe, whom Gordon had at length permitted to be informed of all that had happened, was in an agony of fear. All astonishment at the news of Katharine's wealth and the strange marriage had been swallowed up in the natural anxiety her mother's heart had undergone from the first moment. She had rushed up to be with her darling. She had no time to thought to devote to any one but Gordon; and if she had noticed Katharine's pale, changed face, it would only have seemed to her right and natural under the circumstances.

The presence of Lucy Smythe was a relief to poor Katharine, for apart from the terrible mental burden she had been called upon to endure, she was nearly worn out with her constant work in the sick room.

"I think I must go with you and nurse you a little," said Sister Dora gently, just as she was taking her departure.

Katharine smiled faintly.

"Come and stay with me, yes. But I need no nursing, dear; I am not ill."

The sister gave no reply, but a pang went through her heart as she gazed at the girl's face, that spoke all so clearly of the sickness within.

"Poor child!" she said to herself. "Poor child! Whatever power has linked you to that brute has killed your young life as easily as one can crush a flower. I would give much to see that shadow leave her, but while she is near her husband that can never be."

Katharine's first impression of her new home was not a pleasant one. The day was dark and gloomy, and the difficult and painful task of lifting the sick man from the special carriage in which he had traveled direct from London, gave a gruesome and saddened aspect to everything. All she was conscious of was a desire for rest, for solitude, for peace; the beauty, the magnificence of Charlton Abbey, its spacious grounds, its lofty walls, its luxurious appointments, all were lost on her. She walked into the quaint, old-fashioned hall in a set, mechanical fashion, returning the servants' greetings as in a dream. The look on her young face and in her beautiful eyes haunted Mr. Montrose for many and many a day afterward.

"What can be her secret? What can it be?" he mused with contracted brow, as he greeted her, having sacrificed a most particular appointment in London on purpose to do so.

He would have shrunk back aghast could he have guessed that the shadow that hung over her young head was one that would have changed the strongest and stoutest heart — the shadow of murder!

As she walked up the broad staircase, the memory of all her misery returned to the girl with a rush.

"This is mine, and yet what am I? The wife of a murderer; the wife of one who if known would be shunned and feared. It is a mockery. What right has this old house with my tainted life?"

Mr. Montrose alone understood and grasped something of the truth.

He took both her cold, small hands in his, when he went away the next morning.

"Now promise to send for me whenever you may need me, my dear," he said, gently, and with real affection in his voice. "Look on me not only as your trustee, but as your friend."

There were tears in Katharine's eyes as she thanked him, and she stood on the doorstep and waved her hand in farewell greeting, as he drove down the avenue, then she turned and moved indoors slowly, with her fingers clenched tightly together.

"Oh, daddie! daddie!" she moaned to herself. "If Heaven would only let you come and take me! I am so tired, so weary of living like this—so weary and worn!"

Lucy Smythe noticed that evening almost for the first time how ill the girl looked.

"You have worked too hard, my darling. You have worn yourself out. Ah! but you had something to make you work, Katharine —our dear one's life. It is not with every one that I would so gladly share my boy, Kattie, but you —you are worthy of him!"

Katharine listened to no more; with a smothered exclamation she turned hurriedly away and left the room, hurrying on till she reached her own apartment.

"It is this hypocrisy, this awful, horrible veil of hypocrisy that clings about me —that kills me!" she said passionately to herself. "Oh, to be free —to tear myself from it all — to end it all!"

Be patient, Katharine; be patient, brave spirit! Fate is stronger than man! There is a limit to human endurance, and your limit is at hand!

A week had passed since the arrival of the new owner at Charlton Abbey, a week in which Katharine had drifted each day more slowly, yet more gradually, into a dull, lethargic state which, had there been loving eager, watchful eyes to note, would have caused them much alarm and anxiety; but there was no one to observe her. She was mistress, sole and entire mistress, of this grand domain, yet she lived as utterly alone and uncared for as though she were the veriest outcast. As she faded and weakened, so Gordon Smythe flourished; under his mother's tender care, with the strong impetus of realising how pleasant life could be now, the sick man made wonderful progress; the excitement and natural increased feebleness as the results of the long journey wore off marvelously, and at the end of the week, to Lucy Smythe's great joy, there was a marked change in her darling's appearance and condition.

Gordon, however, was not satisfied with himself yet; he wanted to be quite well again. He never tired of cursing the ill fate that had stretched him on a sick bed at such a moment, when, for the first time, money and all its power was put into his grasp.

"And I will punish her! I have not done with her yet!" ran the venomed thought in his mind —always the same thought! —revenge on the girl who regarded him as so contemptible and miserable a thing, who had been crushed to earth by him; and yet whose spirit, whose noble nature he had not even touched. "Yes, I will be revenged on her; she shall learn what it is to despise me and refuse my love! I can always hurt her through that other — curse him! — and I will!"

Katharine had evinced neither surprise nor objection when she found that her new home was within so close a distance of Brexley Hall. The girl was really ill. This apathetic condition was the forerunner of a thorough break-up in the nervous system; she was becoming lost in the heavy lassitude and depression that grew worse and worse every day. Her life was spent in her room. Gordon had his mother and a regiment of servants to fulfil his smallest command, and Katharine was free to be alone with her thoughts. She never approached her husband, even for a moment, and this strange proceeding awakened great curiosity in the household, who could not understand the arrangement at all.

Gordon bit his lip savagely at this move; it looked to him like defiance, and roused his anger.

"Where is Katharine?" he asked his mother shortly, one morning. "Send her to me; I want her."

"Katharine is not at all well, my darling," was Lucy Smythe's reply, given quickly; "indeed, I am most anxious about her, Gordon. I have intended speaking to you for some time about her, but I did not like to worry you, my dearest one!"

Gordon's only reply to this was an oath, growled out curtly.

"She's all right; send her to me," he reiterated; and with a sigh that she could not repress, Mrs. Smythe obeyed.

Katharine was passing down the stairs when the message reached her. She paused for an instant, with one hand pressed to her aching brow, then, as if mechanically, she [illegible] into the room where Gordon was.

"You have come at last, have you!" he greeted her with a sneer.

The Kaiser as He Is.

RAY STANNARD BAKER, in a volume, "Seen in Germany," gives this picture of the Emperor William:

"He is a brown-faced man, the brown of wind and weather, of fierce riding on land and of a glaring sun on the sea. His face is thinner than one has pictured, and there is a hint of weariness about the eyes. His hair gives the impression of being thin, and his famous moustache is not so long nor so jauntily fierce as one has imagined. There is many a dry-goods clerk in Berlin who has out-Kaisered the Kaiser in growing a moustache. But, owing to the sin of retouching, there is one thing that few of William's photographs show to advantage, and it is the most impressive characteristic of his face. And that is its singular sternness in repose. Square, iron jaws, thin, firm lips, a certain sharpness and leanness of visage, a penetrating eye, all speak of invincible determination, pride, dignity. Indeed, herein lies the force of personal majesty—for William, however much one may smile at his passion for royal display, has many of those splendid attributes of character which would make a man great in any sphere of life. It would be a large company of Germans, indeed, among whom one would fail to select him instinctively as the leader. A first impression, therefore, may thus be summed up: The Kaiser is less a great king than one has imagined, and more a great man. The longer one remains in Germany, and the more he learns of William and his extraordinary activities, the deeper grows this impression. We Americans have never quite overcome our first prejudices against the Kaiser, bred during the early days of his reign, when the mantle of royalty—and the Hohenzollern mantle at that—was new to his shoulders, and he said and did strange things; but in Europe—where they have grown accustomed to his vagaries, now, indeed, much less pronounced in their manifestations, and have set them down as the expressions of a strong and original individuality—the Kaiser occupies a place of high and genuine esteem. An American who remains long in Germany feels this change in sentiment strongly, and, when the Kaiser passes, he raises his hat with all the others, not merely because this is royalty, but because it is character and strength of purpose."

As might be expected, the Kaiser is most popular in his capital:

"One, hearing a commotion on Unter den Linden, with a flash of white plumes in the distance, and the swift clatter of hoofs, may well crowd up to see. A pair of splendid horses, traveling like the wind, two richly uniformed men on the box, and the Kaiser, the Kaiserin, and another lady in the open carriage behind. You observe that the Kaiser sits with his back to the horses, giving the place of honor to his wife, for William has set the highest ideals in courtesy to women—the Anglo-Saxon ideals, which often form a strong contrast to the rougher Teutonic custom. He wears a glistening silver helmet, which he touches with military precision as the people on the streets shout and lift their hats. No cavalcade of guards accompany the carriage, and there is apparently no effort to guard the lives of its occupants, except in so far as they are protected by the terrific speed at which the horses are always driven. It is one of William's pleasures to show himself and his family frequently to his people, and the royal carriage may be seen at all hours in the streets of Berlin. The Kaiser's departure from the palace is always signaled by the fall of a flag, which serves as a notification to the people to prepare for his appearance among them. Nearly every afternoon he rides out, usually in uniform, with some of his staff-officers, galloping down the Linden and into the Thiergarten, where he often spends an hour in exercise."

Henley's Attack on Stevenson.

THE literary sensation in London is William E. Henley's onslaught, in the Christmas number of the "Pall Mall" magazine, upon the Stevenson worshippers. In tone it is not dissimilar from that of his attack on indiscriminate eulogists of Burns. As Stevenson's closest friend, he strips Stevenson's personality of the fantastic romance woven about it, and shows him to have been at times a vain, ungrateful, self-righteous, anxious egotist, possessed of abundant but imitative gifts. Even those who attempt to defend the justice of the criticism find that it lays Henley open to charges of disloyalty and bad taste. The London "Daily News" is emphatic in its protest. It says:

"We are not surprised that the literary world is scandalized. It is astonishing that any man of ordinary feeling should have written in such terms of a dead friend. One thing is made quite clear by the article. Stevenson has a genuine hold upon the affections of his countrymen, and that affection will last long after Mr. Henley's ill-judged screed is forgotten."

This view, however, is not shared by some who cannot be charged with jealousy of Stevenson. Just as Mr. Henley knew Stevenson best in his middle and Mr. Balfour in his later life, so Miss Eve Blantyre Simpson, the authoress of "Robert Louis Stevenson's Edinburgh Days," can speak of him as boy and youth. Miss Simpson states her view as follows:

"Mr. Henley has done a brave deed in his trenchant article on his friend 'Lewis.' He depicts him as he was before he began to pose as a famed man and was by preference the thorough-bred Bohemian. Mr. Henley recalls him to Edinburgh folk as he was and as the true Stevenson would have wished to be known."

Explained Too Much.

The caller explained his mission.

"It's a worthy cause," he said.

"It is, indeed," admitted the up-to-date merchant. "You may put our firm down for five hundred dollars."

"Good!" exclaimed the caller. "It's to be done very quietly and unostentatiously, of course. The money will be given in a lump sum from 'a few friends,' without any names whatever."

"No one will know who gives?" asked the merchant.

"No one," answered the caller.

"No list published?"

"None."

"Cross the name of our firm off."—Chicago "Post."

Anecdotal.

At North Berwick, near Edinburgh, the other day, a golfer whose ardor is greatly in advance of his skill got into difficulties at the second hole. Repeated "foozles" left his ball badly "cupped" on the brink of a bunker. He turned to his caddie in despair. Said he: "I've tried my brassie, and my cleek, and my mashie, and none of them will lift out that ball. What should you say I should take now?" "Sir," was the perfectly respectful and sympathetic response, "I wad mysel' be taking, were it just me mysel', the four-twenty train back to Edinburgh." And he did.

The English papers are full of apocryphal incidents, alleged to have taken place in Canada during the recent Royal visit. It is related, for instance, that a proud and touchy resident in the neighborhood of Perth declined to go to Ottawa to see the Duchess because, although he went to see the Prince of Wales in 1860, the Royal family had never returned his call. Less ceremonious was the Western alderman who, grasping the Duke's hand with firmness and effusion, exclaimed, "I met your old man here forty years ago."

A recently published story of the late Lord Morris, Chief Justice of Ireland, illustrates his scorn of red tape and petty details. A question had arisen as to the cost of heating the Irish law courts, and a consequential treasury official was sent over from London to Dublin on purpose to investigate the matter. When he introduced himself and explained his errand, Lord Morris smiled with suspicious blandness and said: "Certainly, I will put you in communication with the person immediately in charge of that department." Then he sent out a messenger, and presently there entered an old charwoman. Lord Morris arose and left the room, saying as he did so: "Mary, here is the young man to see about the coal."

Father Taylor, the sailors' friend, was a man who at all times spoke with an engaging frankness, which sometimes became more brusque than was desirable. A banker from the West End of Boston once visited Father Taylor's church during a fervid revival, and varied the usual character of the meeting by a rather pompous address. Its purport was that the merchant princes of Boston were a very beneficent set of men, whose wealth and enterprise gave employment to thousands of sailors, and that it was, above all, the duty of seamen to show their gratitude to the merchants. At the close of his speech the banker was somewhat taken aback when Father Taylor rose and asked, simply: "Is there any other sinner from up-town who would like to say a word?"

Not long ago a Western Kansas politician was asked by his wife to lay aside politics long enough one day to dig the potatoes in the garden. He consented, and, after digging for a few minutes, went into the house and said he had found a coin. He washed it off, and it proved to be a silver quarter. He put it in his jeans and went back to work. Presently he went to the house again and said he had found another coin. He washed the dirt off of it, and this time it was a silver half-dollar. He put it in his jeans. "I have worked pretty hard," said he to his wife; "I guess I'll take a short nap." When he awoke, he found that his wife had dug all the rest of the potatoes. But she found no coins. It then dawned upon her that she had been "worked."

At the Lotus Club dinner to Ambassador Choate, Senator Chauncey M. Depew told a story on Mr. Choate which caused the assemblage to roar with laughter. The occasion he referred to was a dinner given in New York some years ago to the Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, and head of the Clan Gordon. The earl attended in full regalia, "the wearing of which," said the senator, "consists in leaving off some articles of dress we deem quite essential." He continued: "At the dinner I sat on the earl's right. Choate was next me. Just after the earl seated himself, Choate whispered to me: 'Chauncey, are Aberdeen's legs really bare?' I raised the table-cloth cautiously, and gave that scratch that all Scotchmen appreciate, and said: 'Yes, Joe, they are.' When Choate got up to speak, he said: 'Gentlemen, my invitation did not convey to me the information that the Earl of Aberdeen was to be here to-night in full regalia. If I had known it I would have left my trousers at home.' Well, you never saw a madder crowd of Scotchmen. They thought it a reflection on the national costume of the earl, who had done the diners honor to appear in it. Well, four years have passed since then, and now the earl regards that as a joke, and tells it at least once a day, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year."

Smoking-Cars For Women.

SMOKING seems to be growing in favor among the fair sex, especially on the Continent. So apparent has this become of late that the railroad authorities of Belgium have been seriously considering the advisability of introducing cars in which only women shall be allowed to travel. What has particularly served to bring the matter before the officials' notice is an incident that happened a few weeks since, when a young woman entered one of the carriages on the Southern Railroad reserved for ladies, and in a few minutes after the train had started from Brussels lit a cigarette and began to smoke it. Whereupon the other women in the compartment became very indignant, threatening to complain to the guard as soon as the train stopped. "I am in a carriage reserved for ladies," observed the smoker, blandly, "and I am not aware of any law which prohibits ladies from smoking." When the train stopped, the guard was informed of the proceedings, but was loath to interfere, and the result was that when the woman smoker arrived at her destination, she consulted a lawyer, who has now by an action in court raised the interesting question: Should railroad companies be compelled to provide separate smoking cars for women who wish to smoke while they are traveling? Some of the companies, however, appear to have taken time by the forelock, for it is understood that arrangements have already been made on some of the Belgian railroads to provide smoking compartments exclusively for women addicted to the use of tobacco.

Curious Bit of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

THE

Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why! The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and so fastened to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for [illegible] hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Pr.

3	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
4	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 40 by 22 feet, with 15 feet ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—Peterborough Colts and Cobourg juniors play here to-night.

—The County Council were at work in committee yesterday.

—The candidates for Water Commissioners are getting in their work.

—The sidewalks are very slippery, and many people are nursing bruises as a result.

—Two tramps were remanded by the Magistrate yesterday, and are in gaol for a week.

—The roads in the country are very good—better, indeed, than many of the streets in town.

—There was a large amount of hay and wood on the market yesterday. Hay was selling at $10.50 per ton.

—Great preparations are being made for the non-coms. dance on Tuesday evening next.

—A great curio exists at Jackson Park—the small-pox tent—and is being photographed at a long range by a great many.

—The last of the series of dances by the Knickerbocker club will be held on Friday evening next in their rooms on Simcoe street.

—The 18-months-old child of Mrs. H. Lambert was badly scalded on Saturday last by the contents of a teapot accidently falling on the child.

—The banquet to Mr. J. M. Kilbourn will take place this evening at the Craig House, Lakefield. Quite a number are going from town.

—Hastings Star: "Mr. Dawson, of St. Paul's church choir, Peterborough, rendered 'Jesus, I am Resting,' very beautifully at the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening.

—Lent begins on the 12th of February. Easter will come towards the end of March, which is much earlier than for many years. A short winter is therefore to be expected.

—Mr. Crocker, of the Central Y.M. C.A., Toronto, will address the men's meeting on Sunday afternoon at 4.15, on the theme, "A Man Complete." In the evening a review of the proceedings of the late convention will be given.

—After the general Wednesday evening service in the Charlotte Street church, the following members were elected as society representatives to the quarterly official board for the ensuing year: Messrs. J. C. Elliot, Geo. Minorgan, Jas. Foster, Jas. McCreary, G. J. Toovey, W. P. Adamson and A. W. Irwin.

Your vote and influence is respectfully solicited by T. F. MATTHEWS, Candidate for the office of Water Commissioner.

The Band Concert

Lindsay Post: Owing to an unfortunate combination of events the attendance at the concert given last evening in the Academy of Music by the 57th Regiment Band of Peterboro was somewhat slim. It was assuredly not due in the smallest degree to lack of appreciation, as our citizens still remember with keen pleasure the fine concert given by the band last year, and those who were present last evening enjoyed a program that would reflect credit upon any concert band in the province. Bandmaster Gliddon has every reason to feel proud of his musicians.

Recruiting To-Day

Recruiting will be carried on to-day between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. at the drill shed by Sergt. Major J. O. Hagan, A.M.C. Kingston for the purpose of enlisting recruits for the garrison at Kingston. The Sergt-Major arrived in town last evening and leaves to-night for Lindsay. He is anxious to secure a number of first class men who are willing to enlist. The men will be paid to Kingston as soon as possible.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mr. J. M. Lundy has entered the local branch of the Bank of Toronto.

—Sergt.-Major O'Hagan, A. M. C., Kingston, is in town and gave The Times a call.

—Mr. G. S. Leonard, of the local branch of the Bank of Toronto has been transferred to the London branch.

—Mr. John Tapson, of Bowmanville, expert piano tuner, has been engaged by the Stanley Piano Co., of town.

—Mrs. C. B. McAllister was chaperon to a large party of young folks who attended the hockey match at Cobourg last night.

—Mr. E. W. A. O'Dell, agent of the Boot and Shoe Makers' Union, is in town, advocating among the merchants a more exclusive trade in union made boots and shoes.

—Mr. George H. Brown, of Chemong Park Hotel, passed through town for home yesterday morning, after having visited his mother in Port Hope for a day.

—Mr. R. T. Hill, of Hall's Bridge, was in town yesterday, and dropped in to see The Times. He is one of our most esteemed subscribers in his section, and is always a welcome visitor to our sanctum.

—Mr. G. Milne Hamilton, of the Peter Hamilton Co., left yesterday to assume his position with the Lake Superior Power Co. Mr. Hamilton's many friends in town will be pleased to hear of his success in his very important position.

The installing officer was J. Titterson, Senior Past Commander.

Mr. Mitchell's Upset

While Mr. Joseph Mitchell, the well known Hunter street tonsorial artist, was enjoying the luxury of a drive yesterday afternoon in Ashburnham, the cutter came in contact with a bank of snow and upset, standing "Joe" on his head in several feet of snow. He was with difficulty rescued, and put right side up again. Fortunately no injury was sustained either to the rig, horse or driver.

A MARVELOUS FOOD TRIUMPH

Malt Breakfast Food.

The Leader in Every Town and City

Professor W. M. Williams, M.D., of London, England, the greatest living scientist in the chemistry of foods, in "The Chemistry of Cookery," says, "By mixing malt with a cereal in proper proportions an excellent and easily digested food is obtained, and one which I strongly recommend for invalids as well as for strong people."

Malt Breakfast Food fully meets the views of the celebrated scientist. Being a partially cooked food it is predigested, has no insoluble starch to hamper digestion, it soothes and quiets the irritated stomach, braces the nerves, gives to the weak needed strength, and keeps well people strong and active from day to day. It is the leader in every town and city. At all grocers.

A SEVERE FALL

An Old Man Severely Hurt by a Fall in Front of Commercial Hotel

An old gentleman was walking down George street, yesterday at noon and when in front of the Commercial House he missed his footing on the large and dangerous pile of ice on the sidewalk and suffered a very severe fall one of his arms being badly bruised.

We think the authorities should see to the ice at that place, and if the water from the roof cannot be stopped from falling on the sidewalk, an effort should be made to have the ice removed. Every time the snow melts on the roof, a stream of water falls on the sidewalk and freezes there, making the ice. Some action should be taken in this matter, and probably save the town the trouble and expense of a lawsuit.

Sent to Mimico

Bertha Freeborn was taken away from gaol yesterday to the Mimico Industrial School, where she will have an opportunity of earning her livelihood, and of being properly cared for at the same time. Mr. Stratton sent the bailiff for her. To the King's Daughters this happy release from gaol is due, and it speaks highly for their efficiency and grasp of the situation that, they have been able to accomplish so much where others either have failed or neglected to make an effort.

CARNEGIE OFFERS $10,000

Andrew Carnegie, the great philanthropist, has offered the town of Lindsay $10,000 for a free public library, on condition that a free site be given and a guarantee of $1,000 be given to maintain the library.

We understand that almost any town can have money under similar terms and for similar purposes from Mr. Carnegie, but many hesitate to tie themselves up in such a way.

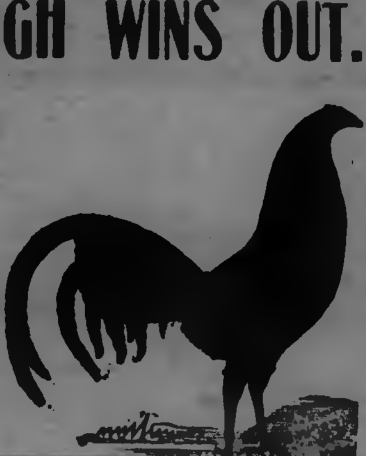
PETERBOROUGH WINS OUT.



At Cobourg Last Night in a Closely Contested Game With Port Hope

ABOUT 500 PEOPLE ACCOMPANY BOYS

The Game Was Witnessed by About 2,000 People—700 from Port Hope

We win! Hurrah!! The game of the season—the game which has for a week filled every person with a consuming anxiety as to the result—was played on the Cobourg ice last night between the hockey teams of Port Hope and Peterborough. To say that every citizen manifested a hearty interest in the outcome of the match is putting the matter to mildly. This was evidenced by the fact that about 500 people went to Cobourg to see the game, and to cheer the boys on to victory. In addition to a large number who left on the noon train, five coach loads of people left by special train in the evening. At Millbrook, nearly 100 were added to the number. If there has existed in the minds of any a doubt as to the respective abilities of the teams, the score last night on a strange rink, following the game of last week, should serve to banish it.

The teams lined up as follows:

ONTARIOS		PETERBORO.
R. Mercer	GOAL	B. Wasson
A. Bourne	POINT	R M Glover
Sutherland	COVER POINT	H Armstrong
	FORWARDS
W McMillan,		F. Whitcroft
C Boney		H. Morgan
C Coleman		C Graham
W Laurenceson.		R Armstrong

In the first half the game was very fast and exciting, and both teams played good clean hockey. The score at half time was 3-0 in favor of Peterborough.

In the second half, some of the Ontarios, particularly Coleman, one of the forwards, showed a tendency to play rough, and Harold Armstrong and Whitcroft were badly injured. Port Hope succeeded in scoring three goals in the last half, while Peterborough only scored one, making the score at full time 4-3 in favor of Peterborough.

NOTES.

—The referee was very impartial, but did not see some of the rough plays.

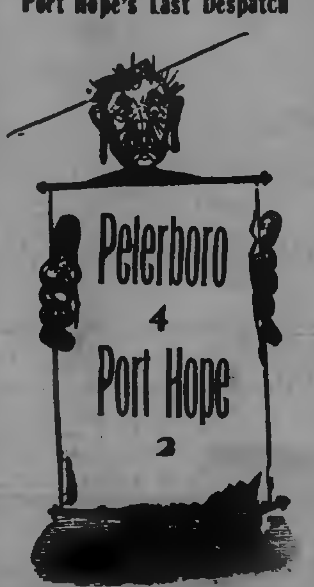
—The feature of the game was Harold Armstrong's rushes.

—The gate receipts at the Cobourg rink were about $1,000.

—There was considerable betting done, and it is estimated that about $1,500 changed hands as a result of the game.

—Roy Armstrong, for a junior, played a good game, and shows great promise as a stick handler.

Port Hope's Last Despatch



—Graham was very effective in stopping rushes, while Harold Armstrong proved a veritable war horse at breaking up the combination work of the Ontarios.

—Quite a contingent of the fair sex accompanied the boys to Cobourg and helped to cheer them on to victory.

—The rink at Cobourg was so crowded that many could not get in at all, and many who did get in were unable to see the greatest part of the game. A great number of people were perched on the rafters, and from that point of vantage yelled and hooted to the full extent of their lungs.

—While the crowd was coming out of the rink, one of the galleries gave way, and caused considerable excitement. Nobody was injured, however.

NORWOOD AND APSLEY RAILWAY TO BE BUILT

PROVISIONAL DIRECTORS MEET AND MAKE ARRANGEMENTS

$10,000 Subscribed and $1000 Paid—Hopeful Feeling That the Road will be Built—$171,000 in Government Subsidies

A meeting of the provisional directors of the Norwood and Apsley Railway was held in Norwood on Saturday last, 25th instant, for the purpose of opening stock books and placing the company on a business footing. There were present: Messrs J. B. Pearce, President; W. E. Roxborough, Sec.-Treas; J. W. Ratcliffe, Chandos; T. G. Eastland, Wm. Gallen, Apsley; Dr. Jeff, Havelock; J. Andrews, Asphodel; John Sexsmith, Belmont; J. Finlay, Norwood, and others.

After the last minutes of the last meeting had been read and approved, the President stated that it was necessary, under the charter, to organize permanently. In order to do this stock books must be opened and stock subscribed. He went on to say that already 100 shares at $100 each had been taken up, which represented $10,000, ten per cent having been paid and deposited to the credit of the company in the bank at Norwood.

The stockholders will meet in about a month and elect a permanent board of directors.

The proposed road will begin at Norwood and run to Apsley, a distance of 35 miles. It will cost about $12,000 per mile, or a total of $400,000. Of this sum the government subsidies amount to $171,000, leaving $229,000 to be raised from the sale of stock and bonds.

TO THE ELECTORS

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Having been requested by a large number of ratepayers to offer myself as a candidate for the position of Water Commissioner for the Town of Peterborough, I have consented to do so, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence. If elected my policy will be to treat rich and poor alike, and regard the general welfare of the town in the careful and economical management of the water works.

WILLIAM FAIR

CARD TO ELECTORS

To the Electors of the Town of Peterborough;

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been urged by the numerous friends of Municipal Ownership to allow myself to be placed in nomination for one of the Water Commissioners, I have consented to be a Candidate. The grounds upon which they urge my election are, amongst others, that I am really the father of Municipal Ownership in this town, and have consistently fought the battle therefor throughout, and that at its incipient or experimental stage, such a one should be given the first opportunity to prove the feasibility of the scheme. They further urge that my record has been free from all cliques and other corrupting influences, and that I will stand up fearlessly for the rights of all alike, without fear, favour or affection. It is needless to say that if elected I will do my utmost to carry out the most sanguine expectations of my numerous friends and water consumers generally. Respectfully asking you one and all for your vote and influence, I am, ladies and gentlemen,

Your Obedient Servant,

GEORGE BALL.

Do Not Try To Cure Effects

WISDOM DIRECTS YOU TO USE

Paine's Celery Compound

TO GET RID OF THE CAUSE OF YOUR SICKNESS

To use medicine to cure effects instead of using Paine's Celery Compound to get rid of the cause, is great folly. Paine's Celery Compound will make you strong and well. All the while you are using it the nerves gain in power and strength, the digestive organs are fully toned, and lost health rapidly returns. It is folly to neglect what some call the insignificant ills, aches, pains and tired feelings that thousands of people experience at this time of the year. Paine's Celery Compound should be used at once to brace up the diseased nerves, purify the blood and fortify the system. Weak children, frail and weary women, and tired and broken-down men find a new and happy life after Paine's Celery Compound is used for a short time. Mrs. Laura Garland, Crawford street, Toronto, says:

"Your Paine's Celery Compound has most wonderfully improved my health. Before using it my appetite was poor—almost gone; I was also weak and debilitated, and suffered severely from pains in the head.

Paine's Celery Compound certainly does all that is claimed for it. I have recommended it to my friends, and they all speak highly of the results received from it; I wish Paine's Celery Compound the success it so richly deserves.".

To the Ratepayers the Town of Peterboro.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been nominated for the position of Water Commissioner for the ensuing term I have consented to place my services at the disposal of the town if it is the wish of the ratepayers that I should do so.

As a director of the Peterboro Water Company during the past six years I may claim to have a pretty thorough knowledge of the system and methods which have placed the Company on a sound financial basis. The experience thus gained will, I believe, enable me to discharge the duties of the office to your satisfaction. It is not my intention to canvass for votes, but if elected will cheerfully devote my best energies to making the system serve the best interests of the municipality. Yours truly,

W. H. HILL

HOW JAMES BRYCE PREDICTS WAR DEFEAT

The British Parliament Says England Will Lose South Africa

HIS STATEMENTS ARE NOT ENTERTAINED

The War Will be Prosecuted Until the End—British Supremacy in South Africa Must be Maintained

London, Feb. 1—The anti-British papers published the following:

When a man of international reputation like the Right Hon. James Bryce predicts the "probable loss of South Africa to Britain," it may be realized how seriously the carrying out of the British policy is regarded by responsible statesmen. Mr. Bryce was asked to participate in a movement to raise money here to endow a chair of history in a South African college. He wrote in reply:

It seems almost a mockery in the frightful state of things in South Africa, with martial law everywhere, all interest in education paralyzed, the people unable to move from place to place, an intensity of passion aroused which threatens bitterness for generations to come, and the probable loss of South Africa to Britain, to go on the platform with smooth generalities about history—a history which has not saved us from repeating the blunders of 1775—and the dulcet notes of peace where there is no peace."

W. H. Lecky, M.P., the eminent historian, whose only indication of his view on the war has been his expression of approval of the arbitration petition, replied with thinly veiled irony to the same invitation:

"It shows no small courage to start such a scheme amid all the present troubles of South Africa. I sincerely hope you may find support among the many rich men in London who have made their fortunes in South Africa."

But the scheme is being proceeded with as a part of the elaborate pretense that settled conditions are now beginning to prevail in South Africa, though it is admitted that even if the war should end to-morrow the resuming of representative government in Cape Colony must be postponed indefinitely, while the British power can only be preserved in the "annexed" republics by a permanent garrison of a hundred thousand men.

The British Government is to have a free hand for its war policy at this session of parliament, just as it had at the last.

The prospect of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman leading a united opposition on anti-jingo lines has been shattered by the developments of the debate on the war amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. That amendment, halting and self-contradictory in terms, consolidated the centre section of the Liberal party, but failed to conciliate the moving spirits of Liberal-Imperialism or the anti-war wings. So the Government is left master of the Parliamentary situation. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman can do nothing positive without being deserted and attacked by one or the other of the dissident forces.

The teeth of the opposition have been drawn already, and even its bark is silenced.

The Ministerialists, except a few who have been in South Africa and appreciate the situation there, are for remorselessly grinding the Boers under the British heel. Colonial Secretary Chamberlain's diplomatic pretenses of magnanimity to the Boers were received by his followers in sullen silence, while every reference to rigorous measures was cheered with an enthusiasm proportionate to its ruthlessness.

The practical acquiescence of the civilized world in a continuation of this war of conquest and extermination gives the British Government unfettered liberty to pursue it to any end it chooses, and that opportunity is to be fully availed of.

London, Feb. 1—The Post, replying to above says that there is not much stock taken in what Bryce or the subsidized Boer press of London says regarding the war. So far as Britain meeting defeat is concerned, there is every reason to believe that the conclusion of the war and complete triumph of British arms is close at hand.

FRENCH HAS DISPERSED FOUCHE'S COMMANDO

Lord Kitchener Reports That Colonel Du Moulin Was Attacked by Niewhoudt's Command and Boers were Repulsed

London, Jan. 31.—Lord Kitchener, in a despatch from Pretoria, dated Thursday, January 30, reports that the camp of Colonel L. E. Du Moulin, of the Sussex Regiment, was attacked by Niewhoudt's command, and that after severe fighting the Boers were repulsed.

Lord Kitchener also reports that Gen. French captured twenty-six men belonging to Fouche's command in the north-eastern part of Cape Colony, and that the command was completely scattered.

A London despatch to the Associated Press yesterday, said that the War Office casualty list (issued yesterday) showed that in a hitherto unreported engagement at Abraham's Kraal, near Koffyfontein, Orange River Colony, January 29, Colonel Du Moulin, of the Sussex Regiment, and eight men, were killed, and seven men were wounded.

DENMARK CAREFUL NOW

Won't Approve Sale of West Indian Islands Until Congress Acts.

London, Jan. 31—A despatch to the Morning Post from Copenhagen states that the preliminary treaty for the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States will not be submitted to Parliament until it is accepted by the American Congress, and a plebiscite of the islanders has been taken. The course is followed owing to the experience met with in 1867 when the United States Senate refused to ratify the purchase of St. Thomas.

Consumption is Infectious

Every precaution should be taken to prevent its spread of the "White Plague." Persons coming into contact with consumptives should inhale Catarrhozone several times each day as it is a powerful destroyer of disease germs, and renders them innocuous. Catarrhozone is a most efficient preventive and may be thoroughly relied on to promote expectoration, soothe the cough and benefit in many ways too numerous to mention. Both from a medical and scientific point of view Catarrhozone is the most valuable addition to the armament against consumption. Its merit cannot be too warmly applauded. Sold at all druggists, two months' treatment, price $1, small size 25c., or by mail from N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

DRUNKENNESS AMONG MOTHERS

It is Growing Appallingly, Says Bishop Coleman of Delaware.

New Brunswick, N.J., Jan. 21—Bishop Leighton Coleman, of Delaware, said in an address here last night on "The Church Idea of Temperance," that there is to-day an appalling growth of drunkenness among women. He continued:

"A short while ago I addressed a meeting of leading society women in New York City, when I made that statement. It was proved that my statement was literally correct, so far as New York City is concerned. I am sorry to say that it appertains to women, and to mothers particularly, those who have the care and instruction of our future men and women. It is a sad outlook when mothers are not living in soberness and chastity."

Came Here from Cornwall

The health authorities in town are very wide awake and yesterday a traveller named Hockins, who came here from Cornwall was corralled, and had to produce the necessary evidence that it was safe for him to be at large. Mr. Hockins had stopped at the Cornwall hotel where smallpox had broken out. He had been vaccinated and produced the doctor's certificate to that effect, and was allowed to go.

TO COLONIZE SOUTH AFRICA

British Subjects Now in America to Be Asked to Go There

Tacoma, Wash. Jan. 31—The Rev. I. N. Barr, for two years rector of the Episcopal church at Watcom, has gone to South Africa by way of London to arrange with Sir Alfred Milner for what he says will be one of the most extensive colonization schemes ever attempted by the British Government. He says:

"The British Government has come to the conclusion that the only way by which the race prejudice in South Africa can be eradicated is by the sending into that country of a large number of British-born people, at present residing in parts of the world not under the British flag. To send in the people fresh from England or some of her colonies would only intensify the feeling and prolong the present miserable war.

"In America there are thousands of British-born subjects who still cherish a love for the British flag, and it is to those people that the authorities charged with a peaceful solution of the South African question turn. To induce them to leave their homes and seek new ones in this tropical country most liberal inducements will be offered in the way of grants of land, cattle, farming utinsils, etc.

"These colonists would receive the homes of the Boers which have been declared forfeited to the Crown, and also unoccupied lands. Houses will be built for them by the Government."

Mr. Barr will return in July prepared to give the details to the American farmers who are willing to emigrate. Barr has been President of the local British League. His only son was killed in battle by the Boers.

ELECTION ON MONDAY

Those Who May Vote for the New Water Commissioners

There appears to be some misunderstanding in the minds of many as to those who are entitled to vote for Water Commissioners. It should be understood that every ratepayer is entitled to vote on Monday, as in municipal elections. Only in the case of by-laws is the voting restricted to freeholders. Any person who is entitled to a vote at an election for Mayor or Councillors, has a vote on Monday. In the case of people having property in the different wards they can only vote once and that in the division in which they live. Each voter can choose two candidates and vote for them. Mr. T. E. Bradburn has retired from the contest. His card appears elsewhere.

COMPLIMENTARY BANQUET

Tendered to President and Directors of the Lakefield Cement Co. Last Night

The complimentary banquet tendered by the citizens of Lakefield to Mr. J. M. Kilbourn, President, and the Directors of the Lakefield Cement Co. at the Craig house Lakefield, last night, was a grand success. The tables were laid in a most elaborate manner and were laden with a bounteous supply of good things. A large number of prominent citizens from town were present. A number of very complimentary addresses were delivered. The banquet was most successful, and great credit is due to the efforts of mine host Craig.

MR. H. E. BRADLEY'S TRIP

Attended the Convention of Custom Tailors of America, at Milwaukee

Mr. H. E. Bradley, of the firm of H. E. Bradley & Co., the proprietor of Peterborough's well known and popular custom tailor and gent's furnishing establishment has returned from Milwaukee where he attended the annual convention of the Custom Cutter's Association of America. The convention was held from Jan 20th to 24th and was attended by over 250 representative custom cutters of the United States and Canada. Of the 250 or more representatives in attendance there were fifteen custom cutters from the Dominion. Mr. Bradley being one of that number. The enterprise shown by this firm in being present at this very important convention is only characteristic of the energy displayed by them since Mr. Bradley assumed the management of the business.

At the convention, styles and methods of producing up-to-date styles of garments were cut drafted and fitted in the convention and criticism of their style and fitting points must have proved of great value to those present. Mr. H. Taylor, of Toronto, was elected president of the Association. The next convention will be held at St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Bradley speaks very highly of the hospitality extended by the citizens and merchant tailors of Milwaukee.

On Wednesday evening the visitors were entertained by an elaborate smoker at one of the leading clubs, and on Thursday, as an opera party attended one of the best theatres in the city. On Friday a dance at the Calumet Club, and on Thursday preceding they were entertained at the Schlitz palm gardens.

Mr. Bradley met several high-class tailors in Chicago, during a conversation, one of them remarked that the cheapest suit they turned out was $75. Of course there are reasons to explain for this, as for this, as instance rents in the city are very high, one custom tailor paying a yearly rental of $20,000.

The people of Peterborough will surely appreciate Mr. Bradley's progressive spirit in attending a convention that is attended by only a few of the most enterprising tailors of Canada.

Alive, Yet Half Dead

Feeling miserable. This is the condition of thousands of growing girls and women. Can't eat enough to be truly alive. Digest so little of what they do eat, as to scarcely know what life really means. Miserable Of course. Eat more, digest more, and feel streaming through life's renewed current, the buoyancy, the strength, the hopefulness of youth. Simply done if you'll just try Ferrozone, the wonderful blood maker, nerve, strength and brain vigor. Ormond & Walsh, Druggists, know all about it. Call and ask them about it.

A GOOD OUTLOOK IN PHILIPPINES

Peace Prospects in Archipelago Have Never Been Brighter

THE NATIVE POLICE AT WORK

Eighty-Two Military Posts Have Already Been Handed Handed Over to the Filipinos

Manila, Jan. 31.—The general outlook for pacification on the Archipelago, everywhere outside of the Island of Samar, has never been more favorable than at the present time since the original outbreak of the Filipino insurrection. The insurgents have been broken up into small bands and are everywhere fleeing for shelter. Daily they surrender, are captured or are killed.

The policy of reconcentration and the stern measure of closing the ports to commerce have accomplished everything expected of them. General Chaffee still hopes that by the end of February the island of Samar alone will remain non-pacific.

Those provinces bordering on the Provinces of Batangas and Laguna, in Southern Luzon, have been patrolled by the native constabulary, who have done excellent work, and who have received the commendation of General J. Franklin Bell, commanding in those provinces.

The members of the United States Philippine Commission are proud of this constabulary, which was organized following their suggestion, and the greatest care is exercised in the selection of officers for this force. During the past month eighty-two military posts have been handed over to the native constabulary.

HUNTSVILLE MAN ARRESTED

On a Charge of Obtaining Money Under False Pretences

William Greenstade was arrested yesterday morning by the police on the information contained in a letter from Huntsville. The man came here a short time ago from Huntsville, where, it is charged, he received money under false pretences. He has been working in the C. G. E. Works here for some time. An officer from Huntsville arrived in town last night and took the prisoner away with him this morning.

To Break up a Cold

all you require is a glass of hot water, a little sugar, and thirty drops of Polson's Nerviline. Take it real hot, and in the morning you will wake up without a cold. When depressed or tired, try Nerviline; it will tone you up better than stimulants. Nerviline wards off all sickness and keeps people well. Large bottles 25c.

Young People and the Church

To the Rev. Dr. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant in Washington, belongs the credit of having solved the problem of keeping people in the church. Strange as it may seem, efforts hitherto have been devoted to providing spiritual and secular entertainment for the religious and the religiously inclined in buildings apart from the church, such as the Y M C A and the Y W C A. It is true that for a time the Endeavor and kindred societies did their playing at religion in the church buildings themselves, but the minds of the young men and women became filled with vanity and insubordination. They wished to run their own show, and it has been disastrous to the churches as a consequence. For a long time we have been of opinion that to counteract this separatist tendency, clubs should be got up in and about the churches, each after its kind, and we are glad to see that a well-known divine, having tired of playing to the young people's gallery, is advocating the adoption of the club plan. Failing a feeling of religious loyalty and enthusiasm in young people for the church of their nativity or adoption, it is necessary to resort to some such device, and the "club" device is the best we know of. The germ of the disease, however, lies in infidelity. No young man or woman, alive to the interests of his faith, will draw off for his or her own gratification and amusement from their own church. But further hardening of the heart has succeeded each appeal, and we shall be glad, as we have said, to find that the vanity of the young has ceased to trespass upon the integrity of the church.

How much better it would be if St. Paul's, the George Street Methodist and similar bodies had their own clubs and their own amusements instead of feeding rival corporations of avowedly similar aims. It is very stupid, but it is also extremely sad that things are as they are, and we shall await the outcome with some eagerness.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN CONNOLLY

One of the Oldest Settlers and Pioneers of Township of Ops

One of the oldest settlers and pioneers of the township of Ops died after a lingering illness on Tuesday last, in the person of Mr. John Connolly at the age of 75 years. Deceased was born at or near the village of Bailieboro, where his parents settled when they came to this country in the early part of the century. During his lifetime he took an active interest in public matters, having filled the position of Deputy Reeve and Reeve, for many years. When the County Council assembled in Peterborough, he was one of the members, and afterwards served in the Council of Victoria County. In 1878 he was chosen as Liberal candidate for the Dominion house and after a very stubborn fight was defeated.

When Mr. Connolly's illness became serious, the entire family were called to his bedside. It gave the father great consolation to have his family beside him during his last days. The family left to mourn the death of a kind and loving father are Nicholas, at home; Anastasia, at home; Mrs. P. J. Murphy, of Ops; Mrs. Henry O'Keefe, of Minto, N. D.; James Connolly, of Ops; Mrs. John O'Keefe, of North Dakota; William Connolly, Chief Clerk of Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D.C.; Joseph Connolly, of Linden; Miss Nellie and Frank, who reside at home.

WE'LL ALL BE CRAZY

Detroit Doctor Says the World Will Be a Lunatic Asylum

Detroit, Jan. 29—Dr. R. B. Hoyt, a former member of the Board of Education, has gathered statistics which convince him that at the present rate of increase of insanity the population of this country will be mad in two hundred and sixty years.

"Within the last fifty years," he said," the number of insane persons and fools has increased 300 per cent. That means if the increase continues that the entire population of this country within 260 years will have gone insane or become foolish."

THOUGHT HE WAS CRAZY

How a Drummer Nearly Had the Life Frightened Out of Him.

A good story is told about a local barber (who requests the Times not to publish his name). It appears that he put up a job on a drummer, who was a guest at the Snowden House, and who was a practical joker himself.

There were two chairs in the shop, and when the drummer entered there was only one barber at work, and not another soul in the place.

The barber received him pleasantly and set to work at once. He was well lathered and the shaving had begun when the barber made a curious remark.

"I had a strange customer in the chair this morning," he said. "He had two sets of eyebrows. I told him about it and wanted to shave off the extra pair, but he wouldn't let me and acted as though he was frightened about it."

"That was strange," said the man in the chair, beginning to feel uneasy.

"Yes," went on the barber, as he waved his razor in graceful curves about the customer's chin, "it was rather queer. Then, a few minutes later, I noticed that both the boss and the man on the other chair had double sets of eyebrows, too. I told them about it. At first they laughed. I said I had worked here many moons and had never noticed those double eyebrows before. Then the boss said, 'Why, the man's crazy. Let's go and get the police.' Then they both ran out of the shop. That was just before you came in. Now, there isn't a thing the matter with me. I ain't crazy. Do you think I am? Do you notice anything queer about me?"

"Not a thing," said the man in the chair, as cold chills ran up and down his spinal column. "Not a thing in the world. Would you just as leave use cold water on my face?"

The barber went back to the washbasin and the half-shaved customer jumped out of the chair and grabbing his hat, rushed out into the street.

He hasn't been back since, and from the twinkle in the eye of the genial proprietor of the Snowden House when the drummer entered, a tall suspicion that the incident was a hoax, took possession of him.

PEACE PROPOSALS ARE STILL BEING DISCUSSED

Holland Wishes to Send Commission to Boers to Urge Them to Cease Fighting

GENERAL KITCHENER'S REPLY IS NOW AWAITED

Germany Anxious to Show She had no Hand in the Affair—Premier Kuyper Declines to Tell What He Wrote to England

London, Thursday, Jan. 30.—The inevitable guesses regarding the Dutch communication to Great Britain are multiplying. As all of them profess to be derived from "high authority" all are different, and it is difficult to regard any of them as worthy of notice. A Hague despatch to the Daily Mail professes to have the precise nature of the note. The kernel of this version is that the Netherlands ask Great Britain to allow a Dutch commission to go to South Africa, to enlighten the Boer leaders in the field as to the real state of affairs, including the hopelessness of European intervention, and the uselessness of prolonging the struggle. It is stated that the note informs Great Britain that the Dutch Government is in nowise authorized by the Boer leaders in Europe or South Africa to take this step, but appeals to its own initiative to be allowed on the ground of humanity to accomplish the mission. It is this, says the correspondent, that Great Britain is considering, and he believes that if General Kitchener does not object it will consent. General Kitchener's reply is now awaited.

ACCEPT GENEROUS AMNESTY.

London, Jan. 30.—The Central News Agency declares that it has excellent authority for stating that the Boer leaders have intimated through Dr. Van Kuyper, the Dutch Premier, their willingness to abandon their claim to independence as a sine qua non to any peace negotiations, but that they would accept an immediate and generous amnesty for all combatants in the war in place of their independence claim.

The St. James Gazette states that the communication from the Dutch Government was couched in very friendly and respectful language, and gave expression to the sincere sorrow with which the prolongation of hostilities is watched by the people of Holland, and of their desire to see peace speedily consummated. The Netherlands Government intimated that it would facilitate in every way possible a settlement between the belligerents. The document concluded by placing the services of Holland at the disposal of the British Government should the occasion arise in which the Dutch Government might act as friendly mediators.

The stock market developed general activity to-day on account of the peace rumors. Consols were 1-2 higher. Kaffirs were a leading feature of the opening. The volume of business was large, and the prices were about the same as at the close last night. Subsequently Kaffirs advanced 1-2. Home railroads and Americans have advanced from 1-2 to 1. A Paris despatch says there was a strong tendency early this morning to rush to the Bourse to speculate on Kaffirs.

The Premier, Lord Salisbury, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Lord Lansdowne, took the unusual course of visiting the House of Commons this afternoon. They held private consultations with their Ministerial colleagues in the committee-room. The incident aroused considerable interest in the lobby, where the visit was connected with the note of the Dutch Government on the subject of peace in South Africa.

TOOK THE INITIATIVE

Paris, Jan. 30.—The French papers all comment on the statement made by Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour in the British House of Commons yesterday in regard to the overtures for peace between Great Britain and the Boers. The Figaro asks whether Mr. Balfour's statement is not a manœuvre initiated with the object of bringing up the question of negotiations.

The Pappel finds Mr. Balfour's language very ambiguous, and suggests that the British are embarrassed by intervention. Great Britain, it says, would prefer to treat with Acting President Schalkburger, of the so-called Transvaal Government.

The Gaulois says Mr. Balfour's statement foreshadows a more important announcement. It indicates that the Dutch Government has discreetly intervened between the belligerents in order to facilitate a basis of agreement. The Boers, the paper says, want peace, but an honorable peace.

The Temps prints a despatch from Amsterdam, giving a two-column interview with a former Transvaal functionary on the latest peace rumors. He says a necessary condition of peace is the recall of Lord Milner. Then peace will be possible under the British Empire system and the establishment of a high court.

The Patrie publishes an interview with Dr. Leyds, European representative of the Transvaal, in which he affirmed that peace was only possible on one condition, which was well known to the English Government, thereby implying the independence of the South African Republics.

GERMAN ANXIOUS.

Berlin, Jan. 30.—The correspondent of The Mail and Empire is assured that the Government desires it to be understood that Germany is not cognizant of, and has no connection with, the Dutch communication to Great Britain in regard to a settlement of the war in South Africa. The German Government is even sceptical as to the importance of the contents of the note.

Most of the newspapers here express the opinion that further news as regards the attitude of the British Government on the Dutch proposals will be necessary before it can be decided whether the peace prospects are better than they were before.

DECLINES TO TELL.

The Hague, Jan. 30.—The Boer delegates state that they are absolutely ignorant of the contents of the Dutch note to Great Britain.

In the first Chamber of the States General to-day, the Premier, Dr. Kuyper, replying to a question on the subject, confirmed the accuracy of A. J. Balfour's statement in the British House of Commons yesterday, regarding the Dutch Government's offer to help in bringing about peace in South Africa. The Premier added that he was prevented, by courtesy, from disclosing any details concerning the note, so long as the British Government had not published its contents, or until a reply to it was received.

The Boer delegates disclaim any knowledge of the contents of the Dutch note to Great Britain.

Items of Interest

Boston, Mass., Feb. 1.—Secretary R. G. Preston, of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, has started for Washington to lay before George F. Hoar, senior senator from Massachusetts, petitions urging that a reciprocal trade arrangement between the United States and Canada be negotiated and ratified. The petitions have been endorsed by boards of trade of about forty cities and manufacturing towns, and have been signed by the leading business men of those places. In all more than 10,000 names are enrolled. Secretary Preston will present Senator Hoar a letter setting forth the position of those who favor reciprocity legislation.

Rome, Feb. 1. — The reorganization of the "Opera dei Congressi" is being completed on this side of the Alps. The second section is in process of formation favorable auspices and with select names—Toniolo, Medolago, Rezzara, Abbate Murri and so on, our friends of the vanguard, the Pope's Zouaves, our safest economists. Signor Toniolo stands for science, Count Medolago for the parent bloom of the democratic spirit, Signor Rezzara is the organizer; the Abbate Murri represents the Abbe Lemire. These are the representatives of the brilliant Guelph school, the picked troops of the church, the precious national reserve. At Rome the Abbate Murri has manag-

THE BAD CONDITION OF OUR SIDEWALKS

Sir,—I desire through the columns of your paper to draw the attention of the authorities to the very dangerous condition of some of our sidewalks. Since the soft weather and consequent thaw on Sunday last there have been a number of very dangerous places formed on the sidewalks in town. Yesterday I was walking down George street and in front of the Commercial hotel had great difficulty in keeping my feet. The snow on the roof had melted on Sunday and overflowed the eavetrough and run down the side of the building to the sidewalk, where it formed into ice. This bank of ice extends nearly half way across the walk and although many people have passed the place with great difficulty still nothing has been done to remove the danger. Yesterday an old gentleman suffered a very severe fall at this place. The next place I wish to draw the attention of the authorities to is the dangerous condition of the crossings since the recent heavy snow storm. These places are raised considerably higher than the street and are very narrow and dangerous. A few hours work by one man would make these places more passable. Hoping these places will be attended to by the authorities, and thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space, I remain

Paine's Celery Compound

Sickly children, weary women, and tired, brokendown men find in Paine's Celery Compound health, strength and happiness. For all the diseases which are really the result of weakened nerves, such as dyspepsia, head ache, sleeplessness, rheumatism and kidney and liver troubles, Paine's Celery Compound is the only remedy that absolutely cures. It has done more good for humanity than any other medical discovery of the past fifty years, and well deserves the hearty and grateful praise of the thousands whom it has snatched from the jaws of death.

Rev. John S. Michaud, Bishop of Burlington, Vt., one of the most prominent priests of the Roman Catholic Church in America, writes as follows: "I have been asked why I recommend Paine's Celery Compound, and I desire to put on record frankly my reasons for this endorsement, hoping that my words may inspire those readers who need health and strength with faith to try Paine's Celery Compound and prove to themselves its worth.

"At the Fanny Allen Hospital, an institution in which I am deeply interested, Paine's Celery Compound has been used successfully. The Sisters of Mercy at Mount St. Mary's Academy on Mansfield Ave., rely upon Paine's Celery Compound as a tonic and strengthener. In my own household one of the domestics has taken Paine's Celery Compound for liver trouble of long standing, and says, 'It has done more good than any other medicine.' Several priests have spoken to me in praise of this remedy, and I believe it has the confidence of my associates. Even did I not know from personal observation of the worth of Paine's Celery Compound, I should feel like praising it for the simple reason that it is prepared by the Wells & Richardson Co., a firm whose members I have known for nearly a quarter of a century, and in whom I have perfect confidence."

A GROWING INDUSTRY

The best sugar factories of Michigan have an aggregate capacity for handling 6,000 tons of beets per day, and during the year just ended 68,400 acres of beets were harvested, for which the growers received $3,167,-520. The average output of sugar per ton of beets at the Michigan factories is 219 pounds, which for the present season amounts to 125,496,000 pounds, or 62,748 tons, or 4,183 carloads of 15 tons each. This amount would make a solid train load of sugar 31.6 miles long. This amount is 75 per cent. of Michigan's yearly consumption of sugar. Its value at 4 1-2 cents per lb. is $5,647,320. Next year there will be 17 factories in the States, and it is expected that 800,000 tons of beets will be produced and converted into sugar. To produce 3,000,000 tons of beet sugar annually would require 600 plants each having a daily capacity of 500 tons of beets. These plants would represent the following investment and annual business: investment in plants, $300,000,000; working capital, $60,000,-000; acres of beets, 3,000,000; valuation of land growing the crop, $150,-000,000; tons of beets 27,000,000; tons of sugar, 3,000,000; value of beets, $125,000,000; annual payment roll for labor in factories, $42,000,000; tons of coal used annually, 5,540,000; tons of limerock used annually, 1,800,000; tons of coke used annually, 300,000; freight paid railroads annually $27,000,000; annual payment for bags and barrels, $6,000,000; farmers' families raising beets, 700,000; men employed in factories, 120,000, and 1,200,000 men employed raising beets during the season.

A SUBJECT FOR THOUGHT

CARNEGIE OFFERS $10,000

Town of Lindsay is Offered $10,000 for a Free Library

Andrew Carnegie, the great philanthropist, has offered the town of Lindsay $10,000 for a free public library, on condition that a free site be given and a guarantee of $1,000 be given to maintain the library.

We understand that almost any town can have similar under similar terms and for similar purposes from Mr. Carnegie, but many hesitate to tie themselves up in such a way.

Nervousness, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and kindred ailments, take wings before the healing qualities of South American Nervine. Thomas Hoskins, of Durham, Ont., took his preacher's advice, followed directions, and was cured permanently of the worst form of Nervous Prostration and Dyspepsia. He has recommended it to others with gratifying results. It's a great nerve builder.—10

A PROCLAMATION

We possess all the modern and up-to-date facilities for conducting a reliable and first-class drug business. When you favor us with your doctor's prescription, our best efforts are put forth to make that prescription what it should be—professionally correct in the minutest details.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

This medicine is giving marvellous results to sick people all over Canada. The wonderful cures effected by Paine's Celery Compound during the past year speaks volumes in favor of the popular medicine. Thousands who have suffered from rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous troubles and dyspepsia now sing the praises of the medicine that has given them such happy results. JOHN NUGENT, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

The Band Concert

Lindsay Post: Owing to an unfortunate combination of events the attendance at the concert given last evening in the Academy of Music by the 57th Regiment Band of Peterboro was somewhat slim. It was assuredly not due in the smallest degree to lack of appreciation, as our citizens still remember with keen pleasure the fine concert given by the band last year, and those who were present last evening enjoyed a program that would reflect credit upon any concert band in the province. Bandmaster Gliddon has every reason to feel proud of his musicians.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart acts directly and quickly, stimulates the heart's action, stops most acute pain, dispels all signs of weakness, fluttering, sinking, smothering, or palpitation. German Etiquette.

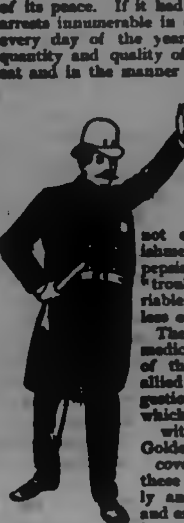
THE visitor in Germany is often embarrassed by the superfluity of titles, which seem to be showered indiscriminately. The Germans are great sticklers for the dignity of station, and William H. Dawson, in "German Life in Town and Country," shows how actions at law have been instituted because of the withholding of titles rightfully acquired.

Mr. A. must be spoken of as Mr. Court Councillor A., Doctor B. as Mr. Privy Councillor Professor Doctor B. And wives must share their husbands' privileges, and be addressed as Mrs. Court Councillor A. and Mrs. Privy Councillor B.

The English "reverend" has no equivalent, but the clergyman becomes Mr. Pastor So and So. Mr. Brown, the editor, is addressed as Mr. Editor Brown, and on the same principle we have Mr. Stamp-Collector Jones, Mr. Postmaster Robinson, Mr. Road-Inspector Smith, and so on.

You address a lady whom you know but slightly as "Gracious lady" or "Gracious mademoiselle," as she may be married or single. "Obedient servant" is still a gallant greeting where the acquaintance is slight or where a lady is saluted; and it should be remembered that to salute first in public is not the prerogative of the German lady.

The superficial side of courtesy as seen in letter-writing is simply allowed to run riot. Here is the beginning of an official letter which a person of educated rank may any day receive, to his



The Law

Of health has no uniformed guardians of its peace. If it had there would be arrests innumerable in every restaurant every day of the year. Both in the quantity and quality of the food they eat and in the manner of its consumption men and women sin each day against the laws of health. Those who will not heed Nature's warnings cannot escape her punishments, and dyspepsia or stomach "trouble" is the invariable penalty of careless eating.

There is no other medicine for disease of the stomach and allied organs of digestion and nutrition which can compare with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures these diseases perfectly and permanently, and enables the building up of the whole body into vigorous health.

"I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for stomach trouble," writes Clarence Carnes, Esq., of Taylorstown, Loudoun Co., Va. "It did me so much good that I didn't take any more. I can eat most anything now. I am so well pleased with it I hardly know how to thank you for your kind information. I tried a whole lot of things before I wrote to you. There was a gentleman told me about your medicine, how it had cured his wife. I thought I would try a bottle of it. I am glad I did, for I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

His eyes went savagely to her face, and a frown came as he looked at her. His mother was right, and she was ill; yet ill as she was, she was as cold and silent as she had ever been. The dignity of her bearing, the sense of the chasm that gaped between them, made his anger and vexed pride rise higher.

"Get on your hat; I am going out," he said sharply.

Katharine paused for a moment, then her astonishment found a vent even in her dazed condition.

"Going out?" she repeated vaguely.

Gordon threw off the silken coverlet that lay across his legs, and pushed himself into a sitting position on the couch.

"Yes, going out. The doctors would keep me boxed up here for always. Ring the bell—I shall go for a drive. What is the use of keeping servants and horses if you do not use them? I am sick to death of lying here; they shall carry me down and put me in the barouche, or whatever they call the thing. I want you there, too; and for Heaven's sake put some different expression into your face! You look sulky enough to make a man cut his throat."

"I—I am ill," Katharine murmured feebly. "I cannot go. I cannot!"

Another curse escaped Gordon Smythe's lips.

"Ill!" he said, with a short laugh; "ill, indeed! I have another word for it. You are languishing, longing for your lover—the lover who will never be yours. Ill! Well, the sooner you cure yourself the better you will please me."

Katharine turned away, groping for the door like a blind person. Any one with a scrap of heart must have felt an agony of pity sweep over them as they watched her go. Not so Gordon Smythe. He was thoroughly without a heart—bad to the core, pity was unknown to him.

When Katharine's maid went up to her mistress's room half an hour later, she found the girl in a dead faint on the floor, from which she was roused with much difficulty.

"Say nothing of this," Katharine commanded as soon as she could speak, while the woman fanned her, and put scent on her white face. "I am only tired."

The maid, an old domestic of the house, was silent, but she thought the more. She had just come from watching the operation of carrying Mr. Smythe from his room to the carriage, and something like the real solution of Katharine's strange, cold manner had been discovered by such of the household who, like herself, had been present at the scene. Rarely had such a fearful exhibition of temper, such horrible language, desecrated the venerable halls of Charlton Abbey; and yet the man who thus debased himself to the brute level was even then scarcely out of the grasp of death and danger.

"You must not fret, ma'am," the woman said, offering what she imagined might be sympathy under the circumstances. "Mr. Smythe was put in most comfortable; old Thomas is driving him, and he has got his valet, too. I don't think he can come to any harm; at least, we will hope not. It was a strange fancy, but then invalids do have strange fancies, you know, and they often know what is good for them, ma'am."

How long Katharine lay in silence and quiet she never knew; it might have been moments, it might have been hours; but all of a sudden she was aroused from the dim, misty dream into which she had fallen. The door was flung violently open, and then some one was clutching at her knees, wildly, madly crying to her at the same time, in tones of frenzy:

"Oh, Katharine! My boy! my boy! my son Gordon!"

Dazed and almost stunned, Katharine staggered back, and Lucy Smythe dragged herself to her feet.

"Come!" she almost screamed. "Come; we may not be too late! They exaggerate, don't they? Bad news is not always true! Come, let us go to him at once—at once! Katharine, why do you hesitate? Are you his wife, and yet you do not rush toward him now?"

"What has happened?" asked Katharine, mechanically.

The horses had taken fright at a traction engine, the carriage had been overturned, and Gordon Smythe, insensible and horribly mutilated, had been carried into the Brexley Asylum, which happened to be close at hand. The old coachman had been killed on the spot, and the valet was terribly shaken and frightened, but he had nevertheless ridden back with all the speed he could to tell the news at Charlton Abbey. It transpired that the coachman had entreated Gordon to permit him to turn back half an hour before the accident happened, but with strong and strange perversity Gordon had refused; he seemed possessed with a desire to drive past the Brexley Asylum, and nothing would move him from this. The result of his obstinacy was death and destruction to himself and others.

The village doctor sent word that if his mother and wife would see Gordon Smythe alive once more, they must drive to Brexley as soon as the news reached them.

Katharine heard all this without a murmur; she was trembling in every limb with the sense of horror that had fallen on her; but even ill, worn as she was, she once again sacrificed herself to think of another. Turning to the poor mother, she flung her arms about her neck and drew her for one moment into a tender embrace.

"Be brave, dear; be brave!" she whispered, calling up all her strength and courage to give comfort to this tortured heart. "All may not be so bad. Come, we will drive over to him at once. Lean on me, dear, and keep up your heart. We will soon be there!"

"Oh, Katharine! My boy! my boy! my darling boy!"

Lucy Smythe clung to the girl's slender form, weeping bitterly, wildly; she was scarcely sane at this moment.

Katharine gave her orders as quietly as she could, and then, with her arm still round the poor woman, drew her downstairs, the maid following after.

Only one instant did the girl falter, and then the maid interposed hurriedly:

"Do you think you are fit to go, ma'am; you are so ill."

But Katharine was firm.

"My place is with her," she said, in her faint, low tones; "but you can come, if you will, also, Marshall."

The long, dreary drive was accomplished at last.

The doctor met them in the entrance.

Without a word Lucy Smythe looked up into his face, then with a groan she pushed past him, and ran into the room where they told her her son was.

"You must be prepared for the worst, Mrs. Smythe," the physician said to Katharine. "Your husband cannot possibly survive his injuries! In his condition it was simply madness to have attempted any exertion, much less take this long drive. I am convinced, even if the accident had not happened, the consequences of such exertion must, in any case, have been dangerous, perhaps fatal!"

Katharine grasped the door with her right hand. She had faced the fact of Gordon's death often during the first days of his accident, but now the awful reality struck her. He was going out of this world, going without having cleansed his soul from the terrible—the ghastly—sin that had laid on it during the past months. She had no feeling of respect for the coward who had so cruelly persecuted her, but the thought of this death—unshriven, unconfessed—was to her most awful.

"Let—let me go to him!" she gasped, urged by the tumult of feeling to rush to him, and on her knees implore him to repent, and ask pardon before it was too late.

"He has asked for you many times. He seems to have something on his mind. I can't quite understand what it is he wants, but he keeps asking for some person who he says lives here in the asylum; perhaps you can help us, Mrs. Smythe."

Katharine made no answer, but followed the doctor with slow, faltering steps, into the chamber of death. With dim eyes she saw the heap on the floor, beside which Lucy Smythe was crouching, clinging to it with trembling hands. She saw some one in a nurse's garb, and another man's figure, who was standing gazing vacantly at the scene, with wide, staring blue eyes, from under a shock of white hair.

The nurse moved up to the doctor swiftly.

"We have discovered who it is he wanted to see here," she said in low tones to the doctor. "I sent upstairs for some lint, and they gave it to Number Thirteen to bring down and directly Mr. Smythe saw him he gave a scream, and exclaiming: 'You have come! you have come!' fell back in this swoon, from which I cannot rouse him, sir."

The doctor knelt down by the dying man, and Katharine, leaning back against the wall, watched him with distended eyes, feeling her heart grow colder and colder within her.

Suddenly Gordon moved, his eyelids opened, and he saw Katharine. There was a scintillation of expression in them which the doctor translated.

"I think he wants you, Mrs. Smythe."

The girl drew near and bent low over the prostrate form of her husband and her foe.

The pallid lips, opened and a whisper came from them:

"Pray for—forgive—Katti—I—I—am sorry! Be—be good—to—him!"

Katharine's eyes were full of tears.

"Yes—yes, I forgive you, Gordon," she answered, quickly; "do not think of me—think of yourself, dear. Will you not ask God to pardon you? Oh, Gordon! Gordon! before it is too late, will you not do this?"

Detroit Doctor Says the World Will Be a Lunatic Asylum

Detroit, Jan. 29—Dr. R. B. Hoyt, a former member of the Board of Education, has gathered statistics which convince him that at the present rate of increase of insanity the population of this country will be mad in two hundred and sixty years.

"Within the last fifty years," he said," the number of insane persons and fools has increased 300 per cent. That means if the increase continues that the entire population of this country within 260 years will have gone insane or become foolish."

A LIFE-GIVING MEDICINE

At this time when thousands are suffering from the common ills of life, we can honestly recommend the use of Paine's Celery Compound. This wonderful medicine is the prescription of one of the most eminent physicians that ever lived. It never fails to restore the sick to health. Thousands of testimonials prove that Paine's Celery Compound permanently cures rheumatism and neuralgia. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

THE

Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 5,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No	Height.	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11 50
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.0[illegible]
2	34 in.	10½ in.	14.00
3	27½ in.	12 in.	19.50
4	41 in.	16 in.	[illegible]

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 25 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

The new constitutional treatment not only eradicates the disease, but renews the exhausted strength.

A great many people suffering from Cancers and Tumors, find their strength rapidly slipping away. These horrible diseases undermine the health and sap the vitality.

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

For full particulars write Messrs. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., enclosing three stamps. All correspondence entirely confidential.

A Canadian Product That Canadians Are Proud Of

Malt Breakfast Food

Healthful and Strengthening is The Popular Breakfast Cereal

The manufacturers of Malt Breakfast Food have fairly captured our people with their delicious breakfast cereal. Men, women and children, after one trial, desire it every morning. No other breakfast food sold by grocers has such a constant and steady demand from all classes of society.

Malt Breakfast Food excels all other foods in richness of flavor, satisfying qualities and ease of digestion. These rare virtues have made Malt Breakfast Food popular in thousands of homes. Canadians are proud of this health-giving food; product manufactured in their midst, and our physicians are cheerfully endorsing it. No other Food manufactured can compare with Malt Breakfast Food for sustaining strength, and for producing bodily and mental vigor and energy. Grocers in all cities and towns sell it.

THE PURCHASE MONEY PAID

Cheque for $330,000 Given to Waterworks Co., Yesterday

The town took possession of the Waterworks yesterday afternoon, a cheque for $330,000 being handed to the Company. Mayor Deane, Ald. Roger, Town Solicitor E. H. D. Hall and Treasurer Brownscombe acted on behalf of the town, and Messrs. R. A. Morrow, G. W. Hatton and R. B. McKee represented the Company.

Peterborough Juniors Lose

The juniors of Cobourg and the Peterborough Colts played a rather exciting game of hockey in the Charlotte street rink last night. The game was fast and furious at times, and it was with some difficulty that the referee, Mr. Ernie Wasson, kept track of the men. The Cobourg boys are very good skaters and much faster than the Colts. The score at half time stood 2-1 and at full time 7-3 in favor of Cobourg.

NAVIGATION NOTES

Mr. Hickey, boat builder and contractor, has started to overhaul the steamer City of Peterborough, and put her in first-class shape for navigation in the spring.

Mr. Buck, of Norwood, has awarded Mr. Hickey the contract of building his new steam yacht. The boat will have a length of 47 feet and 8 foot beam.

The Peterborough Canoe Co. are building two new yachts in the old Bridge Works building.

EATING IN HAVANA

Yankees Club Together

In Havanna it is the custom to serve only bread and coffee for breakfast. A little colony of Americans that felt they could not do their work until noon on this kind of a diet clubbed together and began importing Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.

One of them writing about the matter, says, "The modern cooking range had never been known in Cuba until the American occupation, and even now they are scarce, so that a ready cooked food like Grape-Nuts recommends itself; then the Yankees were accustomed to the food and felt they could hardly get along without it. They began buying, in five case lots and one by one the larger grocery stores began keeping Grape-Nuts in stock so the business spread until now great quantities of Grape-Nuts are used in Cuba, and is not only used by the Americans but the other inhabitants as well."

This is an illustration of the way the famous food has pushed its way into all parts of the world. Wherever English speaking people go they demand Grape-Nuts. They can be found in South Africa, Egypt, India, China, Japan, Australia and South America.

Many Americans speak of the homelike feeling it gives them to see the numberless busses in the streets of London decorated, with great blue signs with the word "Grape-Nuts," done in yellow letters, and all over England the great, purveying shops distribute Grape-Nuts.

English roast beef has largely given way to American roast beef, and the old-fashioned English breakfast of bacon and potatoes is now supplemented with Grape-Nuts and cream. The change was made for a reason. It has been discovered that almost magical power rests within the little granules, and this power is set free in the body that makes use of the famous food.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL AT THEIR JANUARY SESSION

The Beet Sugar Question — The Hiawatha School — The Radial Railway — Other Business

Below is given a further report of the proceeding of the County Council now in regular session.

BEET SUGAR QUESTION.

On Wednesday Messrs. Adam Hall, Geo. E. Elliott, Wm. Collins and others interviewed the County Council regarding the establishment of a sugar beet factory in town and for the purpose of seeking assistance to secure the acreage asked for by manufacturers. The committee spent some time before the council and explained the advantages a sugar factory would be to the county. After considerable discussion the matter was referred to the Finance Committee with power to act.

HIAWATHA SCHOOL.

is in very bad condition, and a dispute has arisen as to the advisability of building a new school. This section is very small and while some of the ratepayers would like to have a new school house others are very much opposed to it. Messrs. Thos Thompson, a trustee of the school and James Kiley and ex-trustee appeared before the council regarding the matter. They reported that the Public School Inspector had withheld the government grant and that he had not visited the school for more than a year. Mr. Kiley said the school was all right, warm, clean and comfortable and plenty large enough for the number of scholars in the section. The section was small and to build another school they would have difficulty in securing a suitable site for the building. Several others were present and presented their views and after considerable discussion some of the ratepayers said if a new school could not be built they would ask permission to withdraw from the section.

On motion of Messrs. Casement and Pearse, the matter was referred to the School Committee, and Mr. Brown requested to make a report.

INVITATION ACCEPTED

Messrs. W. H. Meldrum and R. R. Hall appeared before the council and on behalf of the Otonabee Power Company invited them to attend the laying of the corner stone at the Otonabee Power Co's power house in the afternoon. The invitation was accepted.

THE RADIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared before the council and asked them to memorialize the Legislature, asking that incorporation be granted to the Peterborough Railway Co. without demanding the usual notice, in order to get the incorporation through at the present session.

Mr. Peck stated that he had looked into the bill and was sure it would not prejudice or effect the interests of the county or of the municipalities.

This memorial was only to save the time it would take to advertise the bill. Council adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Council held a session in the afternoon. All members present except Messrs. Fitzgerald and Costello who were appointed a committee to represent the council at the laying of the keystone at the Otonabee Power Co's power house.

ROAD TO CORDOVA.

Messrs. Sexsmith, Curtis and Knox appeared before the council and asked that a road be built between Havelock and the Cordova Mines. The importance of the mines and the development of the works were touched on and the grant claimed.

The matter was referred to the Road and Bridge Committee.

RAILWAY CATTLE GUARDS

During the past few years a number of horses and cattle were killed on the railways and a deputation waited on the council to ask for assistance in compelling the railway companies to provide a cattle guard at the crossings that would be of some use. The ones now being used were of no use as cattle could walk over them at any time.

On motion it was decided to call the attention of the government to the fact that the cattle guards were not effective, and that the warden be authorized to appoint a deputation to accompany any general deputation that may go to interview the Government on the subject.

The motion was carried.

THE CHILDREN'S AID.

Messrs. McBain, Dennistoun and Cochran appeared before the council and explained the results of the work done by the Children's Aid Society and asked for a grant from the Council.

Referred to the Finance Committee.

COUNTY VALUATION.

On motion the report of Messrs. Hawthorne and Edmison, County Valuators was presented. The motion was adopted.

Below is given a summary of the report by which it will be noticed that in some cases the valuation has increased and in others decreased. The largest increase is in Havelock, being $88,848, while in Douro the largest decrease is noticed amounting to $148,385.

Below is given a statement comparing the new and the old equalized values:

	New Eq. Value.	Old Eq. Value
Ashburnham	$ 443,764	$ 370,273
Havelock	146,736	67,888
Harvey	210,774	191,061
N. Monaghan	667,210	654,152
Douro	790,504	888,899

A Petition and Acceptance

To John E. Belcher, Esq., C. E.

Sir,—We earnestly request you to allow yourself to stand for election as one of the Water Commissioners for the town.

We feel that it would be of decided advantage to have one of the Commissioners an engineer, and especially with our system from its beginning.

(Signed)

Wm. Snowden, Thos. P. Attrill, H Long, R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough; A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D.; H. LeBrun, W. Taylor, T. E. Boddy, President A. F. of L.; R. J. Munro, R. F. McGregger, W. Henry, and others.

To His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Wm. Henry, President A. F. of L.; H. Long, Wm. Snowden, W. Taylor, R. F. McGregger, R. J. Munro, H. LeBrun, T. E. Boddy, T. P. Attrill, A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D., and to my nominator and seconder, James Montgomery and R. Sheehy, and others:

Gentlemen,—In view of your request I will accept nomination for the Waterworks Commissionership, and, as you suggest, will do what I can, if elected, in the way of placing my knowledge of the system and its workings at the service of the town.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN E. BELCHER.

You Can Dress Well and Stylishly at Small Cost

Any woman or intelligent girl by using the tested and popular Diamond Dyes can re-color any faded and dingy garment, making it look as good as new. The most fashionable colors are found in the Diamond Dyes, colors that never fade or crock. Every family making use of the Diamond Dyes can save quite a large sum of money each year, and all are neatly and well dressed. To achieve such happy and desired results, Diamond Dyes must be used; the common dyes destroy your materials.

The demand for the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns is steadily on the increase. Women and girls are deeply interested in the work of mat and rug making. If your dealer cannot furnish you with sheets of designs for showing the newest things in floor ornaments, send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., and you will get them by mail.

TO THE ELECTORS

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Having been requested by a large number of ratepayers to offer myself as a candidate for the position of Water Commissioner for the Town of Peterborough, I have consented to do so, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence. If elected my policy will be to treat rich and poor alike, and respect the general welfare of the town in the careful and economical management of the water works.

MR. BRADBURN WITHDRAWS

To the Ratepayers of the Town of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Upon returning home last night after an absence from town since Monday morning last, I found my name had been placed in nomination as a candidate for Water Commissioner. As a citizen largely interested in property in the town, I am vitally concerned in the election of these commissioners, and feel the importance of good men of business experience being selected, and I would willingly serve the citizens if they so desired. But as I have been out of town and the campaign has been well inaugurated in my absence, I feel that I would not be doing justice to myself or my friends if I remained in the field under the circumstances. Besides in the candidates nominated there are gentlemen of ability and capacity to fill the position, and give the town excellent service. Therefore, I desire to take this earliest opportunity to withdraw my name as a candidate, and while my name will appear on the ballot paper, I ask all my friends and the citizens generally to refrain from voting for me.

Thanking my proposer and seconder, and the many who have thus so generously offered me their support, I remain,

Yours Respectfully,
T. E. BRADBURN.

CARD TO ELECTORS

To the Electors of the Town of Peterborough;

Ladies and Gentlemen, —Having been urged by the numerous friends of Municipal Ownership to allow myself to be placed in nomination for one of the Water Commissioners, I have consented to be a Candidate. The grounds upon which they urge my election are, amongst others, that I am really the father of Municipal Ownership in this town, and have consistently fought the battle therefor throughout, and that at its incipient or experimental stage, such a one should be given the first opportunity to prove the feasibility of the scheme. They further urge that my record has been free from all cliques and other corrupting influences, and that I will stand up fearlessly for the rights of all alike, without fear, favour or affection. It is needless to say that if elected I will do my utmost to carry out the most sanguine expectations of my numerous friends and water consumers generally. Respectfully asking you one and all for your vote and influence, I am, ladies and gentlemen,

Your Obedient Servant,

GEORGE BALL.

To the Ratepayers
—OF—
the Town of Peterboro.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been nominated for the position of Water Commissioner for the ensuing term I have consented to place my services at the disposal of the town if it is the wish of the ratepayers that I should do so.

As a director of the Peterboro Water Company during the past six years I may claim to have a pretty thorough knowledge of the system and methods which have placed the Company on a sound financial basis. The experience thus gained will, I believe, enable me to discharge the duties of the office to your satisfaction. It is not my intention to canvass for votes, but if elected will cheerfully devote my best energies to making the system serve the best interests of the municipality. Yours truly,

W. H. HILL

REV E G SMITH PASTOR
M. J. ROSSMAN ELDER

First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, Ga., and Its Pastor and Elder.

THE day was when men of prominence hesitated to give their testimonials to proprietary medicines for publication. This remains true today of most proprietary medicines. But Peruna has become so justly famous, its merits are known to so many people of high and low stations, that no one hesitates to see his name in print recommending Peruna.

A dignified representative of the Presbyterian church in the person of Rev. E. G. Smith does not hesitate to state publicly that he has used Peruna in his family and found it cured when other remedies failed.

Rev. E. G. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Greensboro, Ga., writes:

"Having used Peruna in my family for some time it gives me pleasure to testify to its true worth. My little boy seven years of age had been suffering for some time with catarrh of the lower bowels. Other remedies had failed, but after taking two bottles of Peruna the trouble almost entirely disappeared. For this special malady I consider it well nigh a specific. As a tonic for weak and worn out people it has few or no equals."—REV. E. G. SMITH.

Mr. M. J. Rossman, a prominent merchant of Greensboro, Ga., and an elder in the Presbyterian church of that place, writes:

"For a long time I was troubled with catarrh of the kidneys and tried many remedies, all of which gave me no relief. Peruna was recommended to me by several friends, and after using a few bottles I am pleased to say that the long looked for relief was found and I am now enjoying better health than I have for years. It is certainly a grand medicine."—M. J. Rossman.

Hon. S. D. McEnery, United States Senator from Louisiana, says the following in regard to Peruna:

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen—Peruna is an excellent tonic. I have used it sufficiently to say that I believe it to be all that you claim for it.—S. D. McEnery.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of the Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada.

"The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores, and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

A BRIGHT FUTURE FOR SOUTH AFRICA

A Hopeful Picture Drawn by an Officer of the Second Contingent

THE DUTCH ELEMENT SOON TO DISAPPEAR

Lord Milner Says that the Rand Will Have Five Million Population in Less Than Ten Years

Ottawa, Feb. 3—Lieut. Morrison, who went to the war with the second contingent, says in the Ottawa Citizen, in speaking of Lord Milner's statement that the Rand would be the home of five millions of people in five years:

Lord Milner is a very conservative gentleman and if he actually committed himself to such a statement it must be within the range of probabilities. The Transvaal has been a source of surprises and will continue to be. In view of its natural resources, its excellent climate, its fertility, its coal iron and gold deposits, there is no reason why the new colonies in South Africa should not one day become another United States. The clearing away of the Boer approximates the pushing out of the Indian nations in America. The Boer neither developed the country himself nor allowed others to develop it any more than he could help, and the ultimate crisis arrived when the advance of civilization and commerce would not be denied. When the country is pacified there is no reason why its settlement should not proceed with phenomenal rapidity.

We have always entertained the idea that one of the most potent factors in putting an end to the war would be to reopen the country to settlement and commerce. It would go forward with such a boom that the lingering remnant of the Boers would find themselves ignored, and fall into the position of roving desperadoes which is their real relation to the scheme of things. The British Government has been gradually moving on those lines, and has no doubt been wise in not being in too much hurry about it as up to a certain stage of the war the danger exists of permission to enter the country being taken advantage of by an advance guard of frothy adventurers intent on reinforcing the Boer commandoes. That trade and commerce is being gradually re-established is apparent from the increased returns of the output of gold and the gradual resumption of a confident tone in the quotations on the stock market.

The probability of a great influx of population as the war closes, however, makes unnecessary any anxiety as to the future of the Boer in his relation of British sovereignty in the Transvaal. In a comparatively short time after the war ends the Boer will be such a minor factor in the population as to remove him beyond the possibility of affording a racial problem. The Boer will be swamped, hopelessly outnumbered and probably entirely assimilated in one generation. As a "race problem" he will be a less considerable factor than a few shiploads of alien immigrants. Nearly 25,000 of them are already being prepared for the assimilation process in the prison camps of Cape Colony, St. Helena, Bermuda and Ceylon.

WHERE TO VOTE TO-DAY

Polling Places for the Recording of the Votes

To-day the ratepayers of the town will elect for the first time, two water commissioners, who, with Mayor Dunne, will have the management of the waterworks of the town. All ratepayers who were entitled to vote at the last municipal elections are entitled to vote and should attend the polls early, and record their votes for the men best suited for the position. The polling places and deputy returning officers are as follows:

WARD NO. ONE.

Polling Division No. One—At M. H. Halpin's store, corner George and Perry streets. A. Williams, Deputy Returning Officer.

Polling Division No. Two—At Lewis Spry's shop, Stewart street. Joseph Lundy, Deputy Returning Officer.

WARD NO. TWO.

Polling Division No. Three—At the Town Council Chamber. Chas. Cameron, Deputy Returning Officer.

Polling Division No. Four—At Greene Bros. store, corner Charlotte and Dounie streets. J. Mendel Green, Deputy Returning Officer.

Polling Division No. Five—At J. & W. Metheral's shop, Aylmer street. Joseph R. Metheral, Deputy Returning Officer.

Polling Division No. Six—At Wm. McCall's shop, McDonnell street. John Irwin, Deputy Returning Officer.

WARD NO. FOUR.

Polling Division No. Seven—At William Lee's shop, Smith street. Geo. W. Powell, Deputy Returning Officer.

"IT IS A LIE!" SAYS PRINCE

Oukhtomsky Denies That Russia Stirred Up Boxer Trouble.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 2—"It is a pure humbug and lie from beginning to end, as far as I know, and certainly as far as it concerns myself," was Prince Oukhtomsky's emphatic comment upon the publication of an English newspaper of alleged secret documents indicating that Russia instigated the Boxer movement in China for political purposes. In the article free use was made of the names of Prince Oukhtomsky and Mr. von Grote, who has been engaged in gold mining in Mongolia with the aid of St. Petersburg capital and American miners and mining machinery.

"Furthermore, the unpreparedness of Russia and the losses she sustained do not indicate that the Russian Government was better informed about the Boxers than other powers."

MAN HAD SEVERAL FITS

And Was Taken to a Hospital Where He Was Refused Admission

The ambulance was called on Saturday afternoon to one of the hotels in town, for the purpose of removing a man who was in a fit, to one of the hospitals. After some difficulty the man was placed in the ambulance and taken to a hospital, where he was refused admission. He was later taken to the police station, where he is at present.

The man says he deserted from the American army some months ago, and for the past few weeks he had been working for a farmer near Omemee. He had been in town on Saturday, and it is thought, had been drinking heavily.

BIDDLE BOYS TAKEN IN A DESPERATE FIGHT.

One of Them Fatally Shot, the Other Wounded—Mrs. Soffel Shoots Herself—She Confesses Her Guilt

Butler, Pa., Feb 1.—The Biddle brothers, who escaped from the Allegheny County Jail in Pittsburg Thursday morning, and Mrs. Kate Dietrich Soffel, wife of Warden Peter Soffel, were [illegible] about nine miles west of here, after a bloody conflict, by Detectives Charles McGovern, John Roach, and Albert H. Swinehart.

Ed. Biddle is lying in the Butler County Jail in a dying condition; Jack Biddle, his brother, is in the adjoining cell, riddled with buckshot. His condition is not considered serious. Mrs. Soffel, it is said, shot herself during the battle, placing a revolver to her left breast, and drove the ball clear to the back, but her condition is not critical.

The detectives are uninjured. There were about 30 shots exchanged in the fray. The capture was completed about one and a half miles from Prospect.

STOLE HORSE AND SLEIGH.

The Biddle brothers, who were under sentence of death for the murder of Thomas D. Kahney, escaped from the Allegheny County Jail in Pitsburg yesterday morning, after sawing their way through the bars of their cell, throwing one guard over the railing to the stone floor, 16 feet below, and shooting down another. Mrs. Soffel, the wife of the warden, had furnished them the saws and the revolvers, and the men escaped through the warden's house, which adjoins the jail. Mrs. Soffel left with the Biddles.

The three remained hidden in Allegheny, and left in the evening, walking the road towards Butler. Late at night they stole a horse and sleigh from a farmer. The fact that a sleigh had been stolen was telephoned to Pittsburg, and the officers were thus put on their track.

Driving along the road the officers got information at several places that the trio had driven on ahead, and finally near Mount Chestnut saw them returning. Later it developed that the fugitives' horse had become jaded, and the men turned about, hoping to give battle successfully and then gain a start.

PREPARED FOR A FIGHT.

Seeing them approaching Detectives McGovern and Roach got their Winchesters ready, and Swinehart drew a revolver. McGovern recognized the Biddles when the sleighs were 100 yards apart, and at the same moment the fugitives saw that they were cornered, and prepared for battle.

The detectives sprang from their sleigh and called on the Biddles to surrender. Ed Biddle rose in his seat, and taking careful and deliberate aim with his shotgun, fired at McGovern, but the load scattered harmlessly on the road. McGovern and Roach fired at the men, who sat together, while Mrs. Soffel sat on one side. Jack Biddle sprang to an upright position and fired three shots at the detectives, but Swinehart, steadying himself, and aiming, fired a bullet from his revolver that disabled Jack's arm. McGovern rushed forward and literally shot the two men out of the sleigh. Ed Biddle stumbled out on the road, and Jack, who had been trying to protect the woman by interposing his body between her and the rain of bullets, fell on top of his brother. Their weapons fell alongside of them.

Then Mrs. Soffel shot herself, and the horse ran away, but was caught.

The detectives approached the wounded men cautiously. Roach saw Ed Biddle reach into his coat pocket, where a revolver was afterwards found, and shot him again. Then Detective McGovern ran up within five feet and fired his Winchester at the brothers. The Biddles yielded, and the detectives, handcuffing them and shackling their legs, brought them to Butler. Mrs. Soffel was made as comfortable as possible in the sleigh, and was brought to the hospital here. The shotgun which Jack Biddle had was stolen from the hotel at which the party had eaten dinner.

BIDDLE DENIES CRIME

When the wounded Biddle boys were brought into the jail it was thought Ed was dying. He asked for a priest, and Father Welsh was summoned. Before talking privately to the priest Ed spoke to the detectives. "I have been accused of a great many crimes," he said, "I admit that I could have committed many, when the opportunities presented themselves. I want to say now that I did not kill Detective Fitzgerald, nor did I shoot Thomas Kahney, nor was my brother implicated in the affair. Mrs. Soffel aided us in getting out of the county jail. Had it not been for her we would have made our escape from our pursuers to-day. She gave up everything for us, and I was bound to back her. I did not shoot her."

"Oh, Father," he exclaimed to the priest, "bless me and tell me that my sins are forgiven. Although I have been pictured to you as a desperate man," Biddle continued," I still have some heart and gratitude for the woman who helped us escape. She merely did it out of good feeling for us. I persuaded her to do it. I told her I was guiltless of the crime for which I was about to be executed, and she was impressed, and yielded to my suggestion. I planned it all."

MRS. SOFFEL'S CONFESSION

Mrs. Soffel confessed that she aided the Biddles to escape, doing it because she was persuaded they were innocent.

Peter K. Soffel, warden of the Allegheny County jail, resigned his position yesterday, and the resignation was accepted by the Prison Board. Soffel was told last night his wife had been captured. "I am glad of it," he said, "and I hope she will be punished for her crime in aiding the murderers to escape."

Before resigning Soffel said: "In one way I would like to stay here—if the whole three are captured alive. I would like to see them brought back here and placed under my care. My care, I say. Oh, but I wish that would happen! I tell you the revenge that I would take would be sweet! Well, it is all over. My life is ruined.

"Perhaps I have not done right, but I tried to do my duty to the best of my ability. The world will find fault with me now, but I cannot help it. If this had not happened, and if the Biddles had been hanged on February 26th and 27th, the world would have lauded my for permitting my wife to visit them in their last miserable hours, and try to cheer them and prepare their minds for the change that was coming to them. But, of course, now everything is different, and I am censured."

A CORRECTION MADE

Mrs. David Thornton's Expenses in Connection with the Quarantine of Her House Were Heavy

Mrs. D. Thornton wishes to correct a statement which appeared in the papers a short time ago as to the renumeration she received in connection with the quarantine of her residence at the time it was infected with smallpox. In justice to Mrs. Thornton, it can be said she did not receive $42, but only $21 for board for three men who were quarantined at her house. The board bill amounted to $18, leaving her but $3 for quarantine expenses which, Mrs. Thornton states, amounted to over $50. Mr. Thornton received $21, half the usual amount for guarding the house during quarantine.

MANY CRIMES OF BOER COMMANDERS

The Case of Scheepers as Seen By An American Journal

A JUSTLY CONDEMNED TRAITOR

The United States Congress Are Being Asked to Condemn Great Britain.

Detroit, Feb. 3—The Detroit News is by no means a friendly sheet to England. From the commencement of the war in South Africa it has leaned strongly to the side of the Boers, and there is no mistaking in which direction its sympathies lie. Still it preserves a spirit of fair play and occasionally gives evidence of rising above its ordinary prejudices. For example in reference to the proposed intervention of the United States with Scheeper's case (the matter it will be remembered was brought up in Congress while the notorious Boer leader under sentence of death, was shot) our Detroit contemporary says:

"A plea of mercy is always justifiable and commendable. There is less warrant for making an argument against the system of justice in vogue in a neighboring government. Just at present a resolution is before Congress suggesting that the United States interfere in the execution of Commandent Sheepers, who is sentenced to be shot on Saturday next. The resolution suggests that he be treated according to the usage of warfare, which implies an accusation that the British army has departed from that usage.

"Full details of the Scheepers case are not at hand, but the general statement is that he killed a British soldier with his own hand after the latter had surrendered. His sentence to death indicates that he has had a fair trial. Under such circumstances it is quite proper to plead for mercy in his behalf, for it is always justifiable, but it is highly improper to suggest to the British government that it has unjustly condemned a man."

Since the foregoing was written the particulars of Scheepers' crime have been laid before the British parliament. His offence was a serious one. He was proven guilty of murdering 6 natives and flogging a British soldier. Under the circumstances nothing short of his own death would have satisfied the ends of justice. Very wisely the United States government refused to intervene in the matter.

ADJOURNED ON SATURDAY

County Council have Completed Their Work—No Grant to Beet Sugar Factory

The County Council were engaged in Committee work nearly all the time on Friday. They went into session at 2 o'clock with the following members present,—Warden Eastland, in the chair, Messrs. Crowe, Costello, Fitzgerald, Anderson, Peck Jeffs and Pearce in attendance.

Two or three deputations were heard. The Reeve of Belmont addressed the Council respecting the maintenance of the bridge at Round Lake.

Mr. R. H. Leary, President of the Peterborough Poultry Association appeared before the council and asked for a grant of $15.00 to help them out financially. The Town Council had given the Association a similar amount.

COMMITTEE ON SCHOOLS

The Committee on Schools, through its chairman, Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald, reported as follows:

The Committee on Schools beg leave to report recommending as follows:

1. Inasmuch as this council has no jurisdiction in the matter your Committee recommend that no action be taken upon the application of the trustees of School Section No. 11, Otonabee, requesting this council to instruct the County School Inspector as to his duties with respect to the Government grant, which has been withheld on his recommendation. Your committee would also recommend that all parties interested meet together and amicably adjust their difficulties.

2. That the application of the Peterborough Teachers' Association be granted asking the council to give permission to the association to meet on Thursday and Friday, instead of as heretofore.

3. In reply to the communication from the trustees of School Section No. 4, Otonabee, asking this council to make a grant towards the continuation class equivalent to the Legislative grant thereto, your committee recommend that the statutory requirements in that respect be conformed to not only with this school but also with the Havelock and Lakefield schools.

4. That the report of the Public School Inspector be received.

5. Your committee recommend that the County Treasurer pay for this county's share of the maintenance of the Norwood High School for the year 1901, the sum of $608.54, and also to the Model School the sum of $150.00.

6. Your Committee recommend that the County School Inspector and Messrs. J. Davidson, Norwood; William A. Evans, Lakefield; and Duncan Walker, Peterborough, be the County Board of Examiners to examine teachers and give certificates in accordance with the statute in that behalf.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

G. W. FITZGERALD,
Chairman.

County Council Chambers,
Peterborough, Jan. 31, 1902.
The report was adopted.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Dr. Jeffs, the chairman of the Printing Committee, reported as follows:

The Committee on Printing beg leave to report recommending as follows:

1. That the County Clerk be instructed to grant to the Norwood Register, Lakefield News and Havelock Standard, alternately, the printing of the lists of convictions and assessment schedules required to be published and printed at the same price as last year.

2. That in answer to the complaint of the Lakefield News as to the printing of the list of the returns of convictions during the past year, your committee wish to point out that such ground of complaint arose through the fact that the Lakefield News had previously received a larger share than they were entitled to.

3. That all other County printing be divided by the Clerk between the Peterborough Examiner, Peterborough Review and Peterborough Times, in as equal a manner as possible, save and except that the County Clerk shall apportion between the Lakefield News, Norwood Register and Havelock Standard, whatever printing of letter heads posters and other work he can conveniently give them.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DR. JEFFS,
Chairman.

County Council Chambers,
Peterborough, Jan. 31, 1902.
The report was adopted.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

London, Jan. 30

After observing how Britain has for a year or more patiently submitted to a deluge of continental calumny on account of the operations in South Africa, it is gratifying to find that one of the ablest and best-informed writers on the war, Dr. Conan Doyle, has published a clear and convincing statement of the British case. It is in the form of a pamphlet of 166 pages, entitled "The War in South Africa, its Cause and Conduct," and the author's intention is "to translate it into all European tongues and send a free copy to every deputy and every newspaper on the continent and in America," thus supplying an antidote to the venom of the liars and slanderers who have everywhere been endeavoring to poison public opinion against Britain.

In the opening chapters Dr. Doyle recapitulates the causes of the war, making it abundantly clear that the aggression came not from Britain but from the Boers. He analyses the grievances of the Uitlanders and shows that their seriousness reveals the ignorant and ridiculous nature of the contention that Britain fought to "grab" the gold mines and aid the capitalists, and by documents demonstrates that when Britain was thinking only of peace the Boers were discussing nothing but war. It would now be superfluous to repeat the argument regarding this phase of the question, but when later on the author deals with the charges of barbarism on the part of the British authorities and soldiers the evidence is worthy of some attention. He points out that "guerilla warfare cannot enjoy all its own advantages and feel none of its own defects. It is a two edged weapon, and the responsibility for the consequences rests upon the combatant who first employs it." One of these consequences is the merciful establishment of the concentration camps, about which so many vile and calumnious falsehoods have been circulated. A mass of evidence from trustworthy British, Dutch and Boer sources is produced, which shows incontestibly the falsity of the charges. For instance, Dr. Doyle shows that a photograph of an emaciated child, which was circulated in the United States and on the continent as a proof of the horrors of the concentration system, was taken by the British authorities on the occasion of the criminal trial of the mother for the ill-usage of the child. In like manner the charges that the Boer women have been ill-treated are shown to be a tissue of lies. A little of the evidence may be quoted. M. Constancon, formerly Swiss Consul at Pretoria, who has been constantly travelling over a large portion of the Transvaal, writes in part as follows:

"The women could not say enough in praise of the soldiers and their behavior towards their sex. Whenever a camp was established close to the homestead the officers have always had a picket placed round the house for the object of preventing all pilfering, and the women, rich and poor, have everywhere been treated as ladies. Why the Boer women were so unanimous in their praises is because they were far from expecting such treatment at the hands of the victors."

And the Austrian, Count Sternberg, says:

"I can only repeat that the English officers and the English soldiers have shown in this war that the profession of arms does not debase, but rather ennobles man."

Commandant Alberts, writing to Major Waiters at Boksburg, says: "I must express to yourself and the other officers at Boksburg my heartfelt thanks for the great kindness shown towards my wife," and another surrendered burgher states that "when Miss Hobhouse was here I frequently saw her priming herself or being primed. Some of our women would tell her anything for a dress or a pair of boots." From the charges against the British troops Dr. Doyle turns to the far graver charges made against the enemy, and produces long lists of murdered natives, of wounded soldiers shot in cold blood, and of treacherous misuses of the white flag. Regarding these he bitterly observes that "no protest seems to have been raised by the pro-Boer press in England and on the continent." In his conclusion he states that history has shown that it is the fights that are fought to an absolute finish that leave the last rancour, and he makes the following suggestion:—

"It has occurred to me that it would be a wise and practicable step to form a Boer reservation in the northern district of the Transvaal (Watersburg and Zoutpansburg). Guarantee them, as long as they remain peaceful under the British flag, complete protection from the invasion of the miner or the prospector. Let them live their own lives in their own way, with some simple form of home rule of their own. The irreconcillable men who could never rub shoulders with the British could find a home there, and the British colonies would be all the stronger for the placing in quarantine of those who might infect their neighbors with their own bitterness. Such a State could not be a serious source of danger, since we could control all the avenues by which arms could reach it. I am aware that the Watersberg and the Zoutpansberg are not very desirable places of residence, but the thing is voluntary, and no man would need to go there unless he wished. Without some such plan the Empire will have no safety-valve in South Africa."

THE UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN TRADE

A Movemnt on Foot Looking to a Reduction of the Tariff

CANADA WILL NOT RETALIATE

Unless Uncle Lowers His Tariff—Canada is Not in Need of the American Market.

Philadelphia, Feb. 3—The Public Ledger, in discussing the trade relations between Canada and the United States, says:

Within the last few weeks a petition, signed by business men in all parts of the country, has been presented to Congress asking that legislation be enacted that will promote reciprocal trade with Canada. Almost simultaneously the Dominion authorities have begun the consideration of measures which, if adopted, will possibly render futile any efforts the American business men have made. These measures have in view the raising of the tariff upon all articles imported from the United States. Two peculiar features of the situation are the statement that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, hitherto a low tariff man, is inclined to yield to alleged pressure and adopt a high tariff policy, and that Lord Pauncefote is in sympathy with the efforts of the American business men to revive the Joint High Commission, which Secretary Hay declares to be dead.

It is chiefly the manufacturing interests in Canada that are demanding a retaliatory tariff against this country. They have noted with much dissatisfaction that large numbers of Canadians have left home and obtained employment in the mills and factories of the United States. They claim that if the Dominion were placed under a protective tariff, factories would be built at home, the people would not have to go abroad to secure work and greater prosperity would result. It is further claimed that indifference to fostering trade relations with the United States at present arises from the fact that the Canadian farmers are disposing of all their products to Great Britain and South Africa, and so do not need another market. Unfortunately those who are urging this course do not appear to foresee or are indifferent to the certainty that if the Canadian Government adopts high tariff measures against the United States, the New England industries, which will be seriously hurt, will certainly appeal to Congress for the establishment of retaliatory duties. As Canada buys nearly twice as much from this country as she sells, the result would bear heavily on her if Congress were to accede to the appeal. As a matter of fact, a tariff war would be harmful to the interests of both countries, although inevitably Canada would suffer the more severely.

THE BOERS OBEYING COMMAND OF LEADERS

Commandant Erasmus, now a Prisoner, States That Boers are Helpless

GENERAL KITCHENER WILL MAKE BIG EFFORT

Correspondent Says That the Dutch Offer was Declined—More Money for Carrying on the War

London, Feb. 1.—Reuter's correspondent at Standerton has had an interview with Commandant Erasmus, who was recently captured. The correspondent states that he gathered from the words of Erasmus that the Boers now in the field realize that they have already lost their independence—they are fighting now simply because their leaders tell them to do so. Erasmus stated that one of the reasons why the Boers still remained in the field was the issue of a proclamation reproducing some conciliatory speeches delivered in England and suggesting an offer of certain terms. These speeches were quoted by the members of the Government as affording encouragement.

WAS THE OFFER DECLINED?

London, Feb. 1.—A despatch from The Hague says that England respectfully declined to allow Holland to send a Dutch commission to Africa to try to convince the Boers of the hopelessness of their cause.

WILL MAKE BIG EFFORT.

London, Feb. 1.—The Daily News' Ladysmith correspondent reports that preparations are indicative of a general effort to crush the Boer commandos in all parts of the country during the months of March and April. No less than twenty-three columns are now chasing General De Wet over a prescribed area of country and the capture or annihilation of his force is imminent. In the Northwestern part of the Transvaal the Boers are preparing for resistance. They are storing large quantities of grain and other supplies in Bushmanland, where military operations will be most difficult. The correspondent predicts that the troubles will continue in Bushmanland for perhaps years.

MILNER ON FLOGGING.

London, Feb. 1.—In a blue book recently compiled at the instance of Lord Milner, the question of dealing with native labor is discussed at great length. The High Commissioner admits that the control of the liquor traffic among the blacks and the abolishing of flogging will be a tremendous undertaking.

MORE MONEY FOR WAR.

London, Feb. 1.—The War Secretary, Mr. Brodrick, in introducing a supplementary army estimate of £5,000,000 in the House of Commons to-day, said this brought the total of the cost of the war for the present year up to £61,070,000. On January 1 there were still 237,000 British troops in South Africa. The expenses of the war had now been reduced to about £4,500,000 per month.

PROGRESS OF BOER CAUSE

Opinion on the Continent Changes in Favor of England

Rome, Feb. 3—Continental opinion as to great Britain is probably voiced as correctly in the Italian capital as anywhere else. Consequently considerable importance attaches to the declaration of the Tribuna that "One of the results of the extravagance of 'German Anglophobia' is the reduction of anti-British feeling outside of Germany.

"There is no doubt of the accuracy of this view. A wave of indignation against Germany is taking the place of the pro-Boer wave throughout Europe. Here in Italy the change of sentiment is very marked. Probably the disgust with the German tariff policy has something to do in bringing about an alteration in the Italian attitude toward Germany while the slighting references made by Count von Bulow to the Dreibund have contributed to the same end. But whatever the cause, the result is patent. Pro-Boer sympathy is on the rapid decrease in Italy."

Judging from the Vienna dispatches to the papers of Rome, Milan, Florence and Naples, Austrian opinion is also veering toward London under the influence of similar factors, with this difference, however, in the form of expression: Austrian journals point out that the present British-German excitement is only momentary and the feeling in Germany regarding the Boer war will pass away.

As the Fremdenblatt is the organ of the Austria-Hungarian Foreign Office, the utterance is all the more remarkable. Such an announcement can mean nothing if it does not imply that England is in the right and not in the wrong in the South African controversy.

THE STORM YESTERDAY

Wall at Crystal Palace Block Blown in and Damaged P. Simon's Store

As a result of the fire in the Crystal palace block two weeks ago, Mr. Pete Simons is to-day a very heavy loser. The heavy wind which accompanied the storm yesterday blew down the wall on the south side, which fell with a crash on the roof of the building occupied by Mr. Pete Simons, and carried roof and everything with it into the cellar. The stock and fixtures are almost a total loss. With the force of the fall one of the plate glass windows was blown out and a shower of collar boxes, braces umbrellas etc., were blown into the street. The roof and flooring in the back part of the building are not badly damaged but the front half is a complete wreck. Some days ago Mr. Simons warned the town and owners of the burnt building that the high walls were not safe and should either be taken down or securely braced and had this been done the damage done last night might have been avoided. The front and wall on the north side of the building are not in a safe condition and should be attended to.

The country roads are now in very bad shape. The east and west roads are drifted in many places, and are impassable. The trains on the railroads will be late to-day owing to drifts in the cuts on the roads.

GERMANY AFTER PHILIPPINES

That's a Vienna Paper's Guess as to Significance of Prince Henry's Visit.

Vienna, Feb. 2—The Neues Wiener Tageblatt has discovered that the sale of the Philippine Islands to Germany by the United States is probable. The paper says that negotiations to this end have been proceeding for some time.

It adds that the visit of Prince Henry to the United States is a preliminary to the announcement that the islands have been sold.

The paper adds that the transference will be partly compensated for in money and partly in political and commercial concessions. The other powers are fully cognizant of the negotiations. Resentment from Russia and Great Britain is expected.

There's a Story in Morning Tiredness.

A story of poor blood, weakened nerves, of a starved brain. Plenty of food, mind you, but perhaps poorly prepared and too poorly digested to maintain a vigorous body. Ferrozone quickly makes blood, gives strength to the nerves, cures the fagged feeling that prevents vigorous thought and action. Use Ferrozone, it makes blood and good blood feeds the nerves. Strong and vigorous nerves are just another name for good health. If you seek health, and a relief from the tired morning feeling, use Ferrozone. Sold only by Ormond & Walsh.

GIRL FORETELLS HER DEATH

Kenosha Factory Employe Prophesies Demise and Dies Shortly After.

Kenosha, Wis., Feb. 2—Miss Anna Kleamer, aged 18, of this city, yesterday foretold her death, which occurred a few hours afterward. Miss Kleamer was employed at the Chicago-Rockford Hosiery Company and in the morning started to work in apparently her usual health. While on the way to the factory she suddenly turned to several girl companions and said:

"I will die to-day."

Shortly after this and before the party of girls could reach the factory the girl fainted. She was taken to her home and died a few hours afterward. Death is said to have been due to acute peritonitis, but the coroner will hold an inquest.

PETERBOROUGH, FEBRUARY 8, 1902

THE ELECTION TO-DAY

The election which is to take place to-day is an important one to the ratepayers of Peterborough. Two Water Commissioners are to be selected by the votes of the town, the third being the Mayor. These gentlemen will have charge of the waterworks, which became the property of the town on Friday last, and which cost the people $230,000.

Upon the wise inauguration of the new order of things will depend, in a great measure, the success or the failure of the waterworks as a municipal concern. It is therefore highly important that two good men be selected from amongst those in the field. Let it be a business matter entirely with the voter, so that the two men best fitted to perform the duties of the office will be chosen. Men who will run the business in the future as it has been in the past should be preferred, for any other policy would be fatal.

The Times will simply print the names of the candidates, leaving the voters to judge for themselves: Messrs. T. F. Matthews, W. H. Hill, George Ball, John E. Belcher, C.E., Wm. Fair and Adam Dawson.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN CONNOLLY

One of the Oldest Settlers and Pioneers of Township of Ops

One of the oldest settlers and pioneers of the township of Ops died after a lingering illness on Tuesday last, in the person of Mr. John Connolly at the age of 79 years. Deceased was born at or near the village of Bailieboro, where his parents settled when they came to this country in the early part of the century. During his lifetime he took an active interest in public matters, having filled the position of Deputy Reeve and Reeve, for many years. When the County Council assembled in Peterborough, he was one of the members, and afterwards served in the Council of Victoria County. In 1878 he was chosen as Liberal candidate for the Dominion house and after a very stubborn fight was defeated.

When Mr. Connolly's illness became serious, the entire family were called to his bedside. It gave the father great consolation to have his family beside him during his last days. The family left to mourn the death of a kind and loving father are Nicholas, at home; Anastasia, at home; Mrs. P. J. Murphy, of Ops; Mrs. Henry O'Keefe, of Minto, N. D.; James Connolly, of Ops; Mrs. John O'Keefe, of North Dakota; William Connolly, Chief Clerk of Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D.C.; Joseph Connolly, of Linden; Miss Nellie and Frank, who reside at home.

Andrew Carnegie, the great philanthropist, has offered the town of Lindsay $10,000 for a free public library, on condition that a free site be given and a guarantee of $1,000 be given to maintain the library.

We understand that almost any town can have money under similar terms and for similar purposes from Mr. Carnegie, but many hesitate to tie themselves up in such a way.

NAVIGATION NOTES

Mr. Hickey, boat builder and contractor, has started to overhaul the steamer City of Peterborough, and put her in first-class shape for navigation in the spring.

Mr. Buck, of Norwood, has awarded Mr. Hickey the contract of building his new steam yacht. The boat will have a length of 47 feet and 8 foot beam.

The Peterborough Canoe Co. are building two new yachts in the old Bridge Works building.

Stevenson's Advice to Writers.

IN the December number of "Harper's Magazine" there are some letters by R. L. Stevenson which have not previously been published. They contain, as lengthy letters written by R. L. S. always did contain, sundry excellent remarks. We append a few excerpts:

"Beware of realism; it is the devil: it is one of the means of art, and now they make it the end! And such is the force of the age in which a man lives that we all, even those of us who most detest it, sin by realism."

"In your art bow your head over technique. Think of technique when you rise and when you go to bed. Forget purposes in the meanwhile; get to love technical processes, to glory in technical successes; get to see the world entirely through technical spectacles, to see it entirely in terms of what you can. Then, when you have anything to say, the language will be apt and copious."

"Cling to your youth. It is an artist's stock-in-trade. Don't give in that you are ageing, and you won't age. See the good in other people's work; it will never be yours. See the bad in your own, and don't cry about it; it will be there always. Try to use your faults; at any rate, use your knowledge of them."

"The sins of the most innocent, if they were exactly visited, would ruin them to the door. And if you know any man who believes himself to be worthy of a wife's love, a friend's affection, you may rest assured he is worthy of nothing but a kicking. We are not meant to be good in this world, but try to be, and fail, and keep on trying, and when we get a kick, to say 'Thank God!' and when we get a buffet, to say 'Just so: well hit!'"

Two Furniss Stories.

THE poor Saxon "towrist"—what he may suffer in the Emerald Isle! There is a story on record of three Irishmen rushing away from the race meeting at Punchestown to catch a train back to Dublin. At the moment a train from a long distance pulled up at the station, and the three men scrambled in. In the carriage was seated one other passenger. As soon as they had regained their breath one said:

"Pat, have you got th' tickets?"

"What tickets? I've got me loife; I thought I'd lost that gettin' in th' thrain. Have you got 'em, Moike?"

"Oh! Begorrah, I haven't."

"Oh, we're all done for, thin," said the third. "They'll charge us roight from the other side of Oireland."

The old gentleman looked over his newspaper and said:

"You are quite safe, gintlemen; wait till we get to the next station."

They all three looked at each other. 'Bedad, he's a directhor—we're done for now entoirely."

But as soon as the train pulled up the little gentleman jumped out and came back with three first-class tickets. Handing them to the astonished strangers, he said: "Whist, I'll tell ye how I did it. I wint along the thrain—'Tickets, plase; tickets, plase,' I called, and these belong to three Saxon towrists in another carriage."

A stoutly made little fellow of eight to his mother, who happened to be extremely thin:

"Oh, mother, I do believe you must be the very sweetest woman in the world!"

"Thanks, very much, Lawrence. But why so affectionate? What do you want?"

"I don't want anything. I only know you must be the very sweetest woman in the world."

"Really, you are too flattering. Why this sudden outburst of affection?"

"Well, you know, I've been thinking over the old, old saying, 'The nearer the bone the sweeter the meat.'"—Harry Furniss, in "The Strand."

Omar at Golf.

Not only devotees of the game, but all admirers of Omar's quatrains will find pleasure in "The Golfer's Rubaiyat," by H. W. Boynton. There is philosophy, satire and wit in the verses, and the imitations in form have a worth of their own. These are stanzas chosen at random from the little book:

Wake! for the sun has driven in equal flight
The stars before him from the Tee of Night,
And holed them every one without a Miss,
Swinging at ease his gold-shod Shaft of Light.

Lately, agape beside the door of Fame,
Sudden a Touch upon my shoulder came,
And thro' the Dusk an Angel Shape held out
The greater Guerdon; and it was—the Game!

A bag of Clubs, a Silver-Town or two,
A Flask of Scotch, a Pipe of Shag—and Thou
Beside me caddying in the Wilderness—
Ah, Wilderness were Paradise enow.

And some we loved, the foolest with a Club,
Ordain'd to sclaff, to foozle, and to flub,
Have turned in Cards a Round or two before,
And played that final Green without a Rub.

There are many grotesque and humorous illustrations in the margins and on borders, and the make-up of the volume is unique throughout.

Adam—I say, Eve. Eve—Well? Adam—Do you think there is anything in that saying that clothes make the man?

It is not surprising that more people live to be over 100 years old in warm climates than in the higher latitudes. The German Empire, with 55,000,000 inhabitants, has 778 centenarians. France, with 40,000,000, has 213. England has only 146, and Scotland 46. Sweden has 10, Norway 23, Belgium 5, Denmark 2, Spain 401, and Switzerland none. Servia, with a population of 2,250,000, has 575 people over 100 years old. It is claimed that the oldest living person, one Bruno Cotrim, living in Rio de Janeiro, is 150 years old.

A mother not spoken well of by her children is an enemy of the state; she should not live within the kingdom's wall.

A Tale of the Quick and the Dead.

AN old friend of Mr. Abell, proprietor of one of the Baltimore papers, asked to have his boy taken into that office and taught the business. He was added to the city staff as a special favor. The city editor sent the youngster out to Druid Hill Cemetery to describe that aristocratic burial place. He was instructed to prepare a list of the distinguished lot owners and to mention all the famous dead who rested under the velvety turf. The reporter was neither experienced nor careful. He went to the office of the cemetery company, and, being allowed access to the books, copied such names as seemed worthy of selection. In writing his notes the young man mixed his lists, gave to the distinguished dead the names of the living lot owners, and made up his list of the distinguished survivors from his catalogue of the dead.

The article was immediately put in type, and appeared the following morning.

When Mr. Abell reached his office that day he found a throng of citizens awaiting him.

"What can I do for you, sir?" he demanded in his brusque manner of the first man in broadcloth who pushed into his private office.

"Do? What haven't you done? I am G. Washington Smith and your paper says that I am buried at Druid Hill. It's shameful, sir; and I demand a correction."

"Does my paper say you are dead?" asked Mr. Abell gravely, looking at his visitor over the top of his glasses.

"It does, and——"

"Well, I want to say to you, Mr. G. Washington Smith, that if my paper says you're dead, you are dead. Good morning; this is no place for ghosts!"

Equal to Three.

Public vehicles in Paris are allowed to carry only as many passengers as can find seats. After that number has been admitted no one is allowed to enter. The explanation will serve to introduce an incident reported by a correspondent of the Pittsburg "Dispatch."

A crowd of men and women, each with a numbered ticket, showing the order in which they were to enter the next street car, stood at the Place de l'Etoile station when the down-town car arrived.

Surveying the crowd, the conductor cried out: "Only three places in the car! Who has ticket No. 1?"

With that Mrs. Blank of Chicago, the stoutest woman in the American colony, approached, holding up the ticket called for.

"Step aboard, madam," said the conductor, ringing his go-ahead bell.

"Wait! Wait! I've No. 2!" called a little Frenchman.

"You're too late," replied the conductor. "Every place is taken."

An Old Letter.

A WHOLESALE merchant of Philadelphia, in looking over old papers and records, recently came across an interesting document. It was a letter of instruction sent forty years ago by a merchant in St. Louis to his agent in San Francisco. He thus describes it in the Philadelphia "Times:"

"It related to the disposal of a lot of goods which had been shipped by way of Cape Horn, and although it contained over fifteen thousand words and a copy of a good-sized invoice, it was written on just two sheets of paper.

"The paper itself is a sort of tough, opaque tissue, very thin and light, and when folded the letter slips easily into an envelope three inches wide.

"Why it was gotten up in such a peculiar style is explained by the stamp on the corner, which is one of the old 'pony express' series, embellished with a picture of a man on horseback, spurring at a gallop across the plains.

"I knew, of course, that the Pacific mail of that period was carried by relay express riders, but I never before realized what great pains were taken to reduce the weight to the lowest possible point. I am told that the letters were stored in little flat pouches under the flaps of the saddle, and that they were usually written on a specially prepared tissue.

"The one I have described must have occupied an expert clerk several days, for the penmanship, while microscopic, is beautifully executed, and as clear and legible as print.

"The stamp is of the denomination of fifty cents, and, taken altogether, it would be hard to find a more striking reminder of the astonishing progress that has been made in this country in a trifle over one generation.

"Everything about the little brown letter speaks of dangers, difficulties, and rude, primitive conditions. It is difficult to realize that the route it traveled is now the great highway of a thousand rushing trains, bearing the transcontinental commerce of the nation."

The Excuse

Made by many a man for taking a drink at the bar is that he needs a bracer. He feels weak, his stomach is "out of sorts" and liquor makes him "feel good." The tired man who sits on a pin leaps up with new energy, but no one would say that this energy was evidence of the strength giving power of a pin. So with the energy induced by liquors. They only spur the body on, but do not strengthen it.

Strength is made from food properly digested and assimilated. When the stomach is diseased there is a failure to extract the nutrition from food and the body grows weak. The weak body needs strengthening, not stimulating. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, so that the nutrition of food is perfectly extracted and assimilated and the body nourished into health and strength.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is no other medicine "just as good" for diseases of the stomach and allied organs.

"Your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have been of great benefit to me," writes (Prof.) Pleasant A. Oliver, of Vista, Fulton Co., Ark. "Before I used the above mentioned remedies my sleep was not sound; digestion bad; a continual feeling of misery. I now feel like a new man."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate the bowels and liver.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvellous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections, no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

A NOVEL

There was a spasmodic movement of the head, then, a moment's silence; then three words, uttered in a husky voice, with a glance at the strange man's figure with its staring vacant eyes and whitened hair.

"He—is—Craven——" The rest died away, and as Katharine turned suddenly and gazed at the creature they called Number Thirteen, Gordon Smythe gave a broken sob, and, with his mother's arms clinging about him, passed away from the world and his sins forever.

With outstretched hands, Katharine staggered back. The mother's cries of agony were ringing in her ears; that strange weird face, so like, yet so unlike, that boyish one that had glared at her from the darkness of the pit, before her; that still, dead form on the floor, all that remained of the living, handsome Gordon; these, one by one, slowly faded from her senses, and there came instead a great rush of darkness, a singing in her ears, and then — oblivion.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Once more an August sunshine poured its golden radiance on the land. Brexley village was again en fete to celebrate the birthday of its lady head and ruler. All was bustle and confusion, just as it had been twelve months before, and Barbara Mostyn surrounded by a throng of guests, posed, talked, and patronized in her old familiar style.

"Are we not to see your fair neighbor, the young widow with the romantic history, Barbara?" Lady Clara Lennox asked in a casual way, as she sauntered with her hostess under the trees.

Barbara drew her thin lips still tighter.

"I do not receive persons of her calibre," she replied curtly.

"Why?" Lady Clara opened her sleepy eyes to their fullest extent. "Has she done anything wrong, really? Oh, do tell me, Barbara. She seemed such a nice, quiet girl when she was with you last year, and your aunt, Lady Drum——"

"Aunt Ellen should be ashamed of herself!" Miss Mostyn's face was white with anger. "But then every one knows that she is mad on some things, and this so-called Mrs. Gordon Smythe is one of them."

"So-called!" Lady Clara repeated languidly, now thoroughly enjoying herself. "Oh, wasn't she married then, Barbara? I thought there was some romantic history about how she saved ——"

"She is a vile adventuress!" Barbara almost hissed between her teeth, "and if I had my way I would sweep all such people out of the land!"

Lady Clara hummed softly to herself; she began to see daylight.

"By the way, my dear, when do you expect Lord Otway to return?"

Barbara's face changed, and she cast down her eyes demurely.

"He did not say exactly when, in his last letter," she answered.

Lady Clara was silent for a moment

"He is a good correspondent, isn't he?" she remarked.

Barbara's brows contracted for a second, then she replied smoothly:

"Yes, very; but then he has so much to say to me, you know Clara."

Lady Clara pursed up her lips as she sauntered on alone, some one having come to claim Barbara.

"What strange things men are. Now what can be the attraction in Barbara Mostyn for such a nature as Lord Otway's. It is very odd, almost as odd as the manner in which he suddenly threw up his curacy last year, and went out as a missionary to China. I could have wished him a better ultimate fate than marriage with Barbara Mostyn!"

Lady Clara sauntered on and on until, somehow, she had reached the skirts of Brexley Hall grounds, and was looking out on the village road. As she stood there, deep in her thoughts, a smart little carriage, drawn by a pair of pretty ponies, came toward her, and in the slender, black-robed figure of the lady driving Lady Clara was quick to recognize Katharine, Mrs. Gordon Smythe.

A flush mounted to our heroine's lovely cheeks, and then a smile came as, at a gesture, Lady Clara motioned her to draw up, and then went forward gracefully, with her hand outstretched in greeting.

"I am delighted to meet you, Mrs. Smythe," she said warmly and truthfully, for she had both liked and admired Katharine, and Barbara's spite had only deepened this feeling. "You remember me, of course?"

"Perfectly," Katharine answered, with a smile.

Not a trace of the serious illness that had fallen on her after Gordon's death remained to mar her beauty; but for the sad expression in her gray eyes, she looked as she did the first night we saw her. Life now was very different to her; she was revered— beloved and admired by all around her; she had everything that money could procure; her purse was ever open to alleviate suffering and the distressed. By every means in her power she was trying to wipe away from Craven Adair's saddened life the memory of the cruel wrong from which he had endured. Her path lay clear and bright before her, with only one shadow upon it, and that one a shadow that would never pass—the bitterness of her hopeless, never-ending love for one who had considered her not even worthy the name of woman.

Lady Clara chatted on briskly.

"I hope you will let me come and see you, Mrs. Smythe," she said after a while.

"I shall be so glad," was Katharine's reply, given in her simple, unaffected manner. "We are very quiet. I have only my cousin, Mrs. Smythe, an old friend, Miss Weston and Mr. Adair and his sister staying with me; but I will give you none the less a hearty welcome."

"I shall drive over without delay." Lady Clara's eyes were fixed meditatively on Katharine for a moment. "By the way, how is poor Mr. Adair nowadays?—better? Ah, I am glad, and so will Lord Otway be when he hears the news. I must tell Barbara to be sure and write it to him."

The older woman noticed in an instant the quick flush followed by the deadly pallor and in that instant she had fathomed the real meaning of Barbara's insolence and hatred toward her fair neighbor at Charlton Abbey.

"So!—sits the wind in that quarter!" she mused to herself. "Where — where were this man's eyes, that he should have passed over the girl for Barbara Mostyn! It is a [illegible] extravaganza. It doesn't [illegible] right, but I suppose it must be, or he would not keep up this correspondence with Barbara."

Katharine, during this pause, had been gathering her reins together in her hand.

"I believe Marian writes to her cousin about her brother; but —but we have had no news from him or of him for months. She— we should like to know how Lord Otway is/and if he is well."

"Barbara seems to be more fortunate than you—or, rather, Miss Adair, is," Lady Clara answered slowly. "She tells me she receives a letter every week. But, then, if report be true, that is not unnatural, is it, Mrs. Smythe?"

Katharine retained enough pride to smile as though she were perfectly indifferent; and the next moment, after another pressing and gracious invitation, she drove on, leaving Lady Clara looking after her with a softened look on her worldly face.

"There goes a woman whom to know is to like and admire. How could Otway be so blind! Why she loves the very ground he treads on; while, as for Barbara—"

Lady Clara finished with a most expressive shrug of the shoulders, and turned to walk back to the Hall.

Katharine drove on quietly for a time, then a mist gathered over her eyes, a mist that at last developed into big heavy tears that blinded out the road and all that lay beyond. Fortunately the ponies knew their path, and trotted along very confidently until they reached the gates of Charlton Abbey.

"Take the ponies to the stables, Tim," she said, without turning her tear-stained face to the groom, and then with swift steps she walked into the most shady and secluded part of her grounds. The fact that Ormande corresponded with Barbara, while to all Marian's loving epistles not one single line in reply had come, was the most undeniable proof to Katharine's eyes that this man whom she loved so dearly not only held her to be a guilty, sinful creature— despite the full and complete explanation which, through Mr. Montrose, had been given to the world after Gordon's death— but that he refused to hold communication with any even of his own relatives who came in contact with her.

Had Clara Lennox guessed one-quarter the pain the words had given she would never have uttered them, and she would have been inexpressibly grieved could she have followed Katharine and watched her fling herself down on the turf and give way to a burst of unconquerable tears.

Katharine had lain there for some time when she heard voices come toward her. Starting up she hastily brushed her eyes and crept back behind a tree. She caught the tones of Marian Adair's clear voice—at first faint, then nearer, and the tones seemed full of strange pleasure, almost excitement, then she heard her own name called by the girl:

"Katharine! Katharine, dear! where are you?"

And then came another voice, at whose sound Katharine started as though she had been shot, and clung to the stout tree to support her trembling limbs, for it was Ormande who spoke—no myth, no dream— but Ormande himself!

A Dearth of "Hold-ups."

PREVIOUS to Mr. McKinley's first inauguration, his acquaintance with the members of his Cabinet was a very slight one, only Mr. Sherman being at all intimate with the Chief Executive. The getting acquainted was rather of slow progress, as all were engrossed in their new and intricate duties. One evening the conversation chanced to turn upon the youthful ambitions of the members. Each related his early plans for the future, and when Secretary Wilson's turn came, the Iowan said: "My ambition has not yet been realised. I wanted to be worth $1,000,000 and have two good pairs of suspenders at the same time. As yet, I have neither." The Cabinet unofficially laughed at this frank confession, and Secretary Gage, after a minute, confessed that he had never simultaneously possessed two pairs of dependable suspenders. Secretary Long remarked that when he graduated from Harvard he had two pairs of new trousers, each with good new galluses, but that the experience had never responded to an encore; while the now Justice McKenna said that, although he came from the Pacific Slope, two pairs of "hold-ups" were unknown to him. Others made similar confessions, and finally Secretary Bliss, the wealthiest man present, said with a laugh: "This seems to be a strange coincidence. Last Saturday evening Mrs. Bliss came in to my study and said: 'Papa, are you going out at all this evening?' I replied that I did not so intend, and asked the reason of her question. 'Oh, nothing,' she replied, 'only if you are not, Ed'—our son—'wants to use your only good suspenders.'"

As a sort of final course to this tale, Mr. McKinley tells that Secretary Wilson related this conversation at the breakfast table the morning following. Three of his children were present. It was in the early holiday season. Each of the children sat interested and observing. Christmas came, and in the stocking of the Secretary of Agriculture were found three dozen pairs of suspenders of a high degree of excellence. The children had remembered the story. All Secretary Wilson then needed to realise his youthful ambition was the $1,000,000.

And this is one of the very few humorous stories the late President told repeatedly with gusto.

"To his highly well-born Herr Doctor (for the doctor may be taken for granted). The undersigned permits himself devotedly to inform your highly well-born self that your honored writing has received, and so forth." And the writer may in conclusion assure the highly well-born recipient of his "most excellent high esteem," and subscribe himself as "highly respectful and most obedient."

Most people insist on receiving the exact degree of respect which they deem to be due to their position, as the pronouncement of a Berlin jury indicates. A lady accused a tradesman of an intended insult in that he had only signed himself in a letter "Most humbly" and not "Respectfully and most humbly," and the court took the [illegible] view and fined the offender.

"Well, after all, 'twas but a momentary feeling. I guess I won't fall, Mary."

Among the Old Masters.

A GOOD looking young woman, who had evidently been fed on large quantities of "culturese," was piloting about the Art Museum in New York the other day a fat and comfortable middle-aged soul, whose agreeable but totally uninspired features showed that hers was the proud privilege of being mother to her companion. The girl dragged her mother from canvas to canvas, explaining things in a high-pitched voice, and a portion of their conversation is recorded by the "Tribune."

"Rembrandt was a Dutchman," she observed. "You see how full of shadows his pictures are."

"Shadows, indeed," returned the mother. "I must say, though, it was well for that lady he did put her in the shadow. He must have been well paid for painting her, I should say," she added with scorn.

The two passed on to Rubens.

"Ain't they fat, those ladies—if you can call 'em ladies!" exclaimed the portly matron, for once interested.

"He used his wife as a model, mother," volunteered the cultured one.

"Well, now," said mother, wrathfully, "to think a man would make such a show of his own wife! No, I may not be so well educated as you, but I know better than that, I hope."

The conversation, carried on in clear tones, had attracted the attention of half the room. The girl blushed deeply and drew her mother away in the direction of the modern rooms. The hopeless remark floated back:

"No, Antoinette, it ain't no use. Them old masters all look alike to me."

Stranger—And don't your congregation consider it a sin to tell a lie? Kentucky Parson—It depends on the lie, stranger. We don't consider it any great harm for a man to make out he has been bitten by a snake in a prohibition district.—Philadelphia "Record."

Anecdotal.

Frederic Villiers, the well-known war artist and correspondent, declares he saw the following sign in a prominent hotel in an Australian town where water was scarce: "Please don't use soap when washing, as the water is required for tea."

"Do you mind me calling you May?" once said a very fashionable and gushing society lady to the young Duchess of York; "I love your name so much!" "Not at all," said the Duchess in a dangerously quiet tone of voice; "if you do not mind me not answering you!"

Douglas Jerrold, the English wit, was once sitting with George Henry Lewes and a poet named Heraud, who was something of a bore, and a good deal laughed at. Lewes asked Jerrold: "Have you ever seen Heraud's Descent Into Hell?" "No; but I should like to," tersely replied the wit.

At dinner at Balliol the Master's guests were discussing the careers of two Balliol men, one of whom had just been made a judge and the other a bishop. "Oh," said Henry Smith, "I think the bishop is the greater man. A judge at the most can only say 'You be hanged,' but a bishop can say 'You be damned.'" "Yes," characteristically twittered the Master, "but if the judge says 'You be hanged,' you are hanged."

In a high school one day last week a teacher desired to refresh a boy's memory and help him to answer a question. Acting on the supposition that a mental review would lead him to a correct conclusion, she said: "Now, go away back"— Unconsciously from the entire class there came a responsive murmur: "And sit down." The teacher was compelled to join in the audible smile, and hardly knows yet whether the boy's answer was right.

The story is told of Ambassador Choate that returning from a college boat race he was once approached by a fresh young undergraduate, who introduced himself as the son of one of Mr. Choate's old friends. The youth was smoking a pipe, and constantly blew great clouds of smoke into Mr. Choate's face. Observing that the ambassador was looking rather steadily at his pipe, the student said, proudly: "A birthday present." "Ah," replied the lawyer, without taking his eyes from the loud-smelling bowl, "I should never have thought you were so old!"

A bailiff having long tried in vain to arrest a Quaker at last resolved to adopt the disguise of being a Quaker himself and so get access to the interior of the house. He knocked accordingly at the door, enquired if Friend Aminadab was at home and if he could see him. The housekeeper said: "Walk in, friend, and he shall see thee." The bailiff, delighted to have got this success, was directed to wait. But after waiting an hour he became impatient, rang the bell and said to the servant: "Thou promised me I should see Friend Aminadab." "No, friend," answered she; "I promised he should see thee. He hath seen thee, but he doth not like thee."

A curate, it is said, on applying to His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury when Bishop of London, to be licensed, was ordered to read some verses of Scripture, as a test of his capacity for conducting public worship. When he had done so, in fear and trembling, the Bishop declared that he was "Not loud enough." "But," pleaded the poor curate, "a lady in church only yesterday told me I could be heard most plainly all over it." "Ah!" exclaimed the Bishop, "you are engaged." The curate blushingly owned the soft impeachment. His Grace darkly smiled and then solemnly said, "Now listen to me, young man. While you are engaged don't believe everything the lady tells you, but after you are married believe every word she says."

Robert G. Ingersoll used to be fond of telling how, when he first came to Washington from the West, he once encountered in one of the corridors of the Capitol an old negro woman vigorously scrubbing the floor when she heard anyone coming, and, when the footsteps died away, busily reading her Bible. He slipped up on her very quietly one morning, and, taking her by surprise with her precious book, said: "Mary, do you believe all you read there?" "I sutanly do," she replied; "ebery word, Colonel Ingersoll." "Do you believe that God made man out of dust?" "In coase I does." "Say, it happened to rain hard about that time and the dust was gone and there was nothing but mud?" To which old mammy retorted: "Den de good Lawd knowed enough to know dat it was time to make dem lawyers and infidels, Colonel Ingersoll."

In May and June steamers laden with green peas and strawberries leave Brittany daily for England. These are the spoils of the rich lands about Brest. After Fashoda and the Dreyfus affair, when an anti-English feeling was rampant, a grocer of this district, distinguished in his abuse of the British, denounced the whole race as "despicable preserve-merchants." "Why 'despicable preserve-merchants?'" someone asked. "Because they make the jams they sell to us. They have no sugar and no fruit. Despicable? Why, they take our sugar and our fruit, and they make us buy their jams!"

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in measured articulation:

"It's to hide the teacher's bicycle, sir!"—"Wasp."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

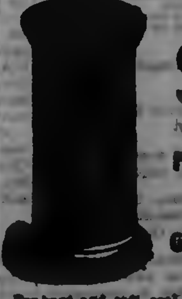
THE
Most Perfect Stove Made



THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion. [illegible] The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of [illegible].

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the top of coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

DIRECTIONS.

When lifting the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention

We certify that we have in use one No. [illegible] Star stove in our [illegible] the size of which is [illegible] feet, with [illegible] ceiling. We have [illegible] and the [illegible] coal we have used on the coldest day [illegible] found [illegible] in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room [illegible] past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and with [illegible] that it is giving excellent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

Cancer Growing Two Years

A Remarkable Case Cured Completely by the New Constitutional Remedy.

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad at last that it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life, but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from Cancer or Tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

(NOTE.—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.)

—The market on Saturday was not very large.

—The election of Water Commissioners takes place to-day.

—The County Council concluded business on Saturday and adjourned.

—Messrs. Bates Bros., bakers, have been given a Government license to sell postage stamps in the north end.

—The Board of Directors of the Y.W.C.A. will meet this afternoon at 3.30. A full attendance is requested.

—The Peterborough branch of the Labor Union is still growing. No less than fifty-four new members were initiated on Friday night.

—The County Council made no grant to the beet sugar factory promotion, but appointed a committee to act with the town in the matter.

—G. E. Whitea is the people's photographer. Go to him for your best photos. He also frames pictures. Studio, 166 Hunter street west.

—At a meeting of the Labor Union on Friday night, considerable discussion took place about water commissioners, and we understand that the members of the union heartily endorsed Mr. George Ball as commissioner.

—The County Council has made a grant of $25.00 to bona-fide residents of the county who joined the third contingent for South Africa; $30 to the Poultry Association, and $100 to the Children's Aid Society.

—Rev. Father Murphy, C.S.P., of New York, will deliver a temperance lecture in St. Peter's Cathedral on Sunday evening next, preparatory to forming a Women's Temperance Society in connection with St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE.—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.)

—Mr. W. T. Hall is in Toronto for a few days on business.

—Constable McFadden, of Huntsville, was in town on Saturday.

—Rev. R. L. Campbell, of Toronto, is visiting his brother, Mr. Alex. Campbell, Hunter street.

—Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Langfeldt have returned from a visit to Lindsay.

—Miss McCarter who has been residing in town for the past few weeks, leaves this week for Ottawa, where she has accepted a position as soloist in the First Presbyterian Church. Her many friends in town will be sorry to learn of her departure.

—Mr. Benjamin Sherin, of Reston, Souris District, Manitoba, is in town on a visit. Mr. Sherin left Manitoba in December, and has been visiting friends in different places since then. He reports the past season as a very prosperous one for the farmers in Manitoba and the North-west, and like others, speaks glowingly of the country's prospects.

Dr. Bingham, our popular and efficient local Medical Health Officer, returned from Toronto on Friday, where he went after attending the small-pox patient in Jackson Park. The doctor has resumed his duties as public health officer. His many friends in town were pleased to greet him after his long voluntary confinement.

CHURCH NOTES

—At All Saints' church, Holy Communion was celebrated yesterday morning at 8.30. At the morning and evening services Rev. W. L. Armitage occupied the pulpit. His subject in the evening was "How We Feel." The annual offertory was taken up for Diocesan Missions.

—At St. John's church, Holy Communion was dispensed in the morning at 8.30. The Rev. J. C. Davidson occupied the pulpit at the morning and evening services.

—At St. Luke's, Ashburnham, morning prayer and communion at 11. Evening service at 7. Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, M.A., occupied the pulpit.

—At St. Paul's church, Rev. Dr. Torrance occupied the pulpit in the morning, and Rev. Geo. Yuill, assistant pastor, preached at the evening service.

—The services at St. Andrew's were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. G. Potter. The attendance at the evening service was very large.

—At the George Street Methodist church, holy communion was celebrated at 10 a.m. The regular morning and evening services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Wilson.

—Notwithstanding the inclement weather of yesterday, a large number of men attended the meeting at the Y.M.C.A. in the afternoon. The address delivered by Mr. Crocker, of Toronto, on "A Man Complete," was masterful and most beneficial to all present.

—The regular monthly song service was held in Charlotte Street Methodist Church last evening. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Crossley, preached most effectively and the music was good.

Liberated on Saturday

Wm. Greenslade, the Huntsville man who was arrested on Friday, charged with obtaining money under false pretences, was given his liberty on Saturday. A settlement was effected between the parties. It appears that some misunderstanding existed between Greenslade and a person to whom he was indebted, as to the payment of the debt, and since his arrival here, he had overlooked the matter, but as he had made a satisfactory settlement, he was liberated.

WOLVES ARE PLENTIFUL

An American Timber Ranger Treed by Them in Haliburton County

Wolves are reported to be very numerous in the wilds of Haliburton this year. A few days ago a party of Americans were in the vicinity of Dorset inspecting timber, and one of the party strayed from the others, and when about two miles away, heard the mournful howl of the wolf. On looking around he saw a large pack of the hungry brutes after him, and at once scaled a high tree. He remained for some hours in the tree-top, when his comrades found him and drove off the wolves, killing many of them, and released their friend.

In view of the bounty of $10 on a wolf, we are surprised that our local sports spend money and time in shooting rabbits, when they could make more money in the north country hunting wolves.

TURNED OUT TRUE

Coffee Drinking Responsible

"At a dinner party a number of years ago a physician made this statement, 'Coffee drinking is responsible for more ills than any other one thing, but it is impossible for me to make my patients believe it.'

Neither would I believe him but continued to drink my coffee with sweet content. After a time I became aware of the fact that I was frequently lying awake nearly all night without any apparent reason, and the morning found me tired out and nervous.

The insomnia increased, then came a dull pain at the base of the brain and severe pressure at my heart. My outside work was given up for I could hardly bear the little fatigue of the day. 'Nervous prostration brought on by overwork,' the doctor said. I thought of the words of old Dr. Bagley, 'Coffee is the poison that is responsible,' etc., etc.

I had heard of Postum Food Coffee and determined to try it. The first cup was so weak and flat that it was not fit to drink. The next time it was prepared I looked after it myself to see that the directions were followed properly. The result was a revelation. I found it a delicious beverage.

The cure was not wrought in a day but little by little my nerves became stronger, the pain ceased, and again I could sleep like a tired child.

I am now completely restored to health by Postum Food Coffee used in place of ordinary coffee, have regained the fresh complexion of girlhood, and I can realize the truth of the old Doctor's statement. I wish people could understand that truth before they permit coffee to break them down.

I have known of several others who have been restored to health by leaving off coffee and taking up Postum Food Coffee. Please do not publish my name, but I am willing to answer letters of inquiry if stamp is enclosed." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

An Appeal for Mr. Belcher.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—In view of the fact that we are on the eve of the election for Town Commissioner, I would like to say a word on behalf of a man who is put forward not as a representative of any one class or interest, but of them all. I refer to Mr. Belcher. Some, I understand, are running as the candidates of either the financial, the waterworks or workingmen's interest, but Mr. Belcher, as his requisition shows, has been put forward as a representative of the citizens in general. He is a kindly gentleman, who is accessible to any man at any time, and highly thought of by his professional brethren, who have elected him to the highest positions. I hope he will be elected.

WM. SNOWDEN

The Child at Prayer.

(Published by request.)

A baby to a Baby prays.
O, Infant Jesus, meek and mild,
From 'mid the glory and the rays,
Look on a little child.
As one child to another may,
He talks without a thought of fear,
Commending to a Child to-day
All that a child holds dear:
His father, mother, brother, nurse,
His cat, his dog, his bird, his toys,
Things that make up the universe
Of darling girls and boys.
All sheep and horses, lambs and cows,
He counts them o'er, a motley crew,
And children in the neighbor's house,
And all the people, too,
His friends, why all the world's his friend,
This four-years darling, golden-curled,
'Tis long before it has an end,
The bede-roll of his world.
A child lifts up his little hands,
Unto a Child; and it may be
The Host of Heaven at gazing stands,
That tender sight to see.

U. S. OFFICIALS

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—A bets B that no United States official, and no State official in this country, has an official prefix—such as "Honorable"—to his name, except the Governor of Massachusetts, who is by law "His Excellency;" and one other official whom A does not remember. Does A win, and who is the other official?

A. B.

Ans.—No civil officer of the United States has any official prefix to his name: the Governor and Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts are respectively entitled by the Constitution "Excellency" and "Honor," the Governor of New Hampshire is also entitled "Excellency" by the Constitution.

A New Feature

Mr. T. Turcotte, the genial and efficient asst.-sec'y. of St. Peter's T. A. S., is introducing into the rooms of this already up-to-date society, a new feature, that has much attraction for several of our young men. It consists of a gymnasium which, although not very extensive at present, is to be enlarged in the near future. The interest which Mr. Turcotte takes in everything connected with the comfort and pleasure of the members of this flourishing society, and the success which has attended his efforts, speaks well for his capabilities as sect'cy.

Bad Neuralgia's Agony.

Have you failed to get permanent relief? Are you almost frantic with neuralgic pain? If so, why not use Polson's Nerviline? It is the only neuralgic remedy that has never failed to cure even the worst cases, and it will surely cure you. Five times the strength of other remedies, it penetrates the tissues and drives out the pain instantly. Quick relief, sure cure. Large bottles 25c.

A Change of Managers

Mr. Ed. Salisbury, who for the past few months, has filled the position of local agent of the Dominion Express Company, has been promoted to the office of Inspector. His place is taken by Mr. A. H. McInnes, of Parkdale, where he had charge of the Company's office. During Mr. Salisbury's management, the business of the Company has increased enormously. His many friends in Peterborough will regret his departure, but will be pleased at his advancement. Mr. McInnes comes well recommended, and no doubt will soon become as popular as his predecessor, which is saying a good deal.

ORDERED TO THE FRONT

Lieut. Jack Fessenden Sailed Yesterday for South Africa

Lieut. Jack Fessenden, son of Mr. C. Fessenden, who has been stationed at Portsmouth, in the Imperial service, received orders a few days ago to report at the front in South Africa. Lieut. Fessenden sailed from Portsmouth yesterday. His many friends in town hope that he will come safely through his experience. Lieut. Fessenden is a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston, and has many friends in town.

DEANERY MEETING

Deanery of Northumberland will Meet at St. Luke's To-day

The Deanery of Northumberland will meet at St. Luke's, Ashburnham, today and to-morrow, in which parish the members will be entertained. Service will be held to-night at St. John's church, where the sermon will be preached by Rev. Canon Spragge, of Cobourg. All are invited.

ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT

Of the Ashburnham Public School on Friday Evening a Great Success

The annual entertainment by the scholars of the Ashburnham Public School, was held in the Town Hall, on Friday evening. An excellent program was presented by the scholars which consisted of readings, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. The hall was crowded with a most appreciative audience. The program was as follows:

Chairman's address.
Recitation—Johnny Markle.
Song—Mr. H. Milne.
Dialogue—"A scene in Court."—3 boys.
Recitation—Miss Mabel Pringle.
Cradle songs—7 girls.
Garland drill—22 girls.

CARD TO ELECTORS.

To the Electors of the Town of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been urged by the numerous friends of Municipal Ownership to allow myself to be placed in nomination for one of the Water Commissioners, I have consented to be a Candidate. The grounds upon which they urge my election are, amongst others, that I am really the father of Municipal Ownership in this town, and have consistently fought the battle therefor throughout, and that at its incipient or experimental stage, such a one should be given the first opportunity to prove the feasibility of the scheme. They further urge that my record has been free from all cliques and other corrupting influences, and that I will stand up fearlessly for the rights of all alike, without fear, favour or affection. It is needless to say that if elected I will do my utmost to carry out the most sanguine expectations of my numerous friends and water consumers generally. Respectfully asking you one and all for your vote and influence, I am, ladies and gentlemen,

Your Obedient Servant,

GEORGE BALL.

A Petition and Acceptance

To John E. Belcher, Esq., C. E.

Sir,—We earnestly request you to allow yourself to stand for election as one of the Water Commissioners for the town.

We feel that it would be of decided advantage to have one of the Commissioners an engineer, and especially with our system from its beginning.

(Signed)

Wm. Snowden, Thos. F. Attrill, H Long, R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough; A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D.; H. LeBrun, W. Taylor, T. E Boddy, President A. F. of L.; R. J. Munro, R. F. McGregor, W. Henry, and others.

To His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, Wm. Henry, President A. F. of L.; H. Long, Wm. Snowden, W. Taylor, R. F. McGregor, R. J. Munro, H. LeBrun, T. E. Boddy, T. F. Attrill, A. C. Dunlop, D. N. Carmichael, M.D., and to my nominator and seconder, James Montgomery and R. Sheehy, and others:

Gentlemen,—In view of your request I will accept nomination for the Waterworks Commissionership, and, as you suggest, will do what I can, if elected, in the way of placing my knowledge of the system and its workings at the service of the town.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN E. BELCHER.

TO THE ELECTORS

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Having been requested by a large number of ratepayers to offer myself as a candidate for the position of Water Commissioner for the Town of Peterborough, I have consented to do so, and respectfully solicit your votes and influence. If elected my policy will be to treat rich and poor alike, and respect the general welfare of the town in the careful and economical management of the water works.

BRITAIN SAID TO BE LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

THE UNITED STATES WILL NOT INTERFERE IN THE WAR.

Appealing to England For the Beaten Boer

McCOLL ON BOER WAR

Says England Should be Magnanimous If She Would Prosper

London, Feb. 4.—The problem confronting England in its future relations with the Boers is discussed in fearless and forceful fashion in the current issue of the Fortnightly Review by Canon Malcolm MacColl, one of the band of outspoken Englishmen who believe that England is accumulating trouble by the annexation of the Boer Republics. He classifies himself as one of the "non-party" minority, who cannot perceive the wisdom of the annexation policy. He was among the large body of Englishmen who was opposed to the policy in the case of Alsace and Lorraine "as a long stride back in civilization." Canon MacColl is of the opinion that if, after the British had taken Bloemfontein and Pretoria, they had proferred peace to the Boer Republics on the condition "of at least a modified independence and an indemnity of $500,000,000, which they could have raised on the security of the mines, the war would have ended at once, and we should have secured friendship, instead of hatred."

He thinks if President Kruger had opposed the proposition he would not have been supported by his people. However this may be the writer recognises the fact that Liberals and Conservatives agree that the annexation of the Boer Republics "becomes inevitable after the war." He then discusses what this signifies for Great Britain based upon the statement of the opinion of British military authorities that it will require an army of 100,000 in South Africa for a long period after the war is over. One of the results of this heavy demand upon the military resources of the empire, from Canon MacColl's point of view, will be the "paralysis" of British diplomacy. Effective diplomacy rests on military power. "There can be no force behind our diplomacy while we have 150,000, or 10,000, soldiers locked up in South Africa." The effect of the war upon the British electorate is suggestively treated. Will the forcible annexation of the Boer Republics be worth its cost to British workmen? The writer does not think so, and indulges in this prophetic strain:

"When the glamour of the war is past, and the necessities of life have become dearer, and myriads of men are out of work, as they will be when the spurious stimulus imparted to various trades by the war, has ceased, and are cast upon the rates, those who feel the pinch will certainly rebel against a state of things which imposes grevious hardships upon them without any return of appreciable value. The workers have never been severely tried since they received the franchise, and it would be rash to calculate on their forbearance in anything approaching the distress which followed Waterloo. They can achieve their ends by constitutional means, and the party that promises most is likely to win."

Canon MacColl, in urging "Amnesty, clemency and conciliation" for the Boers, cites the speeches of various British statesmen, notably that of Sir Hugh Cairns against Lord Canning's proclamation confiscating the property of the people of Oude, India, who had risen against England, taking advantage of the Sepoy rebellion:

"Whatever other nations may do," said Sir Hugh, "England ought not to retrograde from those laws of war which civilization has introduced. How, then, upon the principles of justice and the practice of civilized nations, which this country is bound to observe ought we to treat the property of the conquered people? You might as well confiscate the lives of the conquered as their property. The matter is so clear that I am ashamed to ask the House to listen to the opinion of one or two great authorities upon the subject."

The better policy of conciliation and amnesty was adopted by the Tory Government of 1858, and Oude has since remained loyal to the British allegiance, Canon MacColl proceeds:

"The Government has avowedly given the Generals in South Africa a free hand, and Lord Roberts is presumably the author of the policy of confiscation and devastation. Let us remember that the worst accusations made against the Boers do not approach in gravity and heinousness the case against the people of Oude. The Government need not go to a distracted opposition for a policy. They have it ready at hand as a splendid heirloom from a Tory Government in 1858. It is the antithesis of the policy that has been tried in South Africa, and success was as speedy and conspicuous as that has been the reverse."

The Government is, therefore, urged to send to South Africa a Commission of high-minded Englishmen of both parties to take counsel with the Boers and report a plan of conciliatory settlement. Probably Canon MacColl's voice is that of one crying in the wilderness. It may bring no response from the Government, but the Government would do well to heed the writer's warning as to the policy of confiscation:

"Nothing nerves men with such reckless valor and desperate tenacity of purpose as the feeling that they have been rendered destitute, and left without a ray of certain hope for the future."

GIANT AND GIANTESS TO WED

Combined Height, 16 Feet 2 Inch; Weight, Over 700 Pounds.

Helena, Mon., Feb. 4—The largest man and woman in the United States, if not in the world, will be married at Helena or Butte within the next few weeks.

The contracting parties will be Miss Ella Murray of Missouri, 8 feet 1 inch tall, weighing something over 400 lbs., and Edward Beaupre, "The Montana Cowboy," who tips the scale at 367 lbs. and is 8 feet tall.

Miss Murray's father, it is said, has tried in vain for some time to induce someone to marry her, offering a home and liberal expense money as an inducement. A party assembled at a local hotel and decided to write to Miss Murray and tell her about Beaupre and ask her if she would fall in love with him.

Beaupre, when approached on the subject, agreed to the proposition and said that he would remain in this neighborhood a reasonable time to get her reply.

Beaupre is a Montana boy by birth, is 21 years old and has never been out of the State. It is the first time he ever visited the capital of the State. Butte is the largest city he ever saw. He is a cowboy, wears No. 22 shoes and never had a glove on his hands. His clothing has to be made to order. His smooth and bland face gives him a boyish appearance, but in stature he is colossal.

The giant is unable to find a bed large enough to accommodate him in any of the hotels, so he has to content himself with a mattress on the floor.

VICTORIA MUSEUM

Some of the Recent Gifts Made—There is Room for More

Lt.-Col. H. C. Rogers, President of the Historical Society, contributes the following letter concerning the affairs of the society in connection with the Museum.

Peterborough, Jan. 31st.

To the Press of Peterborough.—

Gentlemen,—On behalf of the Peterborough Town and County Historical Society, I would ask you to kindly remind the public that the Victoria Museum, in Inverlea Park, though temporarily closed during the winter months, is always open for the reception of relics and curios, so that the already good beginning towards a valuable collection may not lack completion from forgetfulness. Allow me at the same time to point out that the articles received either as gifts or loans, may be of no intrinsic value, but acquire value from rarity, association or circumstances.

Let me give an instance where an ordinary article becomes interesting from its history. A few days ago our townsman, Mr. Stephen Coveney, brought me an old battered hammer, whose story I will give in his own written words:

"I am only a poor old hammer. Before 1855 I worked in the Plymouth dock yard; my owner was one George Ancock; he was a ship carpenter on board the Victory. I was his right hand man. I then worked in Woolwich dock yard, where my boss died, and then his son had me, and during his time the Crimean war broke out, and I was taken on His Majesty's ship Agamemnon, Sir Charles Napier's flag ship. After the war was over I went to Chatham dock yard and was given to Walter Ancock, a captain of a raising barge. It was there that my face got so badly smashed. About 25 years ago I was given to my present owner."

(Signed) STEPHEN COVENEY.

Mr. J. H. Burnham has recently secured for the Museum a unique Indian relic, found in Dummer, pronounced by Mr. Boyle of the Archaeological Museum, of Toronto, to be "a hammer stone used by the Indians at their dances and ceremonial pow wows; and it is the only one found so far east as Peterborough—all hitherto found were south of a line from Toronto to Goderich." Mr. Burnham also found a directory for '67 and '68, and some Crown Land reports, with maps of the same date. I feel confident that many interesting relics and records are lying in people's storerooms and garrets neglected and seldom seen, which if placed in the museum would be giving pleasure to many, and would be preserved for posterity.

Anything left with me at the post office or given to Mr. May, the secretary, will receive attention and acknowledgement and be placed in the museum prior to its opening in April.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, in advance for making this plea to our fellow-citizens, who should, I think, be equally interested in this work, I beg to remain

Your obedient servant,
H. C. ROGERS,
Pres. P. H. Socy.

AN INDIAN PRINCESS COMING TO CANADA

Princess Sophie Bamba Dhuleep Singh to Live in Toronto

She is the Daughter of the Maharajah of Lahore India, and is Studying Medicine

Chicago, Feb. 4 — Princess Sophie Bamba Dhuleep Singh has determined to leave the Northwestern University Women's medical School, where she has been studying.

On her daily trips between her home, at 464 West Adams street, and the school, the daughter of the Maharajah of Lahore has been pelted with lumps of snow.

"Such a thing would not be permitted in England," she said, "I never encountered such rude young people in all my life. I shall leave Chicago and continue my studies in the Women's Medical College of Toronto. I want no more of the United States. I like democracy, but I dislike rudeness."

The princess came to Chicago last fall from England and entered the Women's Medical School.

NARROWLY ESCAPED DEATH

Two Young Men in Douro Have a Narrow Escape from Death

A very serious accident occurred on Thursday last on Mr. J. Charlton's bush farm in Douro. Mr. Wm. Charlton and C. Curtin were engaged in cutting down a tree when a blast of wind caught the tree and broke it across the cut. In its descent it fell across a leaning tree which caused the butt to fly up into the air. Mr. Charlton was struck by it and thrown about ten feet into the air and landed in a brush heap. He sustained several severe bruises besides having his lip split open, nose broken and collar bone cracked. He remained at the camp until next day when he went to Lakefield on a load of posts.

FLEET PROCEEDS TO BATTLE

Warships of Columbian Government Sail to Meet the Enemy.

Panama, Columbia, Feb 4—The fleet of the Columbian Government, composed of the gunboats Boyaca and Chucuito, and the armed launch General Campo, sailed from here last night, having received orders to communicate with the Columbian General, Castro, by all means. General Castro is on the Azura peninsula, southwest of Panama, and has not been heard from in some time. An engagement between the vessels of the government and the fleet of the Colombian Liberals, composed of the gunboats Parilla, Darien and Gaitan, will probably take place at Yeguala, thirty miles from here, the place where the Government and Liberal vessels had an indecisive encounter yesterday.

The True Tragedy of Life

Is ill-health, disappointed ambitions, usefulness destroyed. Pathetic! nay, tragic. Poor blood, weak nerves, a tired brain. Is there hope? Yes! Because there is a cure.

Ferrozone Tablets make blood; not blue blood, but the fluid that strengthens the whole body. Ferrozone does this quickly by improving digestion, stimulating assimulation and by imparting health and tone to the whole system. Ormond & Walsh, druggists, will tell you a great deal more about Ferrozone. Ask them to tell you of the wonderful curative properties of Ferrozone Tablets.

Holland trys to Get Boers Out of Trouble

HOLLAND VERY ANXIOUS

Wants the United States to Help the Boers Out of Trouble

Washington, Feb. 4—In addition to its overtures to Great Britain to bring about peace in South Africa, the Government of the Netherlands has informally approached the United States Government with the understood purpose of securing its aid to induce Great Britain to consent to treating with the Boers. The subject has been discussed by Secretary Hay with members of the diplomatic corps, notably with Baron Gevers, the Minister of Holland, and presumably with Lord Pauncefote, the British Embassador, but in no case has the matter ever progressed beyond verbal exchanges.

Baron Gevers was at the State Department yesterday and had a brief conversation with Secretary Hay. In the talks between the Secretary of State and the Minister of Holland neither official has committed his Government in any way, and no suggestion or proposal has been reduced to writing. Neither side has regarded these exchanges of views as official, although notes of the conversations may have been made, and with propriety, for the information of the Dutch Government and President Roosevelt.

The attitude of the Roosevelt Administration is similar to that of the Administration of Mr. McKinley. This Government is adhering to the rule that in a war between civilized nations, an offer of mediation cannot properly be made unless both parties to the conflict request it, or it is known that such an offer will be favorably received. While Mr. McKinley was President he went so far as he believed to be proper in suggesting to Great Britain that the United States Government would be glad to serve as the intermediary for the transmission of any message to the Boers. The response of Great Britain left no doubt of the purpose of that Government to conduct the Boer war without outside diplomatic aid, and the tone of its answer was aptly described in a headline in The Sun, "To all Nations; hands off."

Recently Boer representatives in this country have made frequent appeals to the State Department to take some action to bring about a cessation of hostilities, but in view of the British Government's attitude and the rule mentioned, no further action has been taken, although it cannot be said that Secretary Hay has not discussed the subject privately with Lord Pauncefote. Should, however, the British Government and authorized representatives of the Boers show any indication of being willing to accept the good offices of the United States, President Roosevelt will act promptly.

A FREE LIBRARY FOR PETERBOROUGH

Carnegie has invaded Canada with his gifts of ten and twenty thousand dollars for public libraries, with the customary condition attached of maintenance by the municipality. Let us consider this question for a moment: Is it undignified to receive gifts from a foreigner? England did it with Peabody and has done it with a hospital ship in South African waters, and in many other cases which we cannot call to mind just now. Should Peterborough refuse such a gift? We think not. It would be setting an example in squeamishness that would lack all precedent. The precedents are all the other way. There remains then merely the question of asking for a gift. Here we pause. We, therefore, say that if Mr. Carnegie chooses to give us a handsome donation we would take it and go half way to receive it. Why not then go the half way first and he might see us. Suspecting our intention he might come the other half—with the money.

As to maintenance, the endowment by Mrs. Nicholls would no doubt help us out unless some blockhead raised an objection, which we think improbable. Couldn't somebody start the report that we want a Carnegie gift so that he would hear of it!

Paine's Celery Compound

THE TRUSTED AND NEVER-FAILING MEDICINE IN HOMES WHERE SICKNESS PREVAILS

As the sun daily diffuses its light and heat for the benefit of rich and poor, so do the life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound bless the sick in granite mansion and humble cottage. To-day, it is the trusted and popular medicine in our Canadian homes.

Paine's Celery Compound makes pure, rich and healthy blood by driving poison germs from the system. It is the true food for weak and shattered nerves. It invigorates and gives new tone to the system. It gives the refreshing sleep so necessary to brain and nerve centres. It brings buoyancy of spirit in place of lassitude and despondency. It makes sick people well and strong. Mrs. Anna Dawson, Willsesport, Ont., says:

"I consider it a pleasure and a duty to put on record what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. I have been afflicted with nervousness and sleeplessness, and at times have been without sleep for fifty hours. All ordinary medicines failed, and nothing else met my case until I used Paine's Celery Compound. Now I never miss a night's sleep. I strongly recommend your medicine to all nervous sufferers."

THE WATER COMMISSIONERS

Messrs. Hill and Matthews the Choice of the People

The ratepayers of the Town performed a new duty yesterday for the first time, that of electing from the ranks of the business men of the town two men who are to act with Mayor Denne as water commissioners. Considerable interest was taken in the election, from the opening till the closing of the polls conveyances of different kinds were busily engaged in taking voters to the polls.

The supporters of the different candidates were sure their particular man would be elected and it came as a great surprise to many that the vote polled in some instances was large while in others it was small.

The following is the result of the polls:

T. F. Matthews	633	votes
W. H. Hill	604	"
Geo Ball	480	"
John Belcher	300	"
Adam Dawson	185	"
Wm. Fair	85	"
T. E. Bradburn	25	"

The first two, Messrs. T. F. Matthews and W. H. Hill were declared elected.

Mr. T. E. Bradburn was absent from town on nomination day and did not return until Thursday night and although his name appeared on the ballot he declined the honor of election and asked the ratepayers not to vote for him.

Mr. Bell's Vain Effort

Mr. F. Bell, the efficient Clerk of Smith, attempted to drive to Chemong yesterday, but was unable to get through. The drifts were of enormous depth and are totally impassable. Like De Wet, he was forced to track [illegible] and never his tracks.

HOME FROM THE WAR

Major Forrest and Two of His Comrades In Arms

Who Served With Gen. Howard. Arrived in the City Yesterday.

Ottawa, Feb. 4—After two years' service in South Africa a small detachment of khaki-clad Canadians arrived in the Capital yesterday morning. The latest arrivals from the seat of war are Sergt.-Major A. H. Forest, Ottawa; Sergt. D. Hinch, Guelph, and Trooper H. Bredin, Calgary. Forest and Hinch first served in D battery, R.C.A., and Bredin enlisted in the C.M.R. When their terms expired all three enlisted in Howard's scouts. They are members of a party of ten who returned to Canada by way of England.

Speaking of the war they took a pessimistic view of the situation. Bredin stated that at the present state of going it is hard to say when the war will be terminated. The Boers are scattered over a wide area fighting in small detachments. In many cases their farms have been overrun, their houses destroyed and their wives and families placed in concentration camps. They have thus nothing at stake and are practically tramps under arms.

Questioned regarding the alleged ill-treatment of Boer prisoners in the concentration camps the three Canadians stated emphatically that there is absolutely no ground for complaint or adverse criticism. "Why the Boer prisoners are fed better and treated better all round, than the British soldiers were," was Bredin's statement.

The three Canadians were with the main body of Howard's scouts when the gallant leader was shot down a half mile away. By the aid of an interpreter they secured many particulars from Howard's colored companion. The latter stated that his master was wounded twice by Boers in ambush.

Mr. John Crane was re-appointed auditor.

THE TOWN COUNCIL IN REGULAR SESSION

Firemen Granted Increase of Salary---Children's Aid Society to Get $300

The Town Council met last night in special session. Those present were: Mayor Denne, Aldermen Best, Corkery, Batten, Clinkscale, Morrison, McGregor, Rush, Roger, Shortly and Edgecumbe. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Jas. Ellis, stating that Mr. Frank Peck had been wrongly assessed for a dog in 1901. Mr. Peck had been out of town and the dog in question belonged to Mr. Ellis, for which he had a tag, and asking tax to be remitted.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From A. Stevenson Secretary of the Trent Water Conservation Association, setting forth the objects of the Association, and asking the Town Council to appoint a deputation to wait on Hon. A. G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals, in support of a deputation from the Association, which will go to Ottawa in the near future.—Referred to Manufacturers' Committee, with power to act.

From H. F. Ackerman, D. J. Lundy, and ten others asking the council not to allow the Auburn Power Co. to put a line of poles along Dalhousie street, as it will spoil the appearance of the street.—Referred to Board of Works.

From David Curtis, stating that he was a resident of Ashburnham since Sept. 1900, and had received a notice to pay poll tax, and asking Council to have his name taken off the roll as he is not a resident in this municipality.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From E. H. D. Hall, Town Solicitor, enclosing deed of waterworks, together with all property belonging to the Water Co., also stating that he had the discharges of the mortgages to the Canada Life, registered.—Received.

From E. C. Wesley, E. C. Hall, H. T. Foot, enclosing affadavits to the effect that they did not own dogs in 1901, and asking remission of dog tax.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From Chas. H. Huffman, objecting to any more poles being erected on Dalhousie street, and asking the Board of Works to take action in the matter and try and arrange for Auburn Power Co. and Peterborough Light and Power Co. to use same poles.—Referred to Board of Works.

From Michael Farrel, asking remission of dog tax for 1900, as he only resided in town for three months.—Referred to Court of Revision.

From Frank McPherson, stating he was assessed for store on George st. last year and was also down for poll tax. He asked poll tax to be remitted.—Referred to Court of Revision.

Referred to Finance Committee.

LEGAL COMMITTEE.

Ald. Edgecumbe presented the report of the Legal Committee, as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:—

Gentlemen,—Your Legal Committee beg leave to report and recommend that upon the Canadian Cordage Company returning to the Town Trust Commissioners for cancellation the deed given to them by the Commissioners of a part of Bethune street, the Cordage Co. be permitted to place a siding on Bethune street to their works on the corner of Parry and Bethune streets to the approval of the Town Engineer and subject to such terms as the Council may fix by By-law, and to claims for damages of any persons injured thereby.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The report was adopted.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Ald. Roger presented the report of the Finance Committee, as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Your Finance Committee beg leave to report as follows:

MUNICIPAL NOTES

—James Wilkes, ex-city treasurer of Brantford, celebrated his ninety-third birthday on the 27th of December. He was born in Birmingham, England, on December 28th, 1808, and came to Brantford in 1823. At that time the place was little more than an Indian trading post, and Mr. Wilkes was one of those who took part in a meeting a few years later to finally select a title for the then growing village. After some discussion "Brant's Ford" was decided upon, afterwards by common usage becoming shortened "Brantford." Considering his age Mr. Wilkes enjoys exceptional good health.

•• • ••

—A portable refuse burner is in use in the city of Galveston, Texas, which [illegible] means of getting rid of a [illegible] large amount of the city refuse. The burner accompanies the collection wagon and all matters which will burn readily is placed therein, and as soon as the burner is full the contents are ignited. A large amount of the city collections are handled in this way, and the scheme saves a great deal in hauling and also the cost of erecting expensive incinerators.

•• • ••

—In Chicago and some other western towns the franchise of placing paper-collecting boxes on the streets is given out to a concern that agrees to place and maintain the boxes, and to empty them at regular intervals. The company's profits consist of the paper thus collected and the revenue derived from placing advertisements on the four sides of the box.

•• • ••

—The city attorney of Fort Worth, Texas, has been directed to frame an ordinance which will suppress the cocaine habit and make it impossible for the victims of the drug to secure their supplies in the city.

•• • ••

—The members of the city fire department of Milwaukee will be instructed in the construction and operation of elevators. It is thought that the knowledge will often be useful at fires.

•• • ••

—In the Ontario Legislature Mr. Hill has given notice of an act to prevent the establishment of consumptive hospitals in municipalities without the consent of the local Boards of Health.

•• • ••

—Mr. Pattullo has given notice that he will introduce an act to amend the Municipal Act to prevent the granting by municipalities of bonuses to manufactures already established elsewhere in the province.

•• • ••

—Mr. McDiarmid, of West Elgin, has introduced an Act in the Ontario Parliament to abolish poll tax.

•• • ••

—A deputation of municipal representatives waited on the Ontario Government a few days ago to urge the establishment of an experimental station for the better treatment of sewage. The question is a live one in many towns.

A PROCLAMATION

We possess all the modern and up-to-date facilities for conducting a reliable and first-class drug business. When you favor us with your doctor's prescription, our best efforts are put forth to make that prescription what it should be—professionally correct in the minutest details.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

This medicine is giving marvellous results to sick people all over Canada. The wonderful cures effected by Paine's Celery Compound during the past year speaks volumes in favor of the popular medicine. Thousands who have suffered from rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous troubles and dyspepsia now sing the praises of the medicine that has given them such happy results. JOHN NUGENT, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

A COMBINATION THAT DRAWS

Courteous treatment of customers, pure drugs of full strength, and low prices are all-powerful for the drawing and securing of trade. Our closest attention and best care is at all times devoted to the filling of your physician's prescriptions. Our stock of Perfumes, Toilet preparations, Atomisers, Brushes, Combs and Sponges is unsurpassed in variety and quality. One call will convince you that we are leaders in the drug trade.

A LIFE-GIVING MEDICINE

At this time when thousands are suffering from the common ills of life, we can honestly recommend the use of Paine's Celery Compound. This wonderful medicine is the prescription of one of the most eminent physicians that ever lived. It never fails to restore the sick to health. Thousands of testimonials prove that Paine's Celery Compound permanently cures rheumatism and neuralgia. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

What Became of the Pompeilans?

MAX NORDAU raises an interesting question concerning Pompeii. He writes as follows to the "Neue Freie Presse" (Vienna):

"One thing has always been a puzzle to me. Here was a flourishing city of about 30,000 inhabitants, most of whom evidently were well-to-do. A few hundreds, at most, lost their lives in the destruction of the city; the rest escaped. The eruption of Vesuvius continued only a few days, after which the district returned to its usual placid condition. In many places the deposit of ashes and lava was only a yard thick, and it was not more than three yards thick at any point yet excavated.

"How did it happen that these 30,000 homeless persons showed no desire to return to their beautiful houses, so well built that they are standing to this day, and which could have been restored, at the time, with very little labor? Why did they not make the slightest attempt to regain their valuable property in land and buildings, furniture, bronze, gold, silver and jewels? Did the men of that time have so little love of home that they could leave it without a backward glance at the first unpleasantness? Were the Pompeiians so rich that the loss of their perfectly appointed homes appeared trivial to them, so that they preferred settling elsewhere to restoring their city? Or did superstition prevent the attempt?

"This indifferent renunciation of their patrimony by a whole cityful is to me an insoluble enigma which forces itself the more strongly upon my attention now as I walk along the finely paved streets between houses which need only new roofs to make them again habitable."

For Sale—An Island Kingdom.

The chance is now open to any millionaire to own an island kingdom or to become a Highland lord and live in an historic castle. The advertisement offering these estates appeared in some United States newspapers, and was signed by the business agent of the Duke of Argyll.

"The Island Kingdom of Tiree," as the advertisement calls it, is one of the Inner Hebrides, an island about thirteen miles long and nowhere more than six miles wide. It is only twenty feet above the level of the sea, and there are hardly any trees on it; but the land is mostly fertile, and the tenants, who live by farming, cattle-raising and fishing, pay the duke rentals aggregating more than fifteen thousand dollars a year.

"Excellent winter bathing, good golf links, splendid beaches, safe bathing and good sea-fishing" are some of the island's attractions that might be expected to appeal to a purchaser.

Inverary Castle, Argyllshire, the ancestral abode of the Dukes of Argyll, is also advertised; but it is not an ancient building. The oldest part of it dates back to a period not earlier than 1756, and much of the castle has been rebuilt since 1877.

The scenes pictured by Scott in the "Legend of Montrose" were supposed to have taken place in what is known as the "old" castle, which stood near the sea and has been quite swept away. No such romantic interest attaches to the present castle.

But the man who buys the island kingdom of Tiree—or Tyree, as some of the books call it—will probably find in modern fiction a good many allusions to it. From the novels of William Black alone might be compiled a pretty good guide-book to the Hebrides, islands that, as another admirer has said, are "beautiful in calm, wonderful in storm."

President Loubet's Wardrobe

A correspondent of the "Cri de Paris" has ascertained certain facts in regard to President Loubet's wardrobe which are being copied with extraordinary avidity by the Parisian and provincial press. It seems that M. Loubet has five Prince Albert coats—two for summer, two for winter, and one extra for grand occasions. This last one has been worn only three times—at the opening of the exposition of 1900, at the reception of the King of Sweden, and at the garden party in honor of the Shah of Persia. This "gala" coat differs from the others in that it has heavy silk lining and lapels. M. Loubet invariably wears a plain, black satin tie—not tied by hand, but sewn together and attached with a clasp. M. Loubet used formerly to wear false cuffs, but one day, while making a sudden gesture, the right-hand cuff slipped off and rolled on the floor. This happened at the Luxembourg Palace when M. Loubet was president of the Senate. Since then, M. Loubet's shirts have been made with permanently attached wristbands. M. Loubet's trousers are very peculiar. They are black or gray in color, but their cut is of the old-fashioned pattern, with the top of the trousers coming up as high as the armpits. M. Loubet has always worn trousers of this quaint type, and is so accustomed to them that he has an inveterate dislike for evening clothes, which, with low-cut, open waistcoat, render the armpit trousers impossible. The president's wardrobe is, however, provided with several pairs of evening trousers suitable for low-cut, open waistcoats.

Australia's Governor-General.

It is feared in some quarters that the Earl of Hopetoun will not be able to complete his term as Governor-General of Australia. His Lordship has never entirely shaken off the effects of the illness which prostrated him in India on his way out to Australia, and though he was really prominent as the host of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall, he has since, owing to his unsatisfactory health, been unable to fulfil many of his public engagements.

A NATURALIST once came upon an Ourang-Outang while the latter was taking his siesta under a banyan tree in a forest. The Naturalist viewed him for a time in silence and then apostrophized him as he might had little Harold been present.

"Base brute, thou liest there with no thought beyond the gratification of thy instincts! And yet scientists tell us that man, the noblest work of God, has evolved from such as thee. Insensate animal! Thou hast never had the glorious privilege of eating of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil."

"Pardon me!" said the Ourang-Outang, awakening suddenly from slumber, "I've had a few nibbles. Several years ago, a Scientist visited our wood, and he and I became quite chummy. He was always urging me to evolve and contended that it was quite an easy job. All I had to do, he said, was to strike fire with flint, make some stone implements and mud pottery, and haul off my neighbor's wife, thus establishing the sacred institution of the Family; but I have a strain of caution in my blood, and, as you see, I have rather a tidy berth here, so I demurred at the idea of exerting myself so tremendously for the doubtful good of obtaining something he called 'Progress.'

"Well, the more I hung back, the more the Scientist urged and coaxed; so we finally decided that if he would pay all the expenses, I would take a trip around the world with him and study various phases of civilisation, and then, if I thought the game worth the candle, I would evolve for him while he waited.

"I assure you, I never was so fagged in my life. He hauled me over land and sea and showed me pleasures and palaces, steam yachts and automobiles, libraries and pictures, wine, women and song—in a word, the kingdoms of earth.

"When I had seen them all, I said, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.' This splendid civilization is a masterpiece, but a masterpiece of fools. Half of the civilised toil that the other half may play various silly games that they call Society, Power and Fame."

"What did he reply to this?" asked the Naturalist.

"He had no time to make reply," answered the Ourang-Outang. "Knowing him as well as I did, I was quite sure that he would convert the entire Bander-log people to his views and have all the monkeys in the country doing various stunts in their frantic efforts to evolve; so I simply cracked his head open with a cocoanut and disposed of the question without further argument."—Mrs. Wilson Woodrow in A Fox's Revenge.

A gentleman out shooting one day came to a river, where he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth. He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then, keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under the water, and the fox soon appeared on the shore with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank, and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. This hole he cleared, placed in it the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left; and while he was away the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole and resolved to wait the issue. In about an hour the fox returned with another fox in company. They went directly to the place where the goose had been buried, and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended by the trick of his friend. During the battle the hunter shot them both.

Curious Bit of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

Anxious Father (from top of stairs)—Say, Mary Jane! Mary Jane—Yes, papa. "Is it eleven o'clock yet?" "Yes, papa." "Well, give the young man my compliments, and ask him to kindly close the front door from the outside."—Chicago "Daily News."

A clergyman observed his little son attentively studying a map of the world. "What place are you looking for, Willie?" he enquired. The small boy knit his brows and traveled a circuitous route with his forefinger before he answered earnestly, "Trying to find [illegible]."

A NOVEL

"Never mind, Marian," he was saying, sadly; "perhaps Mrs. Smythe has seen us, and— and does not care about meeting me."

"Not care! You stupid old Ormande, why, we talk about you all day, wondering why you have never written— what can have happened to you!— and oh, Ormande, she will be so sorry to know that you never got any of my letters, and that you were ill, and had that terrible ship- wreck. Oh, you can't, you must not go away without seeing her. I wonder where she has gone! Katharine, Katharine!" the lame girl was quivering with excitement. "Oh, dear, dear Ormande, I nearly fainted when you came before us so suddenly; I thought you were a ghost; even my dear old Craven seemed startled, and he never knows any one but Katharine. Ah, and that is only right, Ormande; she has been an angel to him; she won't let any one do anything for him but herself; not even me or Aunt Blanche, and he seems to cling to her, and who could help it? You must promise to like her very much, Ormande, she is so sweet and lovely. Oh, dear, where can she be? I must find her; and you are tired, dear Ormande."

Ormande had indeed come to a stand still, and was leaning with one hand on a tree; he was very pale, and a trembling ran through his limbs.

Marian looked troubled, and then a bright idea struck her.

"You stay here, Ormande, and I will find her. Don't move dear; I will come back directly," and giving him a kiss she hobbled away as quickly as she could, leaving Ormande with his eyes fixed on a certain dark patch seen through the trees to his right hand. As Marian's voice died away in the distance, he roused himself, and with one moment's pause, he turned and strode toward that patch.

The next instant he was kneeling at Katharine's feet, kissing her hands, and clinging to them as to something more precious even than life itself.

"Forgive me! Katharine, forgive me!" was all he could say, and she, as she felt the touch of his hands on hers, heard his clear voice ringing in her ears, seemed to be once more in that paradise which had been hers for one brief moment on the day he told her of his love.

"Do not kneel," she whispered; "I have nothing to forgive."

Ormande rose to his feet slowly.

"Nothing to forgive!— my darling, my angel, have I not wronged you beyond all bounds!— aye, up to only three days ago, was I not wronging you still? You may be generous to me, Katharine, but I can never forgive myself for having doubted you as I did."

"You did me no wrong," she said; "had I been in your place, I should have done the same. Do not let us speak of it; it is dead and forgotten. Tell me of yourself— what you have done, what has happened to you, and why you have come so suddenly upon us, frightening us out of our lives, when we thought you many, many miles away?"

Ormande turned hurriedly, brushing hot tears from his eyes, and then he gave her the history of himself— how he had volunteered as a missionary and left England immediately after their last meeting; how illness had fallen on him, and he had been moved from one unknown spot to another, until finally he had been compelled, through ill-health, to make an attempt to return to England; and in doing so, was shipwrecked and nearly drowned; how he had endeavored to get letters sent away, and to obtain such as might be waiting for him at the various stations, but with no success whatever; and how, three days ago, when he had landed at Southampton, he had met Mr. Montrose, who had told him of all that had occurred since he left England.

"I determined at once to come here and entreat your forgiveness, Katharine," he finished humbly; "and I see now I ought to have written, but I was too nervous, too frightened lest you should not receive me, that I resolved to come here without a word, and——"

"And give us all a most shocking fright," said Katharine, with a smile beautifying her eyes and lips. She paused for a second, and then said, "And the letters that Miss Mostyn has received from you every week, Lord Orway?"

Ormande turned and looked at her.

"Letters from me to Barbara Mostyn!" was all he observed, but his tone was contempt itself for a moment, then it changed suddenly. "Ah, Katharine, can you ask me such a question? And yet why not? — I doubted you, and you——"

Katharine put her hand on his arm.

"Let us say no more," she whispered, softly.

Ormande seized both her hands in his, his face was flushed with delight beyond expression.

"Katharine," he murmured, "my darling! Is it my darling, indeed?"

"If you care to take her, Ormande," was the answer given with a blush.

And to this Ormande made a short but tender reply.

Lady Clara Lennox was driving through Bond street one cold December day, when she suddenly stopped her carriage for a moment to speak to two ladies who stood waiting on the pavement for theirs to drive up.

"Just come from Tanolming with the Thanescourts, and I am going down to stay with them next week. Katharine warns me it will be very quiet; naturally, with the earl so recently dead. You must call on her, Barbara, dear; she is looking positively lovely, and to see them together is most delightful. He simply worships the ground she treads on!"

Barbara Mostyn's face grew black with mortification.

"Does he worship that fool, Craven Adair, too?" she asked, roughly; "it is not every husband would permit that condition of affairs, Clara. Why doesn't the brougham come? I am nearly frozen!"

"Oh, every one understands that, dear," Lady Clara answered sweetly. "Your very dear friend, Lady Blanche, calls Katharine an angel for her goodness to that poor man; and so she is, as lovely as she is good. I prophesy she will be the rage in the spring when she is presented; there is not a woman I know who can compare with her."

Barbara glared at the speaker.

"New brooms sweep clean with you, everybody knows that, Clara, especially if the brooms happen to have plenty of money," she observed, tartly.

"Thank you, dear. Here is your brougham at last. By the [illegible] bara, I was asking Lord Thanescourt to-day how it was his letters to you always came so regularly, while the rest of the family never received one! He said it was certainly an odd coincidence, and it was, wasn't it? Good-by, dear. Take care of yourself until we meet again!"

Barbara clenched her hands and ground her teeth as she was bowled along.

"Everywhere she triumphs, and I am beaten!" she muttered, savagely. "I shall go out of England; I cannot stand this— her happiness mocking me at every turn. How I hate her! If ever the day comes when I can do it, I will settle with her for all scores, no matter how small or old!"

But time has gone, and as yet Miss Mostyn, who is Miss Mostyn still, has found no means to gratify her mean spite and revenge.

The center of a loving, admiring throng— revered by all who know her, from Lady Blanche Bellaire down to the humblest servant in her household— the happiest wife and mother in the land— such is the fate of Katharine, Countess of Thanescourt.

The End.

A MINOR IN THE CAROL

There's a minor in the carol, there's a knell in every chime,
Floating through the misty daylight
this returning Christmas time;
There's a cloud upon the mountain,
there's a sorrow on the sea,
Those who once made Christmas brighter now will come no more to me.

Holly berries, pale your redness, O
be still, sweet mistletoe,
As the yule-log's falling embers, let us see the long ago.
Stay the dancers' feet, a moment,
hush awhile the merry tune;
Sorrow turns her darkened pages—reads again each tear-marked rune.

They were beautiful and noble, they were tender, they were gay—
Laughed with us and bore our burden, turned our darkest night
to day;
But when Christmas comes recalling,
there's a catching of the breath,
And its vibrant joy is muffled by the chilly hand of death.

Yet shall Memory wave her sceptre —show them once more as they were,
Love recall each form and feature;
fill each sad and vacant chair,
While we hear the joy-bells ringing,
sing the carol glad and free;
Join once more the feast, well ordered,
joyous as it used to be.

And, if Memory thus be regnant, shall not Faith's strong angel-
hand,
Yet dispel the doubting spectres that around us grimly stand—
Teach us now to grasp the Future,
as we hold the precious Past;
And believe that Somewhere, Some Day, we shall clasp our own at last!

—Bernard McEvoy.

WOLVES ARE PLENTIFUL

An American Timber Ranger Treed by Them in Haliburton County

Wolves are reported to be very numerous in the wilds of Haliburton this year. A few days ago a party of Americans were in the vicinity of Dorset inspecting timber, and one of the party strayed from the others, and when about two miles away, heard the mournful howl of the wolf. On looking around he saw a large pack of the hungry brutes after him, and at once scaled a high tree. He remained for some hours in the tree-top, when his comrades found him and drove off the wolves, killing many of them, and released their friend.

In view of the bounty of $10 on a wolf, we are surprised that our local sports spend money and time in shooting rabbits, when they could make more money in the north country hunting wolves.

Anecdotal

Once, when passing through a cemetery, Eliot Gregory was surprised to see that the members of one old New England family had been buried in a circle, with their feet toward its center. He asked the reason for this arrangement, and a wit of that day, daughter of Mrs. Stowe, replied: "So that when they rise at the Last Day, only members of their own family may face them!"

Prof. Syle (pronounced Sill), of the State University of California, must be either a boor or a smart Aleck, if the following story told by the "Argonaut" is true, and the general verdict will be "Served him right." The other day, says the "Argonaut," while calling the roll of one of his classes, Professor Sill came to the name of a Miss Greene. He paused and expressed his disapproval of the final e in her name by saying: "G-r-e-e-n-e, does that spell Green or Greenie?" Miss Greene promptly replied: "S-y-l-e, does that spell Syle or Sillie?"

"It is a shame," John Randolph once said in the United States Senate, "that the bull-dogs of the administration should waste their time in worrying the rats of the Opposition." The members constituting "the Opposition" groaned, hissed, and called him to order. The presiding officer ruled that he was in order, and Randolph, springing to his feet, pointed at his antagonists and screamed: "Did I say rats? I meant mice, mice, Mr. President."

James McNeil Whistler was recently dining with a friend in London. Suddenly, when all had dined and were back in the drawing-room, Whistler said that he had almost forgotten it, but he absolutely must write a letter and get it off by the night's post. He was told that in a room at the head of the first flight of stairs he would find the lights burning and pens, paper and ink at his disposal. He went up, and presently there was heard a series of bumps, ending in a heavy thud at the foot of the stairs. The master had tripped, lost his balance, and came near having a bad fall. The host ran to him and asked if he was hurt. "I am not killed, if that's what you mean!" Whistler replied; "but, tell me, who built those stairs?" The host mentioned the name of a builder unknown either to Whistler or to fame. "Humph, he did, eh? The d—d teetotaler," said Whistler.

Booker T. Washington tells an amusing story of an old colored preacher who was endeavoring to explain to his congregation how it was that the Children of Israel passed over the Red Sea safely, while the Egyptians, who came after them, were drowned. The old man said: "My brethren, it was this way: When the Israelites passed over, it was early in the morning, while it was cold, and the ice was strong enough so that they went over all right; but when the Egyptians came along it was in the middle of the day, and the sun had thawed the ice so that it gave way under them, and they were drowned." At this, a young man in the congregation, who had been away to school and had come home, rose and said: "I don't see how that explanation can be right, parson. The geography that I've been studying tells us that ice never forms under the equator, and the Red Sea is nearly under the equator." "There, now," said the old preacher, "that's all right. I's been 'spectin' some of you smart Alecks would be askin' just some such fool question. The time I was talkin' about was before they had any jogafries or 'quators either."

All flower-lovers who read Elizabeth and her German Garden and who sympathized deeply with the heroine in her hopes and fears over her ventures, will be interested in this letter from the writer herself, who is the Countess Von Arnim, an Englishwoman married to a titled German, though not, one will hope for her sake, "The Man of Wrath" in verity. The letter was sent in answer to one written by a gentleman in Ottawa who owns a beautiful rose-garden; it will be seen that she understood the meaning of the "N'Importe Qui," which he pretended to hide, and her gay humor is shown in her own signature, which she would veil under a similar play upon words. This is the way she writes on paper with an odd red crest, and with envelope postmarked with some illegible German words:

"Dear M. Nampont Key:

"Your charming letter has so puffed me up with pride that far from being modest, I am unbearable. Your rose fills me with envy—how lovely it is. If I had one here it would not grow, the climate is so changeable. We have frost sometimes in August. All my tea roses that I wrote about are dead and frozen, in spite of more tender attention and covering than the babies get even. This autumn, greatly daring, I start fresh ones.

"I think I must make an expedition to America, the letters I get from there are so delightful, and I should so much enjoy seeing my unknown friends' gardens. It was so kind of you to send me a photograph of a bit of yours.

"Believe me,
"Yours very gratefully,
"Elizabeth—Nampont Kwa."

A Whimsical Fable.

One of the most whimsical fables about the Knickerbocker settlement in New Amsterdam, to which the descent of President Roosevelt gives interest, concerns the acquisition of Manhattan Island. The Dutchmen wanted to buy; the Red Indian was not indisposed to sell. So a "deal" was arranged. For a specified amount of cash as much of the island was to become the property of the Hollander as he could cover with his nether garments. His name was Ten Broeck (scottice, "ten breeks," anglice, "ten pairs of breeches"). But of this the too confiding savage was unaware. When Ten Broeck calmly proceeded to disrobe himself, and to spread his voluminous clothing on the island—which he succeeded in covering entirely—the look of mingled chagrin and amazement on the chief's usually impassive face must have baffled description. However, the noble Red Man buried his hatchet, puffed away at his calumet, and stood by his bargain, while all the time realizing the force of Canning's epigram that "in matters of commerce the fault of the Dutch is giving too little and asking too much." And that—again to fall back on legend—is why expansive garments of Dutch cut are called "knickerbockers" even unto this day.

Anecdotal.

Mark Twain tells a story of a man who received a telegram telling him that his mother-in-law had died, and asking: "Shall we embalm, bury, or cremate her?" Twain says he wired back: "Yes, and if these fail, try dissection."

A clergyman, visiting a house where an infant was dying in convulsions, remarked to the aged nurse that it was too bad to see a baby in such pain. "Ah, sir," replied the pious woman, "it says in the Good Book, 'Suffer little children to come unto me,' and I tell you they do suffer."

When General Sheridan was camping on the lower Mississippi, his negro boy, Harry, was one day asked by a friend whether the general was not terribly annoyed by the mosquitoes. "No, sah," said Harry; "in the evenin' Marsa's so 'toxicated he don't mind the skeeters an' in the mornin' the skeeters is so 'toxicated they don't mind Marsa."

When Sidney Smith was rector of a parish in Yorkshire he found his vestry were discussing the propriety of paving the approach to the church with wooden blocks. There was a good deal of perturbation over ways and means, however. "Gentlemen," said the witty rector, "I think if you will all put your heads together, as the saying is, the thing can be accomplished without much difficulty."

A Scottish member of Parliament, in an address to his constituents, assured his hearers that he was not an idle member of the House, and that during the last two years he had put no less than one hundred and eighty-two questions to the speaker and the members of the government. "What an ignorant auld beggar ye must be!" cried a voice from the crowd.

The revivalist, "Sam" Jones, was once taking women to task for spending more time in prinking than in praying. "If there's a woman here," he screamed, finally, "who prays more than she prinks, let her stand up." One poor old, faded specimen of femininity, in the sorriest, shabbiest of clothes, arose. "You spend more time praying than prinking?" asked the preacher, taking her all in. The poor old creature said she did—prayed all the time, prinked not at all. "You go straight home," admonished Jones, "and put a little time on your prinking."

While passing Cherbourg, en route from South Africa to London, Cecil Rhodes observed several vessels of the French Channel Squadron drawn up in line to salute the ex-Empress Eugenie's yacht. The Frenchmen, who were spread out on the yards of their vessels, shouted "Vive l'Imperatrice!" The captain of the vessel on which Rhodes was a passenger, wishing to show his respect to the empress, got his men ready to salute, but in the short time at his disposal he could not school his crew to repeat the French words. "Tell them to say 'beef, lemons and cheese,'" suggested Rhodes, playfully, and, to his utter amazement, the yacht was greeted with a deafening yell of "beef, lemons and cheese!" which entirely drowned the voices of the French sailors. The ex-empress is stated to have expressed great pleasure at the compliment afterward.

Curious Bits of News.

Tubes of glass made by lightning are often found in sand. The electricity passes into the ground and melts the siliceous material, forming little pipes, the inside diameter of which represents the "bore" of the "thunderbolt." Such tubes measuring as much as twenty-seven feet in length have been discovered.

The beauties of the New York custom house regulations were again illustrated the other day when an English Freemason, who arrived with his jeweled regalia, was charged full duty on it, and fined for omitting to declare that he had his regalia with him. He had come to take part in a celebration of the order in the United States.

One of the most curious lawsuits ever tried in France has been occupying the attention of the courts. At the last election M. le Provost de Launay, a Royalist senator, desired to have an organ. He went to the editor of a local newspaper, and hired the front page for two months for a given sum. His Republican opponent thought the idea a good one, and hired the second page, so that the readers of the "Journal de Fougeres" were treated on the first page to a eulogy of monarchy and on the second page to praise of the republic. M. de Launay lost the election, and is now suing its editor for breach of contract in leasing the second page to his opponent.

President John I. Sabin of the Chicago Telephone Company has made a popular hit by installing movable phones in fashionable restaurants. You do not have to leave the table to enjoy this luxury. "Waiter, bring me a telephone," is the only order necessary to have a fully equipped long-distance 'phone at your elbow. By simply ordering a telephone a guest may be placed in communication with New York or Denver, or any other city served by the Chicago Telephone Company, without moving from the table at which dinner or luncheon is being served. The new service is very simple. What is termed a "telephone spring-jack" is adjusted to the wall near the table, and when the telephone is ordered the waiter brings the instrument, inserting a plug in the "spring-jack," perfecting direct connection with the main telephone exchange.

As tamers and keepers of animals dark men never succeed, states the Philadelphia "Record." Visits to zoos and to menageries show them to be invariably fair fellows, with yellow or brown hair and with blue eyes. "Thus, at the Zoological Garden, in this city, there is not a keeper who is dark. John McMullen of the lion house has light hair, a yellow moustache and violet orbs. Lover, of the wolves and bears, is still more markedly blond, and in the antelope house, the snake house and the small mammal house light colors still prevail. One of the most pronounced blonds at the Zoo was John Thompson, who is now in Honolulu angling casts of fishes for a museum there. Thompson was one of the most successful keepers the Zoo has ever had. Not only snakes and turtles (his specialty), but lions, foxes, wolves, deer and many other animals took to him naturally, and he was never scratched or bitten."

Ever since the Forth bridge was opened—eleven years ago—painting has gone on continuously, according to the "Mechanical Engineer." "Beginning at the south end, the workmen take three years to cover the entire length of the bridge, and, as three years represents approximately the life of the paint, no sooner are they finished than the men have to begin again. In this way every square inch of steel comes under observation at least once in three years. The staff of men employed varies in number from the maximum of 25."

THE Most Perfect Stove
MADE

THE STAR

Patented March 10th, 1894, BY Geo. Brousseau, Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion— why! The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat forty hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 Star stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is [illegible] by [illegible] feet, with 15 feet ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

BOCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

TIMES PRINTING CO.

We are using one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large rooms where formerly we had four large wood heaters, and get more heat now than before. The wood stoves cost us [illegible] every week for fuel and the Star stove, which we are now using, costs us only [illegible], making a saving of [illegible] per week in the price of fuel—which would soon pay for the stove. We can recommend this stove to any person wanting a first-class heater. We would not use any other stove that is made.

Cancer Growing Two Years

A Remarkable Case Cured Completely by the New Constitutional Remedy.

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad at last that it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life, but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from Cancer or Tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is 'phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—The country roads are badly drifted.

—Spring goods are beginning to arrive.

—Smith Township Council met yesterday at Bridgenorth.

—The men at the cereal works had a day off yesterday.

—Skating is now a popular pastime, the rink being liberally patronized.

—The regular meeting of the Board of Education will be held to-night.

—Some of the streets are so drifted as to be almost impassable.

—At home cards of the latest styles printed at The Times job rooms.

—The 57th Regiment Band will give a concert in the market hall on Friday evening.

—The annual congregational meeting of St. Paul's church, will be held to-morrow evening.

—Coal is $7 per ton in Peterborough, while in Lindsay and elsewhere it is being sold for $6.50. How is this?

—Mr. George Stewart, the County Treasurer, was unable to reach town yesterday from his farm in the country, on account of the storm.

—G. E. Whiten is the people's photographer. Go to him for your best photos. He also frames pictures. Studio, 166 Hunter street west.

—Icy sidewalks are causing many falls. Yesterday an elderly lady fell on Water street, and had to be driven home in a hack.

—Mr. R. M. Roy took a photo of the Crystal Block and the wreck of P. Simon's store yesterday.

—Work on the lift lock is entirely suspended this winter. It will be resumed, however, in the spring.

—Another Basket Social will be held under the auspices of Companion Court Queen I. O. F. on Thursday evening in their hall, over Dutton's store.

—The Crown Corrundum and Mica Company are talking of erecting large works in Peterborough next spring.—Marmora Herald.

—A non-resident was fined $2 on Saturday for not shovelling the snow from the sidewalk in front of his premises.

—Mr. George W. Hatton is now engaged in distributing the $220,000, recently paid for the water works, to the shareholders of the company.

—Complaints have reached The Times that children attend the South Central School from homes where scarlet fever and diptheria exist. There is a most stringent law, with heavy penalties regarding this.

—Lew Falcher, who formerly conducted the Palace Cafe here, is now in charge of the "Fountain Oriental Garden," Queen street, Toronto. He announces a formal opening, with music and free lunch.

Effects of the Storm.

As a result of the snow storm on Sunday the railroads were almost entirely blocked. The midnight express, C.P.R., due here at 12.31 yesterday morning arrived in town at 4.17. The morning express due here at 8.15 arrived at 5.30 last evening being delayed by the blockade of the midnight express a few miles west of Tweed. The morning and evening locals and mid-day express were cancelled.

The midnight express had not left Toronto at 12 o'clock last night. The trains on the G.T.R. were all delayed. No trains had arrived in town up till a late hour last night.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring In and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Miss McKee is visiting friends in Millbrook.

—Mr. J. A. Sutcliffe is in Montreal on business.

—Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Armstrong, of Lindsay, spent Sunday in town.

—Miss Sherlock is the guest of her sister, Mrs. W. B. Tapson, Bowmanville.

—Miss Turner, of Peterborough has been engaged to succeed Miss Hawley as organist in the Methodist church and very efficiently presided at the organ on Sunday last.—Campbellford Despatch.

—Miss White, who is the guest of Mrs. C. B. McAllister, sang a solo, "King of Eternity," in excellent voice at St. Luke's church on Sunday evening.

Peterborough's Next Move

The town of Orillia has gone into the business of supplying electric light and power. It has developed a waterpower on the Severn river seventeen miles from town, and has established a plant at a cost of $125,000. The power developed provides for the future growth of the place and it is now in a position not only to light its own streets and supply light to its townspeople, but also to supply power to manufacturers. Peterborough should lose no time in getting in a civic plant sufficient to supply the whole town—streets and houses alike.

Rheumatic Pains Cured by Nerviline

This is the testimony of Mr. Benjiman Dillon, of Leeds, Ont., who says: I feel it my duty to proclaim the marvellous value of Polson's Nerviline as an infallible cure for rheumatic pains; it cures them every time. Nothing I know of equals it as a household liniment, and mothers should feel it as necessary as bread itself. Nerviline has cured rheumatism of 30 years' standing, and can cure you. Instant relief, absolute cure, large bottle 25c.

Successful At Home.

The Ladies Aid of St. Peter's gave a very pleasant and successful At Home in the rooms of the T.A.S. last night.

The attendance was not as large as usual owing to the unfavorable weather. A very enjoyable evening was spent with music, songs and a progressive euchre party. Refreshments were served by the ladies and altogether the entertainment was a success.

An entertainment under the auspices of the Ladies Reading Circle will be given in the T.A.S. rooms on Thursday evening.

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns Are Popular With All Ladies

THE MANUFACTURERS SEND FULL RANGE OF DESIGNS TO ANY ADDRESS

Mrs. Morton F. Paling, Winnipeg, Man., writes as follows: "The three mat and rug patterns ordered from you are received. They are lovely and far ahead of other designs I have seen. I shall show them to my friends, many of whom are desirous of making up rugs for their homes. Many thanks for your prompt attention to my order. I use your celebrated Diamond Dyes and find them the best."

Ladies who have not yet received sheets of new designs of the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns, will do well to send a postal card with address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P. Q. All designs mailed free to any part of Canada and Newfoundland.

Leaves To-Day for Winnipeg

Mr. Oscar LaBelle, who for the past five years has been engaged as head salesman with the Kingan Hardware Co. has severed his connection with that firm and leaves to-day for Winnipeg, where he has accepted a position with one of the principal wholesale hardware firms in that city. Mr. LaBelle has been a valuable and trusted employee of the Kingan Hardware Co., for years and has made many friends who will be pleased to hear of his success in the west.

Non-Coms Dance

The dance under the auspices of the non-coms of the 57th Regiment to-night promises to be a grand affair. Those having charge of the arrangements are labouring energetically to make the event a success and it is now left for the friends of the regiment to give the undertaking their hearty support. Time pains and expense are nothing to the soldiers and they are not wishing to make money out of the affair, but to keep the name of the regiment in the minds of the public at this season of the year when there is no drill going on.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Letters from the People on Interesting and Timely Topics.

A MISAPPREHENSION CORRECTED

Editor Morning Times.

Dear Sir,—I feel it to be my duty and also a matter of necessity to send a few lines for publication in your paper with reference to a letter that has recently appeared in its columns. The letter places me under an absolute obligation to write in reply: for whether or no anything in it is intended to refer to my own action and practice there may, and doubtless will be, many who will think it does do so and that I am to blame for indiscriminate giving and also for misrepresenting the country.

I therefore wish it to be generally and widely understood that much that comes up to me by stage is not clothing, but toys and presents to go on the Christmas trees, and that if these things were not provided the children of our Sunday School and the members of our Band of Hope would have to go without the gifts and the encouragement they receive, inasmuch as neither could I or the church afford to supply them.

Then, secondly, with regard to most of the clothing that is sent us, it is right it should be known that for the past two years it has been sent with the understanding that we should sell much of it for the sake of obtaining money to meet our mission expenses.

Then with regard to the actual giving of things my judgment and discretion are sometimes called in question. This is no more than I expect, for no matter who gives anything or how much wisdom or judgment is exercised there will always be someone to criticise or misjudge, or who thinks he knows better, or who does not know all the circumstances of the case, or all the motives and reasons which influence one in the distribution of goods:—

1 There are some who are really in need—aged, cripples, widows or orphans—whom I should give to.

2 There are some who are not so much in need but who are worthy of encouragement. They for instance interest themselves much in the church, and spend a good deal of their time, and put themselves to much inconvenience and even loss in its behalf, and to say the least of it they deserve some compensation.

3 There are some who ought to be better off, perhaps, who are badly off because they do not understand how to be saving or thrifty, or how to go about business, or how to make things pay, or who are unfortunate—suffering many losses through, it may be, mismanagement or carelessness, or who lack spirit or pluck or ambition, or are even positively lazy. Be this as it may, the children or perhaps the mothers are poorly clad for the winter, or too untidy to attend church or Sunday School. The children really suffer through no fault of theirs and it is an act of mercy to help them, and here my action is criticized; it is said either to encourage the laziness of the father or the thriftlessness and infrugality and extravagance of the mother, as the case may be.

4 There is one other thing I take into consideration in the distribution of clothing. I consider the extreme sensibility of the two or three who think themselves overlooked or who should suppose partiality was shown—a little gift will sometimes prevent much trouble, and so prove it to be in the interests of the church, with which intention these things are sent, but I must most emphatically deny the imputation of either bribery or proselytising.

Lastly, Mr. Editor, apologizing for trespassing so much upon your space, I feel in duty bound to add that many of our worthy countrymen, here in our much famed and notorious back-country, are falling into exactly the same error, and going just as far astray, as they suppose my brother clergy of the front to be doing, for knowing just as little about the clergy as they credit them with knowing about this country, they judge them just as wrongly. Let me beg them to get personally acquainted with them and to know them better. Whether it is doing a wrong and dishonor to the country or no, at least let those who send clothing have the honor of sending them with the kindest and best of intentions and not be sneered at for sending rags, for even rags, if sent, are mended up and found most serviceable by some; and if the country is so prosperous, and people so well off, why do they not do more for their God and His Church, and save His and their ministers from having so often to look outside instead of getting liberal support nearer home, and causing people at a distance to think the people too badly off to shoulder their own burdens. I do not think I have misrepresented this country in my appeals for aid in Toronto or elsewhere with all the help we have had, we still need some $200, or $100 and I am quite satisfied we cannot raise it here.

THE SALVATION ARMY SPECIAL SERVICES

A Large Number of New Converts Being Enrolled

Interesting Meetings and Much Interest Being Shown

The Revival Will Conclude On Thursday Evening Next

Very special revival services are in operation in the barracks, conducted by Brigadier Pugmire, Staff Capt. Manton and Capt. Urquhart. Up to the present forty have gone forward, seeking pardon and purity. Although Sunday was a very stormy day, yet hundreds of people attended the services and there were fifteen seekers.

A special feature of the revival services is the singing of Brigadier Pugmire and Staff Capt. Manton, while Capt. Urquhart excels on the violin. Services will be held as follows: Brigadier Pugmire's travels and work.

BOARD OF WORKS.

Ald. Clinkscale presented the report of the Board of Works as follows:

Your Fire, Water and Light Committee beg leave to report as follows:

1. That the members of the Fire Brigade, including the Chief of the Brigade, be given an increase of salary of $25 a year each, to date from January 1st, 1902.

2. That Ald. Batten and McGregor be authorised to sell the scrap and second hand material about the town buildings that are not required.

3. That the chairman of this Committee be authorized to purchase 300 feet of fire hose, rubber boots for the members of the fire brigade and such rubber coats as are required for the brigade, and also a set of single harness, a cart and harness required for cart, and a pair of horse blankets.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The report was adopted as read.

Ald. Roger introduced a by-law to grant $200 to the Children's Aid Society of the Town and County of Peterborough. The by-law received its several readings and was passed.

Ald. Best moved, seconded by Ald. Corkery,—That the Mayor sign and seal a petition to the Lieut. Governor and a petition to the Legislative Assembly, asking for changes in the Town's private bill now before the Legislature, the petitions to be in the form now submitted to the Council.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

CHARGE WAS DISMISSED

County Hotel Keeper Charged with Breaking Liquor Law

Charles Armstrong, a hotel keeper at Julians Landing, appeared before County Magistrate Edmison on Friday, charged with selling liquor on Sunday, Jan 5th. The charge was laid by License Inspector Crowe. Defendant pleaded not guilty, and as the evidence failed to establish any violation of the law, the charge was dismissed.

BOY BUILDING

That is the Mission of Good Food

There is an abundance of proof that food can be selected that will build up a brain as well as body.

One case is that of a boy and the description is given by his mother. She says, "This particular son has always had a delicate stomach, and when he was an infant had cholera infantum two or three seasons in succession; he was exceedingly hard to raise, and was not well enough to go to school when he became old enough."

The mother says, "Finally we concluded to put him on Grape-Nuts exclusively and see what the food would do for him, and to our great astonishment our boy improved daily. He is now hearty and getting along in school unusually well. He still depends upon Grape-Nuts for a goodly share of his diet.

Whenever children are hungry at bed-time it is always safe to let them eat Grape-Nuts and let them go to bed. I came to know of the value of Grape-Nuts by using it myself, and found that I was unusually well nourished and gained rapidly in strength.

Please do not use my name. By the way, we abandoned coffee in our family several years ago and have always had Postum since. Would as soon have the flour barrel empty as be out of Postum." Name can be given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

UNCLE SAM'S TROUBLE OVER THE PHILIPPINES

Angry Debate in the United States Senate Over the Grave Problem

WILL THE ISLANDERS BE A FREE PEOPLE?

Many Senators Believe that the United States Should Withdraw from the Islands Altogether—It is a Bad Job.

Washington, Feb 4—The debate in the Senate, which took on a very angry tone yesterday, confirms President Schurman's reminder that "the American people have not yet passed upon the question of a final Philippine policy." The allegation is true in law and in fact.

The Senate which ratified the treaty that ceded these islands to us expressly declared that in so doing "it is not intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the United States"—

But it is the intention of the United States to establish in said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands, to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

This reserved right and freedom of our Government was recognized and confirmed by the Supreme Court in its decision on December 2. The third broad principle of this decision was thus succinctly stated:

III.—The islands acquired from Spain by the Treaty of Paris are "property of the United States" in the strict sense in which that term is used in the Constitution, and this being the case Congress can dispose of these islands in any way which it may believe to be conductive to the highest interests alike of the people of the United States and of these islands.

In deciding this question are not the American people likely to be influenced in the end by these fundamental principles of our republican system?—

1.—Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

2.—Taxation without representation is tyranny.

Or if these once sacred principles are now regarded as "merely academic," may not these facts influence the decision?—

1.—Gen. Chaffee in a recent letter said: "I am of the opinion that at least 30,000 soldiers will be required for a much longer time than five years—perhaps for a quarter of a century."

2.—The islands are now costing us $75,000,000 a year, and their "commercial advantages" are represented by a 10 per cent. possible profit on $2,855,685 imported from this country last year, or the magnificent sum of $285,568!

In view of this freedom of choice, of the difficulties and cost of subjugation and forcible rule and of the petty profits of the enterprise, will not our people try to realize this "high aim" of President Roosevelt, as stated in his message: "We hope to do for them what has never before been done for any people in the tropics—to make them fit for self-government after the fashion of the really free nations?"

A FIGHT FOR LIFE

Thrilling Experience of Ald. Batten and Mr. Isaac Richardson.

On Sunday last Alderman Batten and Mr. Isaac Richardson left for Hiawatha, where Ald. Batten conducted service in the Methodist church. They started for home about 2.30 o'clock, and were overtaken by the storm. As the violence of the wind increased the road became more difficult, until finally the horse fell and was unable to rise. The storm was so great that nothing could be seen, while the cold was intense. With great difficulty the horse was again put on his feet, and the slow, weary journey resumed. When hope had well nigh deserted the weary travellers, the glimmer of a light was seen through the blinding storm, and they hurried towards it. They found themselves at Mrs. Hazlitt's, in Otonabee, about six miles from town, where they remained for the night.

Next day about two o'clock Mr. Hazlitt hitched up a team to a pair of bobsleighs, and broke the road to a distance of about half way to town, when he left the travellers. Their experience for the remainder of the journey was almost as bad as that of Sunday. They tried to make the locks bridge, but were unable to get through a huge drift at Downer's Corners. Arriving at the suburbs of Ashburnham they found the road again blocked, and tried to get in by St. Joseph's Hospital, but were forced to return to the original route, and break through the drift. They arrived in town about three o'clock Monday.

Mr. Richardson told the Times that the drifts were from five to six feet deep.

A SPLENDID INVESTMENT

An Oil Strike That is Sure to be a Big Money Maker.

We call the attention of capitalists and investors to the advertisement elsewhere of the North American Oil and Refining Company, which appears in this issue.

This stock should meet with ready sale, as it is likely to prove a bonanza to investors. Oil has been struck very close to the company's property, and it is known that the same oil channels run through it. The stock being disposed of is treasury stock, and not personal stock.

The company is controlled by men of undoubted honor and probity, being: Hon. E. A. Sunderlin, Colorado Springs; J. H. Parker, Vice-President and General Manager, who is a man of broad experience in the oil business, having passed upon 297 wells, and out of that number only had three failures; Mr. Geo. Cockburn, banker, President of a number of mining companies and Sec.-Treas. of the Boulder Oil Co., the stock of which is worth four times par price.

The latter fact shows what money there is in oil. A man, for instance, who invested $100 in the Boulder Company a short time ago can get $400 for his stock. There is every hope that the North American will be even more successful.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. G. A. Cockburn, Colorado Springs, Col., or to F. W. Nelson, broker, Water street, Peterborough.

GERMANS ARE BLIND TO BRITISH VIEWS

No Publisher Can be Induced to Touch Conan Doyle's Defence--A Colonial Appeal to Germans--Colonel Picquart Scores

London, Feb. 4.—Conan Doyle writes The Times that funds have been liberally subscribed to circulate his book, giving the English side of the Boer war. He says it is significant that no practical help has been offered by Germans living in England. In Germany the feeling is so pronounced that Doyle has not been able to find a German firm with courage enough to publish his statement of the British side of the war, with all costs guaranteed. American and Canadian leaders of public opinion are to receive free copies of Doyle's book.

A Colonial Appeal to Germans in Cape Colony who Enjoy British Rule

London, Feb. 4.—The correspondent of the London Times at Cape Colony says the Mayor of that city, is communicating with mayors throughout the Colony, and endeavouring to arrange public meetings in repudiation of continental slanders upon the British army. The Cape Argus calls upon Germans in South Africa who enjoy every advantage from British rule, and know how false their countrymen's statements are, to make a united declaration on this subject, which can be published.

Great Britain will not Negotiate with Kruger and Leyds

London, Feb. 4.—The Vienna correspondent of The Times, quoting a Hague authority, says the British Minister to Holland has informed the Dutch Government that Great Britain will not negotiate with Kruger and Leyds, but with Boer generals in the field only.

Miss Alice Roosevelt and the Coronation—Cannot be Recognized

London, Feb. 4.—The European edition of the New York Herald says that an official place cannot be found for Miss Alice Roosevelt at the coronation, although an arrangement has been come to whereby the dignity of the United States shall not suffer by any slight upon the President's daughter. As female envoy, she cannot be recognized. If Miss Roosevelt is in London during the coronation she will be afforded every opportunity of witnessing the ceremonies, but cannot take part in them.

Col. Picquart has Obtained Judgment Restoring his Papers

London, Feb. 4.—A despatch to The Times from Paris, says Colonel Picquart has obtained judgement restoring his papers, seized at the time of the Dreyfus prosecution.

DECLARATION OF OLFICE

Taken by Mayor Denne and Messrs Hill and Matthews

The newly elected water commissioners and Mayor Denne met at the Town Clerk's office yesterday and took the necessary declaration of office for water commissioners. The oath was administered by Mr. Adam Hall, Justice of the Peace in the presence of Mr. E. B. D. Hall, Town Solicitor and Town Clerk Armstrong.

After the declaration of officers had been taken the commissioners held a short meeting at which Mr. T. F. Matthews was elected chairman. The commissioners will meet every Monday afternoon at four o'clock.

With these men at the head of the business we can safely count on a successful years' business. The commissioners have all been deeply interested in business for many years and have made a success of it, and we are very sure they will successfully carry out their part in the new undertaking of the town.

LETTER FROM TOM MILLER

Mrs. F. W. Miller Receives a Letter from Her Son in South Africa

Mrs. F. W. Miller of town received the following letter on Monday from her son, Tom, who is with his regiment in South Africa.

Diepsfontein, Dec. 29th, 1901.

Dear Mother, — We had a very good Christmas this year, with plenty of plum pudding, oranges, roast beef, cigarettes, tobacco, etc.

I believe we have to go home for the coronation, which takes place in June, so they will have to get us out of this very soon. My chum, T. L. Davis, who comes from London, Ont., has been discharged as having bad teeth. Two of our members died on Saturday last and we buried them on Sunday.

They say that we are going down to the Colony next month, down near Cape Town to do garrison duty. I only hope that we are, so that we can get out of this place.

Well, dear mother, I don't know of any more to say this time, so hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, with love to all, your loving son.

JAPAN TO DEVELOP CHINA

River, Railway and Mining Industries Will Be Controlled at Tokio.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 5 — Tokio's Chamber of Commerce announces a new policy toward China which that body, assisted by the Japanese Government, will steadily pursue. It involves the immediate development of trade on Chinese rivers and inland waters under Japanese auspices and the establishment of a Chinese-Japanese bank, with branches at all Chinese commercial centres. The most important part of the programme comprises a thorough investigation under the authority of the Japanese Government of the Chinese mineral and industrial resources. Experts are to be sent through China to examine into all questions relating to railways, mines, manufactures and trade.

A Japanese syndicate has concluded arrangements with Director General Sheng of the Chinese railways for working the coal mines owned by Sheng in Hupeh.

WHY BRITAIN'S ANGER AROSE OVER GERMANY

A Hostile and Lying Press Responsible for the Whole Trouble

ABUSE OF ENGLAND DENOUCED

Examples of the Least Offensive of the Attacks—Vulgarity of the Previous Paris Publications on the Boer War Fully Equalled—Prominent Men of Germany Concerned in Some of the Worst Cases

London, Feb. 5—"We describe elsewhere, as plainly as regard for the common decencies of life will allow us to do, the nature of the filth with which the minds of all classes in Germany have been deliberately poisoned against us since the beginning of the war."

The foregoing is an extract from a leading article in the Times upon Mr. Chamberlain's "What I have said, I have said" speech in answer to Count von Bulow's speech in the Reichstag.:

"The Literature of German Anglophobia," as the Times styles its articles on the subject, has had a similarly irritating effect on the English people as the notorious illustrated articles which were published in Paris in the first year of the South African war, then the German illustrated papers vied with those of France, particularly in the way of holding up to ridicule the figure of the late Queen Victoria; but German papers do not come much in the way of English people, and it was not till much later that the general public here realized the facts of the German anti-British newspaper campaign.

The following are some of the examples of this kind of "literature" which the Times quotes, passing over the grosser ones in its regard "for the common decencies of life."

The first is from a publication called "The Boer War." The list of contributors, which is given in full, includes a number of men of good social position and of undeniable eminence in the literature and art of Germany.

British soldiers are represented robbing the dead, Mr. Chamberlain's "state coach"—a cart laden with skeletons—these are the mere "hors d'oeuvre" of the meal they set before the German public. The (then) Prince of Wales lying dead drunk in his bedroom "receiving the news of Cronje's surrender," Queen Victoria as the fat woman in a fair being handled in an indescribable fashion by President Kruger, represent stronger meat. But the "plat de resistance" is a cartoon entitled "Hero Worship." The (then) Princess of Wales, with Queen Victoria and the Prince of Wales standing beyond her, and with the young Princesses by her side, is decorating a youthful British soldier. The legend underneath this picture is, textually, "English Princess decorating the youngest soldier in the British army with the Victoria Cross because, although he is only 12 years old, he has already outraged (vergwaltigt) eight Boer women. And this obscenity is launched into the world under the public imprimatur not of the scavengers of German art and literature, but of men of distinction and repute, is offered for sale in respectable shops, is eagerly bought by the public, lies about on fashionable drawing-room tables.

No. 32 of Simplicissimus, 1899, a comic paper of considerable artistic merit published in Munich and enjoying a large circulation throughout Germany, represented the Queen as a drunken old market woman, with a whiskey bottle by her side, vainly trying to pluck an ostrich. A few weeks later the same paper had an outrageous picture of the then Prince of Wales staying in England "to comfort the widows," instead of going to South Africa. So great was the popularity which this style of caricature received that at the end of 1899 the cartoons were reproduced by the thousand as illustrated postcards for Christmas and New Year's greetings, and, out of a collection of sixty German post cards dedicated to the vilification of this country which we have before us, no fewer than ten consist of disgusting representations of Queen Victoria borrowed from comic papers of every description.

One of the most shameless offenders is the Berlin Kladderadatsch, a comic paper which claims to occupy in Germany the same position, and certainly enjoys the same popularity, as Punch does over here. On its front page it publishes every week a poem of which the literary form is invariably polished and sometimes brilliant. In at least one out of every three numbers during the last two years these rhymes have been devoted to the most rabid invective against England. Lord Roberts, for instance, is denounced as "the Hyena of the Transvaal," Lord Kitchener point blank as a murderer; King Edward is made (twice in the month of November last) the subject of almost blasphemous imprecations. In fact, this paper started its campaign against King Edward within a fortnight of Queen Victoria's death—in its number of Feb. 3, 1901—with a grossly insulting poem on his accession. Nor are the cartoons less outrageous than the verses. In the same month of November the King is represented in Kladderadatsch, now as a monkey and again praying in his closet—a monstrous parody of the well-known scene in Hamlet.

Simplicissimus, No. 32, of October last represents the King dancing on the mutilated bodies of Boer women and children:

"The blood spurts so, it may stain my crown." In another number an old Boer Commandant exclaims: "Well, now that there are only women and children left to fight I wonder King Edward does not himself take over the command-in-chief." Mr. Chamberlain as the Devil, Lord Kitchener as the Butcher, holding up in either hand a Boer head streaming with blood, or as a vulture sitting on the cross-tree of a gallows, British soldiers ravishing women and plundering the dead, two English gentlemen congratulating themselves that "in England one can always find fellows at five shillings a day to fight for the nation's honor, and no gentleman need therefore do such dirty work himself."

These examples will be sufficient to give some idea of the kind of thing that has undoubtedly raised a great feeling of bitterness against Germany in the minds of many Englishmen.

HOW ABOUT THE PHILIPPINES?

Jeering American Journal Have a Lot to Say about Boer War

Chicago, Feb 5 The Tribune publishes an article on the Boer war which is untruthful and unfair. It is not true that Britain was whipped in pitched battles with the Boers. Any reverse that she did get was because she was fighting in the open, while the enemy rained bullets like hail on the brave British. One might well ask, How about the Philippines, where the natives are, in most cases, armed with spears? The following is the article referred to:

One thing may very safely be said of the war in South Africa, and that is that both parties to it are very heartily sick of it. The Boers, in fact, must be very close to the point of exhaustion. And, while Great Britain could keep it up indefinitely at the present rate of expenditure of men and money and of progress, Englishmen must be very ready to make peace on reasonable terms. The honor and glory of the war are necessarily all with the Boers. Several English opponents of the war, at the beginning of it warned their countrymen that it was a war "that could have no triumphs." As Mr. Morley put it, quoting Swift, ten armed men are an overmatch for one man in his shirt. For a great empire to belabor what Lord Salisbury the other day described as a "wretched little population," is not, at best, an operation glorious for the great empire, however necessary it may be. But that the wretched little population should defeat the great empire in pitched battles and should successfully defy it and stand it off for two years and a half could not have been expected by any intelligent Englishman or by any intelligent Boer. To be fighting for all this time without decisive successes and with a numerical superiority of twenty to one, and to have your unsuccessful attempts to end the business jeered by your neighbors as the impotence of a big bully—this is a condition of things calculated to disgust any nation with the war that has brought it about.

A Lake Captain's Experience

Capt. McDonald, one of Kingston's most prominent mariners, writes: "For years I have battled with the agonies of Bronchitic Asthma, oftentimes so bad that I could not sleep for nights at a time. I spent hundreds of dollars on doctors and quacks without getting relief, but one dollar's worth of Catarrhozone completely cured me." The above testimonial was given two years ago, and as the Captain lately stated that he was quite free from Bronchitis, it proves Catarrhozone a veritable specific. Catarrhozone two months' treatment, guaranteed to cure bronchitis, price $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston.

SUDDEN DEATH AT KEENE

Rev. Dr. Andrews Died Suddenly Yesterday from Apoplexy

The sad news reached town yesterday of the death of Rev. Francis Andrews, D.D., the beloved pastor of the Keene Presbyterian Church.

He had risen as usual, dressed himself and lighted the fire, when he was suddenly stricken with apoplexy. His daughter heard him fall and hastened to the room where she found her father unconscious. Medical aid was summoned but nothing could be done, and he passed away at seven o'clock without regaining consciousness. It was a sudden and tragic end to a long and active life of faithful Christian ministry and upright life and conduct, and it has spread a heavy gloom over the village and country where Rev. Dr. Andrews was known by every man woman and child, and where he was respected and beloved by all. The people of his own congregation where he has labored for over fifty years were particularly attached to him, and his death coming so suddenly will be a great shock. On Sunday last he was in his pulpit as usual preaching at Keene in the morning, and at Westwood in the afternoon. The drive over the heavy roads and in the storm was more, perhaps, than a man of his years should have undertaken, but he never allowed anything to interfere with his appointments. On Monday he did not feel very well and remained in the house, although his illness did not appear to be of a serious nature. Yesterday morning he rose, as stated, at the usual hour and proceeded about his usual duties when he was suddenly called to his eternal home.

Keene will ever keep green the memory of the veteran pastor who for over fifty years, labored zealously and continuously among them and who made a record that is unique in the history of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Long pastorates are not common in this country and for a pastor to remain in one charge, without relief or assistant, for over half a century stands out as remarkable and extraordinary. But it tells also of his fidelity to his work and his people, of the Christian spirit and the unblemished life that must have characterized the man, for, during all these years his work has prospered, has continued in harmony, bound together in the good work and always respecting and loving their pastor.

On Jan. 11th, 1901, Rev. Dr. Andrews celebrated his jubilee, his fiftieth anniversary, and his congregation assisted by the other congregations in the in the village united to make the commemoration memorable. A large number of ministers from surrounding congregations and many from a distance gathered together to offer their congratulations to the veteran pastor.

The reverend gentleman was then seventy-seven years of age and was vigorous in mind and body and most happy in his utterances. On Sunday last he preached the sermon that was to commemorate his fifty one years as pastor of the church taking as his subject—"Therefore, let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober." No more suitable words could have been chosen for the occasion and also what proved to be his last sermon. The sudden summons which was to come to him, was not to be heard on Sunday, but now that it has come, this most suitable text, will not be forgotten by his people.

Deceased was born at Port Glenone, County of Antrim, Ireland; in 1824, and studied in Belfast and Edinburgh. When a young man he came to this country and in August 1850 was ordained. On January 12th 1851 he was ordained as pastor of Keene Church, and for over fifty years has continued to labor there. Deceased married late in life, but his wife pre-deceased him some years ago. One daughter, Miss Mary, and two sons, James and William, both residing in Toronto, are left to mourn his death.

The funeral arrangements will be completed on Thursday.

A BLASPHEMOUS INSULT TO MEMORY OF QUEEN

Fashionable Congregation Scandalized by This Statement of Anti-Ritualists

SALISBURY WILL RETIRE AT CONCLUSION OF WAR

St. James Gazette Says it Has the Highest Authority for Making the Announcement—Will Remain Until End of War

London, Feb. 4.—It is now said that the retirement of Lord Salisbury from office will be coincident with the end of the South African War. The St. James' Gazette this afternoon claims to have the highest authority for saying:

"The Premier has fixed the restoration of peace in South Africa as the appropriate moment to resign office. If the war is ended Lord Salisbury will retire at the conclusion of the present Parliamentary session, but it is his present intention to retain his post until peace is accomplished."

London, Feb. 4.—The large and fashionable congregation which attended a memorial service, officially described as a "requiem for the repose of the soul of our Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria," at St. Matthew's Church, Westminster, this morning, was greatly scandalized by the conduct of a number of anti-ritualists, who immediately after the service was concluded, stood up in the church and declared "the service was a blasphemous insult to Queen Victoria's memory." "This is not God's house," said one objector, "this is a joss house."

MAN'S LIFE 150 YEARS

Boston Doctor Claims Priority in Important Medical Discovery.

Boston, Mass., Feb. 5—Dr. Augustin Thompson, of this city, claims that eleven years ago he discovered Prof. Jacques Loeb's theory as to the source of life energy and that human life may be prolonged to the age of 150 years or more by transmitting into the body a force which, like food, is sustaining.

Dr. Thompson claims that he has gone further than Professor Loeb, in that for several months he had actually practised upon that theory with success. In an interview last night the doctor said:

"Professor Archer, New York's famous chemist, declares it the most wonderful thing in the world. As for myself, I declare positively I can take a man whose nerve centre is weakened and restore him to health. I have done it for hundreds. I did it for myself.

"Now, Professor Loeb claims that electricity is life. I assert that it is not. Electricity is only the physical force of the universe.

"Let one stop eating food and all the electricity existing will not prolong his life."

Dr. Thompson declares the with the aid of an imperceptible current of electricity he transmits to the human body the exact results of pure food upon a perfect digestion, which he claims are a sure cure for all ills of mankind.

Pleuritic Pains a Danger Signal

Prompt treatment is essential. Bathe the region of pain immediately with Polson's Nerviline and quickly bind on a hot bandage sprinkled with Nerviline. Never known to fail. Cures almost instantly. QUEEN MAY GET DIVORCE.

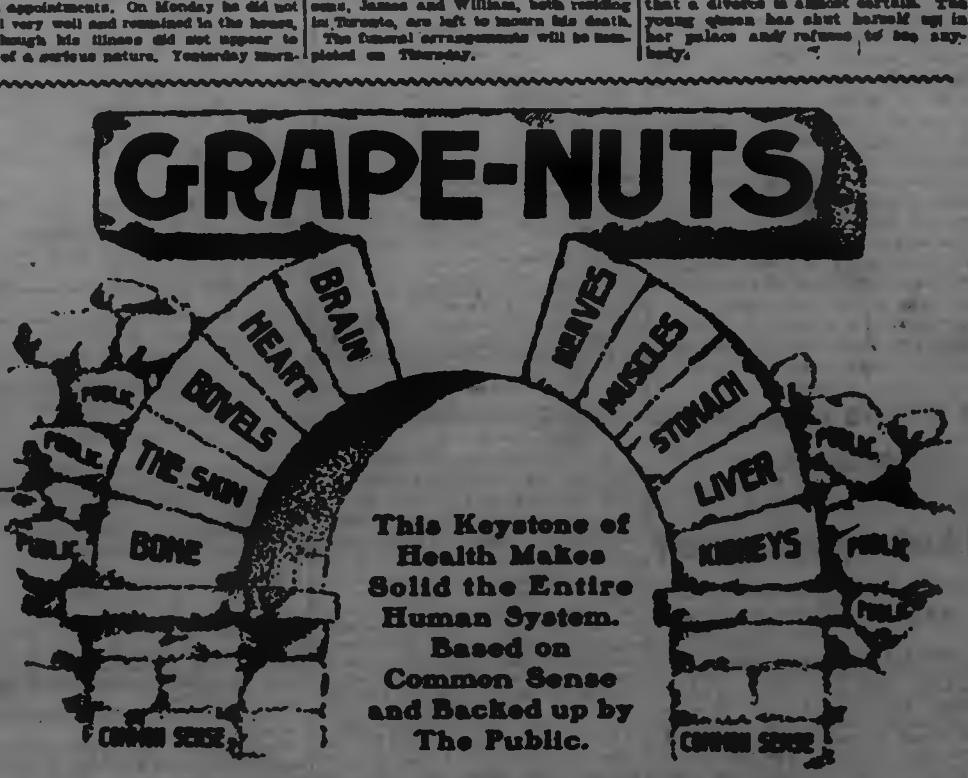
Wilhelmina's Husband Goes to Germany and Divorce Seems Inevitable.

The Hague, Feb. 4—Prince Henry, consort of Queen Wilhelmina, has gone to Germany on an indefinite visit, and court and public are convinced that a divorce is almost certain. The young queen has shut herself up in her palace and refuses to see anybody.



This Keystone of Health Makes Solid the Entire Human System. Based on Common Sense and Backed up by The Public.

A SCIENTIFIC BREAKFAST.

Rightly selected food will cure more than half the diseases. Try a scientific and healthy breakfast:—Fruit of some kind, preferably cooked; a dish of Grape-Nuts, with cream; two soft-boiled eggs. Put two eggs in a tin pint cup of boiling water, cover and set off for nine minutes. Whites will then be the consistency of cream and most easily digested. One slice of bread with butter; cup of Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

On that breakfast you can work like a horse and be perfectly nourished until noon. Your nervous troubles, your heart palpitation, stomach and bowel troubles, kidney complaints and various other disorders will gradually disappear and firm, solid health will set in.

Why? You have probably been living on poorly selected food; that is, food that does not contain the required elements the body needs. That sort of food, and coffee, is the direct or indirect cause of more than half the ills the human body acquires.

Grape-Nuts is a perfectly cooked food and both that and the Postum Food Coffee contain fine microscopic particles of phosphate of potash obtained in a natural way from the grains of the field and by scientific food experts incorporated into food and drink. That element joins with the albumen in food to make gray matter, which is the filling of the brain cells and the nerve centres all over the human body.

A man or woman thus fed is scientifically fed and rapidly grows in vigor and vitality, and becomes capable of conducting successfully the affairs of life. To produce a perfect body and a money making brain, the body must have the right kind of food and the expert food specialist knows how to make it. That is Grape-Nuts and Postum Cereal Food Coffee, produced at the pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

MUNICIPAL NOTES

(W. A. Douglas, A. J. Hedge, A. C. Thompson, F. S. Watson and W. S. Thompson, representing the Ontario Single Tax Association, asked the Premier a few days ago:

1. That each municipality be allowed the option of removing taxation from the products of industry.

2. That the settlers in the new districts be accorded the same right as the settlers in Manitoba, viz., no tax on improvements.

3. That the discrimination in favor of two acres, five acres or ten acres be abolished.

The Premier told them that a bill would soon be brought down, dealing with the whole question of assessment.

Mr. Preston, M. P. P. for South Grant, introduced a measure into the Legislature, which it is probable the Government will adopt, entitled A Conciliation and Arbitration Act. It provides that on the request of the Mayor or other head of a municipality where a strike or lockout is threatened, the secretary of the Labor Bureau, (Mr. Glockling) shall proceed to such municipality and use his best endeavors with all parties concerned to avert such strike or lock-out.

A complaint has reached The Times that competition should be established in the matter of supplying hay, straw and oats to the town stables. We are sure the Council will do so if they are of opinion that such a change will effect a saving. The Times notices that several of the smaller cities and towns have adopted the contract plan for supplying fodder.

MUNICIPAL HOUSES OF REFUGE

[Bow]manville News are applicable to all municipalities not having houses of refuge for the destitute:—Township Councils in these United Counties will again be directly taxed with the care and maintenance of their own poor; recent provincial legislation very rightly declaring that the county gaol is not a suitable home, morally or otherwise, for those whose only crime is that they are helpless and poor. The town of Bowmanville has established a home for the aged and it is claimed to be not only the most economical but in every sense the most satisfactory way in which these people can be cared for. What Bowmanville has done other places can do. No large pretentious building is required, merely a home, comfortable, warm and clean, with some kindly person in charge.

A Word To Wives, Mothers And Daughters.

Paine's Celery Compound

IS THE GREAT HOME PHYSICIAN AND BUILDER OF HEALTH.

To-day, the great popular home medicine for women of every age, is Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great health and strength giver for wives, mothers and daughters. When you have any of numberless female complaints and ills of your sex, Paine's Celery Compound will give you a new and happy life.

Paine's Celery Compound is an invaluable medicine for young girls when their special womanly functions are disturbed or irregular. It imparts strength to every organ, gives rosy cheeks, buoyancy of spirits, clear, bright eyes and general good health.

The many strong and grateful letters of praise sent in by thankful women restored by Paine's Celery Compound to health and vigor, amply prove all that is claimed for Dr. Phelps' wonderful prescription.

Beware of the "something just as good," offered by some dealers and druggists; see that the name PAINE'S is on each wrapper and bottle. Paine's Celery Compound is the kind that makes sick people well.

TO CUT DOWN IRISH SEATS IN COMMONS

The New Redistribution Bill Will Alter Things

IRISH REPRESENTATION REDUCED

There Will Be About Seventy Irish Members Hereafter—A New Condition of Things.

London, Feb. 4—The new redistribution bill which the government are preparing to introduce, is briefly outlined. It will cut off about one-third of the Irish representation in the House of Commons.

The bill will equalize representation in the House of Commons in such a way that there will be fewer Irish Nationalists to obstruct the Conservative Government.

There is a Ministerialist or Conservative majority of 134 in the House now, yet the 82 Irish Nationalists have been able to give the Cabinet much trouble.

The following table gives the population in 1901 and the present representation in the House of Commons of the three divisions of the United Kingdom:

	Pop.	Mem.
England and Wales	32,525,000	495
Scotland	4,472,000	72
Ireland	4,456,000	103

The Conservatives claim that the Irish representation is out of proportion to population.

The Irish Nationalists assert that in the Bond of Union England guaranteed to Ireland a representation at least as large as it is now.

QUEEN MAY GET DIVORCE.

Wilhelmina's Husband Goes to Germany and Reserves Some Inevitables.

The Hague, Feb. 4—Prince Henry, consort of Queen Wilhelmina, has gone to Germany on an indefinite visit, and court and public are convinced that a divorce is almost certain. The young queen has shut herself up in her palace and refuses to see anybody.

Rumors of renewed troubles between the royal couple have been circulating for some time, and have been strengthened by the departure of the prince for Mecklenburg, his ancestral home.

It is known that Prince Henry bitterly resents the subordinate position into which he has been forced by his marriage and by the policy of the court.

It is said that the Dowager Queen Emma has sought to bring the Queen and the Prince into harmony, but that all her efforts have been vain.

CARTER CARRIED A GUN

But not with Evil Intentions—Had Been Drinking Heavy

Felix Cartin, who claims Pembroke as his home, was arrested on Saturday. Some time ago he deserted from the U. S. army and has been working for a farmer near here. He came to town on Saturday and got drunk and hence his trouble. On being examined at the Police Station, a very dangerous looking revolver was found on his person. He was up before the Magistrate yesterday and after receiving a very sound lecture was dismissed. Cartin said it was customary to carry a revolver in the States and had done so here but did not intend to harm any person. The revolver was kept by the police and will be destroyed.

Are You Deaf?

All deafness is not curable, but doctors state that ninety per cent. of impaired hearing is due to inflammation of the Eustachian tubes, and can be treated with certainty of success by Catarrhozone, which gives instant relief to catarrh in any part of the system. Catarrhozone is extremely pleasant to use, and sufferers from any form of deafness are advised to use it. Thousands of cases are on record where Catarrhozone has perfectly restored lost hearing, and what it has done for others it can do for you. Procure Catarrhozone from your druggist. AN EXCITING EXPERIENCE.

"I had an experience the other day that just about beats anything that ever happened to me," said a well known citizen to a Times man. "I was walking along Stewart street when a woman ran from one of the houses, screaming at the top of her lungs. It was about three o'clock in the afternoon, broad daylight. She saw me and began to beckon frantically. I broke into a run, and when I reached her I asked what was the matter. She was as white as a ghost and shaking like a leaf. 'It's in the kitchen! It's in the kitchen!' she cried, and that was all the satisfaction I could get out of her. She had left the front door open and I went in. She followed close behind me, and from her actions I thought some crime had been committed. I pulled myself together before I entered the kitchen, but there didn't seem to be anything wrong. 'Now, madam,' I said, 'perhaps you will be kind enough to tell me what you are creating all this fuss about.' She pointed to the coal scuttle and gasped, 'It's in there!' I looked, and what do you suppose it was? A mouse! The scuttle was nearly empty and there were some bread crumbs in the bottom. The mouse had evidently jumped in after the crumbs, and then couldn't climb the sides again. I picked it out by the tail and gave it a fling on the floor. That woman was just as profuse in her thanks as though I had saved her life."

Curious Bits of News.

That the German authorities in Samoa are determined to thoroughly Germanize that country is shown by the fact that the English missionaries in the islands have now been ordered to instruct their pupils and adherents in the Teuton tongue. American and Chilian dollars, as well as British coins, are also to make way for German money, and apparently Samoa will presently become as purely a German colony as New Caledonia is French.

"The latest in 'yells,'" says the Kansas City "Journal," "is that of the convicts on their way from the jail in the county in which they were sentenced to the penitentiary. A gang of fifteen of them from Buchanan County, the sheriff's 'guests' on a special car, gave vent to this yell at each railway station they passed between St. Joseph and Jefferson City a few days ago: 'Two years—five years—we will stay; didn't like St. Joe anyway!'"

The subject of a tunnel connecting Ireland and Scotland has been brought before the British Government, and the project will be pushed if the requisite financial support can be obtained. The estimated cost is $50,000,000. The route provisionally selected is from Stranraer in Scotland to Belfast in Ireland. The total distance is 51 1-3 miles, of which 34 1-2 miles would be tunnel, and 26 miles of the tunnel would be under the sea, along a line where the maximum depth is 480 feet. Electric motors would be used to drive the trains at an average speed of 60 to 70 miles per hour.

Susie E. Jenkins, twenty years old, of Philadelphia, says; "I have seen nearly all the funny shows that have come to Philadelphia in recent years, and not one of them could make me laugh. My mother has often tried to make me laugh by tickling me, but even that won't work. Ever since I can remember people have been telling me funny stories and cutting up all sorts of capers in the hope that I could be induced to smile; but all their efforts have been in vain. No; I have never consulted a doctor about it, for I have always enjoyed perfect health. I want to exhibit myself in public, and offer a prize to anyone who can make me laugh. It must be a queer sensation."

It has been recently asserted that mosquitoes are strongly attracted by certain sounds. This is confirmed by Sir Hiram Maxim, who in a letter to the London "Times" states that one of the electric lamps which he put up at Saratoga Springs, N.Y., in 1878, emitted a musical note; or rather the note proceeded from the box containing the dynamo-machine under the lamp. "One evening while examining the lamp he found that everything in the immediate vicinity was covered with small insects. They did not appear to be attempting to get into the globe, but into the box that was giving out the musical note. A close examination of these insects showed that they were all male mosquitoes. Although there were certainly two hundred times as many female mosquitoes on the ground as males, not a single female mosquito was found to have been attracted in the least by the sound."

An Uncollected Poem by Whittier.

There are hundreds of Whittier's early poems which were never placed by him in any collection of his works. They are to be found in the papers he edited and to which he contributed in the days before he consecrated all his powers to humanitarian work. They gave him a measure of literary reputation which must have gratified him at the time; but when he was baptized into the new spirit which informed all his later work he took pains to prevent the collection of the verses written in the vein of an outgrown ambition. His wish in this matter should be respected. And yet, while studying his early work, I find some poems which I fancy he would have preserved if they had not been overlooked when making his selections, writes S. T. Packard in the New York "Independent." Among these is this paraphrase from the German, which I find in "The Liberator" of August 16, 1838:

LINES FROM THE GERMAN OF LAMITER.

Thought after thought ye thronging rise,
Like spring doves from the startled wood,
Bearing like them your sacrifice
Of music unto God!
And shall these thoughts of joy and love
Come back again no more to me—
Returning like the patriarch's dove,
Wing-weary from the eternal sea—
To bear within my longing arms
The promise-bough of kindlier skies,
Plucked from the green immortal palms
Which shade the bowers of Paradise?

Child of the sea, the mountain stream
From its dark cavern hurries on,
Ceaseless by night and morning's beam,
By evening's star and noontide's sun—
Until at last it sinks to rest
O'erwearied in the waiting sea,
And moans upon its mother's breast—
So turns my soul to Thee.

Breaking it Gently.

"What do you want, little boy?"

"Is this where Mr. Upjohn lives, ma'am?"

"Yes."

"The Mr. Upjohn that runs the bank?"

"He is an officer in the bank."

"The Mr. Upjohn that went down town on a trolley car this morning?"

"I presume he went on a trolley car. What—"

"Is he the Mr. Upjohn that was in that horrible street car accident?"

"I haven't heard of his being in any street car accident."

"Didn't you hear 'at h'd sprained his ankle jumpin' out o' the car when the train run into it?"

"No, my little boy, you frighten me. What has—"

"Didn't you hear how he run into a drug store for a piece o' court-plaster to stick on a little cut he'd got over the eye?"

"Not at all. For mercy's sake—"

"He isn't in, is he, ma'am?"

"No, he's—"

"Name's John U. Upjohn, isn't it?"

"Yes, that's his name."

"Then he's the same man. He won't be here for an hour or two, I guess, 'cause he's stoppin' to have one of his teeth tightened that got knocked a little bit loose when he was jumpin' out o' danger, y' know."

"Little boy, tell me the whole story. I think I can bear it now."

"Well, ma'am, he's in the hospittle with four ribs broke an' one leg's in a sling an' his nose is knocked kind o' sideways, but he's getting along all right, an' he'll be out again in about a month, an' here's a letter f'm the doctor tellin' ye all about it, ma'am."

It is not surprising that more people live to be over 100 years old in warm climates than in the higher latitudes. The German Empire, with 55,000,000 inhabitants, has 778 centenarians. France, with 40,000,000, has 213. England has only 146, and Scotland 46. Sweden has 10, Norway 23, Belgium 5, Denmark 2, Spain 401, and Switzerland none. Servia, with a population of 2,250,000, has 575 people over 100 years old. It is claimed that the oldest living person, one Bruno Cotrim, living in Rio de Janeiro, is 150 years old.

A great many women are subject to spells of dizziness, spots before the eyes, and a ringing noise in the head. These symptoms are commonly associated with liver "trouble" as the result of a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and the allied organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures through the stomach diseases seemingly remote from that organ, but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and digestive and nutritive system. Hence, cures of heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, and other organs are constantly effected by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

There is no alcohol in the "Discovery" and it is free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

Some dealers may offer a substitute as "just as good" as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. There's more profit in substitutes for the dealer. There's more health in the "Discovery" for you. Don't be imposed on.

"It is with the greatest pleasure I write you the benefit my mother has received from your 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" says Miss Carrie Johnson, of Lowesville, Amherst Co., Virginia. "She suffered untold misery with uterine disease and nervousness, and had a constant roaring and ringing noise in her head. After taking six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery she was entirely cured."

When a laxative is required use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.
